The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

MORTALITY vs. IMMORTALITY. No. 2.

O. R. FASSETT.

"Thou shalt surely die."—Gen. 2: 17.
"Ye shall not surely die."—Gen. 3: 4.

Attempts have been made to prop up the devil's lie, by making the death threatened to be a moral or spiritual death. It is maintained that as God said—"In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," and man did not die "in the day," therefore a spiritual death was threatened, and was the only death visited upon him "in the day" he did eat of the forbidden fruit.

A careful criticism of the passage will show the incorrectness of this interpretation. The marginal reading gives a better version of the passage: "In the day that thou eatest thereof dying thou shalt die." So that death is not threatened in the penalty "in the day" man ate of the tree. But this—thou shalt become a "dying" (mortal) man, till thou "die." In chapter 1: 29, "God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed." The marginal reading is—seeding seed; seeding, it shall continue to seed. How long? While seed-time and harvest are insured to the world, which is the end of time. In chapter 2: 16, the verse preceding the affirmation of God, it is written—"Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat." The marginal reading is—eating thou shalt eat; i. e., "thou mayest eat, and continue to eat. How long? As long as he lived. These passages give the sense how the above is to be understood and appropriated.

This exposition is sustained by the ablest Biblical critics. Dr. Clarke gives the following interpretation: "From that moment thou shalt become mortal, and continue in a dying state till thou die." The Greek of Symmachus renders the phrase, "Thou shalt surely die,—Thou shalt be mortal." "Likewise the Syriac, which is approved by Jerome, Grotius, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Ambrose, the venerable Bede, Drusius, Diodata, Knapp, Cohen, Ainsworth, Henry, and Dr. Payne." See Christ our Life, p. 13. The devil's negation, therefore, resolves itself into the denial of the mortality of man, and teaches the doctrine of his immortality.

If the death threatened be a moral or spiritual death, as it is affirmed by many, then I ask, Why is literal or physical death inflicted upon the human family? Is the threatened penalty exceeded in the execution, or a punishment inflicted not revealed? Where would be the justice in this? Suppose that a judge should pronounce upon the prisoner at the bar—"You shall be imprisoned for life"; and then the sheriff take him and execute him upon the gallows, and thus inflict capital punishment upon the prisoner? Where would be the authority or justice for this departure from the sentence given? Will those who claim that a moral or spiritual death is the penalty in the case of the Adamic law, tell us why literal or physical death is visited upon the human family from Adam to this day; and why "it is appointed unto men once to die"? Does the penalty exceed the judgment pronounced; or one executed not revealed? If either, show the righteousness in the act.

But again. Every one who maintains this interpretation, to be consistent, should turn Universalist, or a Restorationist, if not already one. For it is written—"As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22. If the death in Adam and the penalty of the Adamic law be a spiritual death, then the whole race, morally dead, is to be made spiritually alive, in, through, or by, Christ. And there is no possible way of avoiding the conclusion that all mankind will be saved. Furthermore, they must maintain that there can be no conversions until the Lord comes; for "they that are Christ's at his coming" are quickened and made alive. 1 Cor. 15: 21-23. This is the dilemma into which those fall who maintain the above untenable interpretation.

But there are other absurdities chargeable upon this interpretation of the penalty of the divine law. Namely: God threatens "a state in sin," "spiritual death," as a penalty for sin.. As if the divine law read—In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely be a sinner. Marvelous, revelation! Wondrous penalty! How would it look in human jurisprudence? "He that committeth theft shall be a thief." "He that committeth murder shall be a murderer." He that committeth any trespass shall be punishable with being considered, as he is, a trespasser and sinner against the law. Would such laws, made for the lawless, restrain anywhere lawlessness, if no other penalty was affixed? Is God any less wise than men? Are his laws of no restraining force because without a just penalty? And then, what is still more inconsistent is, that God who hates sin with perfect hatred fixes the sinner in sin, by a penalty which he himself has affixed to his law, and is guilty of confirming man in "a state in sin"; and also, having made the soul immortal, has determined and decreed sin to be eternal in the universe; and sinners co-eternal with his own immortal existence! Away with the unreasonable and slanderous imputation. It will not bear the sun-light of divine revelation, nor of enlightened human reason.

And those divines who give such an interpretation to God's law, to sustain the heathen dogma of the immortality of the human soul, will soon experience the shame and confusion which they justly merit. All this effort to put a false coloring upon the threatened penalty partakes of the subtlety of the old serpent, who thus takes advantage of the same phrase—"in the day." "For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Gen. 3: 5. And upon this fact, that men would not "die" "in the day" they eat of the forbidden tree, he bases his negation—"Ye shall not surely die"; and maintains, too, the doctrine of human immortality. Precisely the same line of argument is followed to this day. The devil is the commander and chief of this subtle argument.

From all this subtlety of argument, how gratifying it is to turn to this plain statement of an apostle: "Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lusts and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Jas. 1: 14, 15. The death of the transgressor is the finishing or end of sin, and its just penalty. And the wickedness of the wicked will in this manner "come to an end" ultimately, so abhorrent to God, and so destructive to the peace and holiness of the universe.

THE PENALTY OF GOD'S LAW. No. 6.

H. H. HALL.

Christ says, John 3: 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is [not in the natural immortality of the soul, but] in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John 5: 11, 12. "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath [shall have] everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from [the condemnation of] death unto life." John 5: 24. We are told the phrase "hath everlasting life" proves we have it now in possession, and that consequently we are now immortal. "But he that hath not the Son hath not life," and "shall not see life." How is it in this case; where is the immortality here? If it proves natural immortality in the one case, why not in the other, if all are immortal? But instead of proving that the wicked are now immortal, the language "shall not see life" proves that they never will be. But do we not know that eternal life is a gift; and that immortality is bestowed only on the righteous, and at the last trump? "And I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead [in Christ] shall be raised incorruptible, and we [christians] shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." John 10: 28; 1 Cor. 15: 52, 53. Why put on immortality, if we already possess it? We are answered that it is the mortal body that puts it on; and we reply in the language of Job (4: 17) that it is "mortal man" that puts it on.

If it still be insisted the expression "hath everlasting life" is proof of natural immortality in man, we then ask the reader to consider the following passages, as specimens of what may be found in the Bible on the tenses. Ps. 9: 5—"Thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever." "As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more." This language evidently refers to all the wicked, and not to those of a particular class, or age of the world. Isa. 53: 3, 5—"He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. . . . But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." This remarkable prophecy, made several hundred years before Christ, and which was so minutely fulfilled, as we all know, in his own life, sufferings, and death, was put in the past tense as though it was at that time a historical fact. Thus we see it will not do to depend upon such an argument as proof of the immortality of the soul.

A similar argument is founded on the words of Christ to Martha (John 11: 26), "And whosoever liveth and believeth on me shall never die," relying on the last expression to prove that the soul, which they say is the real man, is immortal. If this language proves anything in this direction, it proves that those only who "believe" on Christ "shall never die," and that those who do not thus believe shall die. But this Scripture, with many others, has been misapprehended by overlooking the connection; while we are confident that some, whose attention has been directed to the flaw in the argument, and who still insist upon it as a good proof-text for immortality, use it as a mere quibble. To quibble, or treat lightly, any part of God's holy word in our investigations, is not only dishonest and wicked, but is unworthy the christian character. Let us be careful and honest, then, in all our investigations of truth, as in the sight of Him who sees the end from the beginning, and who inspired the penmen of the sacred Scriptures to communicate to us, in language suited to our condition, such momentous truths, which, if received as they should be in meekness and humility, will make us wise unto salvation. But we will now look at these words of Christ in their connection. "Jesus saith unto her, thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection, at the last day. Jesus saith unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth ["in the resurrection, at the last day"] and believeth on me, shall never die"; for, "we shall not all sleep [die], but we [who live at that day] shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead [in Christ] shall be raised incorruptible," and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15: 51-53.

Thus we see beauty and harmony in the Scriptures of truth. But we proceed. Christ says (John 15: 6), "If a man abide not in me, he [not his sins] is cast forth as a branch and is withered; and men gather them, and they are burned." "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then [and not until then] shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear let him hear" the truth, receive and obey it. Matt. 13: 40-43. Can any christian candidly think, if the wicked are to be kept alive and tormented without end, that Christ would thus compare them to withered branches and tares that are gathered and burned in the fire? Would such a comparison be appropriate or just? In a word, would it be truthful?

Can any person seriously believe in endless torture, and especially such as the learned Methodist commentator Benson describes? Hear his awful words, and then reflect, and if you still believe in the immortality of the soul, which leads to such a horrible doctrine, we beseech you to get on your knees before God and earnestly pray for light and forgiveness, if you impute to your heavenly Father the vindictive character that Benson does. He says: "God is present in hell in his infinite justice, and almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture. The presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love; so hell would be no hell if God did not there manifest his wrath. It is the presence of God which gives efficacy; without which there can be no life, no sensibility, no power. God is therefore himself present in hell to see the punishment of those rebels against his government; that it may be adequate to the infinitude of their guilt. His fiery indignation kindles, and his incensed fury feeds the flames of their torments; while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being [thus he gives up the natural immortality of the soul], and render all their powers more acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their being will admit."

Whose soul does not almost freeze with horror to hear the character of God thus slandered? If Mr. Benson had undertaken to have portrayed the character of Satan in all its demon hideousness, he could not have made it worse than he has made the character of God. Is it any wonder that so many persons are Universalists and infidels, when they are called upon to believe in and serve such a God as is represented by Benson? And then to think that this torment, as we are taught, is to be more severe as the soul expands, and thus becomes capable of more intense suffering; and so ever expanding, with ever increasing torture, as long as God himself exists! Suppose you hold your hand in the fire one minute, what intense pain; but try it one hour, one day! who could endure it? But hold it there one whole year, if it were possible and live; what anguish, what intolerable suffering! But think of the whole body and soul in a lake of liquid fire and brimstone, there to remain without one ray of light, or hope of deliverance! But this gives but a faint idea of endless duration and endless torture. Suppose a soul to be tormented a thousand billion years, and then one grain of sand upon the sea-shore should be removed, and then after the same length of time had again elapsed a second grain should be removed, and so on and on, a grain of sand being removed every time this long, long period of time should end, and the time would come when a cart-load of sand would thus be removed; when all the sand on the sea-shore and the whole earth itself would be removed. The time would come when every planet and every star and even the sun, were it all sand, would be removed; nay, more; if there were a thousand billion suns multiplied by as many more, the time would come when all these would be removed, one grain of sand at a time, and a thousand billion years intervening! And then after all this, what is called eternity is no nearer a termination than when the first grain of sand was removed!

Now to suppose that God, all merciful, good and just, will keep alive "by his powerful presence in hell," and punish with ever increasing torture the souls of wicked men through such ever repeating periods and never ending ages, is to suppose an utter impossibility, and charge God with being a cruel, tormenting tyrant. No wonder that Bishop Newton, in reflecting on the cruelty and inconsistency of endless torment until he became a restorationist, was led to exclaim: "Imagine a creature, nay, imagine numberless creatures produced out of nothing, delivered over to torments of endless ages without the least hope or possibility of relaxation or redemption. Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it to God and goodness. God could never make any creature whose end he foreknew would be misery everlasting." No one that the eminent John Foster, with other great men, for the same reasons, adopted the same view; or that thousands of professed christians, for the same cause, are being swept into what is called liberal religion, which finally ends in scepticism, if not outright infidelity.

If the church of Jesus Christ would see the word of God respected by the masses; if they would arrest the attention of the many who think for themselves, and whose minds are no longer, if they ever were, moved by the presentation of the doctrine of endless misery, as a motive to repentance, having no faith in such an absurdity; if they would present an all powerful motive in connection with the surpassing love of God as manifested on the cross, a motive consistent with the character of God, one, because it is scriptural and reasonable, will lead such men, as well as others, to reflection, and ultimately, if any thing will, to God through Jesus Christ to the saving of their souls alive, let them honestly examine, or re-examine the basis of the present theology of the day, in the light of God's holy word, and receive the pure, unadulterated truth as there found; and then they can face the world with confidence, and call on men to repent by urging the great motives—life and death, eternal life and eternal death, and not see and feel that their exhortations are unheeded and thrown back in their face, or trampled under foot. The truth is that men out of Christ are in a perishing condition, and they should be exhorted to "seek for honor and glory and immortality," that they may have "eternal life." They should be told in the language of Paul (Gal. 6: 7, 8) that "God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption [immortal beings cannot reap corruption, and the apostle says corruption doth not inherit incorruption]: but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Why is it that the ministers of the gospel do not now, as formerly, preach long and loud, and dwell on the horrors of endless torment in an endless hell of fire and brimstone? Is it because they do now believe it? Or is it because they are convinced that such preaching is no longer effective as a motive to repentance? Is it because the people have become more refined, and therefore cannot bear such truths (?), and will not go where their feelings will be hurt, that our clergymen neglect to enunciate the penalty of God's law? Or is it because they feel and know the masses do not believe in endless torture, and that therefore it is useless to present it as a motive? One thing is certain: they should not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, whether sinners hear or forbear; whether they are willing to hear the truth, or have "itching ears" for fables. But oh, how far do the most of our ministers come short of this. How very few are moved to repentance and faith in Christ under the popular preaching of the day. The great masses are moving on carelessly, heedlessly, wickedly, to the judgment, unprepared to stand before the great white throne. O christian minister, stop and look into thy heart, and see if thou art not creed-bound; if so, throw your creed to the moles and bats, and examine your Bible as in the sight of God, and with his help; and you will rejoice with unspeakable joy, as hundreds have, when you see these glorious truths shine out on almost every page, making Christ the great Life-giver of the world. Then put on thy armor, and take the sword of the Spirit, and go forth and battle for truth, "contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints"; disabusing the minds of men in regard to a slandered Bible and a slandered God. Let them see that God is not a cruel tyrant who will inflict excruciating torture upon the creatures of his handiwork, without mitigation, and without end; that the Bible is not "like a fiddle upon which you can play any tune you please"; but that this is a libel on that precious book, asserted by infidels in consequence of a false theology. No, sir; it is not the Bible that contradicts itself, it is the popular theology of the day that contradicts the Bible. And thus the Bible has been brought into disrepute, and "is despised and rejected of men," with Christ, not because it is not a harmonious book, but because theologians, in consequence of their loose way of interpretation, have made it appear otherwise.

With ministers and theologians who believe in the immortality of the soul, and consequently endless misery: to be dead, means to be more alive than ever; to die, is to live on in torment; to lose life, is to preserve a miserable life; to destroy, is to preserve whole; to perish, is to live on in misery; to burn up, is always burning; to be consumed, devoured, is to be made indestructible and immortal; to reap corruption, is to be made incorruptible; not to be, is to be without end; to be as though they had not been, is to continue in existence; life, means happiness; to destroy the wicked, is to destroy his happiness; and to burn up the sinner, is to make him a living salamander. Thus have the Scriptures of truth been perverted by great and good men, not designedly, but carelessly, without proper investigation as to the basis of these most pernicious errors, to wit: the immortality of the soul. Some of these men have admitted that there is no proof in the Bible of this pagan dogma; and it has therefore been, by such, "taken for granted." But we turn the tables on them and prove most conclusively from the Scriptures that the soul is not immortal, but that it dies—is dead.

In conclusion, we remark that no intelligent person, as we believe, who will properly reflect upon the true nature of endless misery, whether such an one believes in the Benson school of torture, or in the more popular modified form of punishment, and then examine the Scriptures in connection with such helps as can be obtained, can come to any other conclusion than that God will do as he has said, and punish the wicked "with everlasting destruction from his presence and from the glory of his power"; thus cleansing his universe from all sin and the effects of sin, when Christ "shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe . . in that day." And then will be fulfilled, as they cannot be if wicked beings are in existence, the glowing words of the Revelator (5: 11-13)—"And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of [not all, as Universalists say, but out of] every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth. And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels around about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever."

AN ACCOUNT OF CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

Let us strongly and explicitly exhort all believers to go on to perfection. That we may all speak the same thing, we ask once for all, Shall we defend this perfection, or give it up? We all agree to defend it, meaning thereby (as we did from the beginning) salvation from all sin, properly so called, by the love of God and man filling our heart. Some say, "This cannot be attained till we have been refined by the fire of purgatory." Others, "Nay, it will be attained as soon as the soul and the body part." But others say, "It may be attained before we die;" a moment after it is too late." Is it so or not? We are all agreed, we may be saved from all sin before death, i. e., from all sinful tempers and desires. The substance then is settled. But as to the circumstances, is the change gradual or instantaneous? It is both the one and the other. "But should we, in preaching, insist both on one and the other?" Certainly we should insist on the gradual change; and that earnestly and continually. And are there not reasons why we should insist on the instantaneous change? If there be such a blessed change before death, should we not encourage all believers to expect it? And the rather, because constant experience shows, the more earnestly they expect this, the more swiftly and steadily does the gradual work of God go on in their souls; the more careful are they to grow in grace; the more zealous of good works, and the more punctual in their attendance on all the ordinances of God; whereas just the contrary effects are observed whenever this expectation ceases. They are saved by hope, by this hope of a total change, with a gradually increasing salvation. Destroy this hope, and that salvation stands still, or rather decreases daily; therefore, whoever would advance in the gradual change in believers, should strongly insist on the instantaneous.

What I purpose in the following papers is, to give a plain and distinct account of the doctrine of christian perfection.

For this purpose I shall endeavor to show, 1. In what sense christians are not; 2. In what sense they are perfect.

1. In what sense they are not. They are not perfect in knowledge. They are not free from ignorance, no, nor from mistake. We are no more to expect any living man to be infallible, than to be omniscient. They are not free from infirmities; such as weakness, or slowness of understanding, irregular quickness or heaviness of imagination. Such in another kind are, impropriety of language, an ungracefulness of pronounciation, to which one might add a thousand nameless defects, either in conversation or behavior. N. B. From such infirmities as these none are perfectly freed till their spirit returns to God. Neither can we expect till then to be freed from temptation; for the servant is not above his master. But neither in this sense is there any absolute perfection on earth. There is no perfection which does not admit of a continual increase.

2. In what sense then are they perfect? Observe, we are not now speaking of babes in Christ, but adult christians. But even babes in Christ are so far perfect as not to commit sin. This St. John affirms expressly.

"But does not the Scripture say, A just man sinneth seven times a day?" It does not. Indeed it says, "A just man falleth seven times." But this is quite another thing. For, first, the words "a day," are not in the text. Secondly, here is no mention of falling into sin at all. What is here mentioned is falling into temporal affliction.

"But St. James says, chap. 3: 2—'In many things we offend all.'" True; but who are the persons here spoken of? Why, those many masters or teachers whom God had not sent; not the apostle himself, nor any real christian. That in the word we (used by a figure of speech, common in all other, as well as the inspired writings) the apostle could not possibly include himself, or any other true believer, appears, first, from the ninth verse, "Therewith bless we God, and therewith curse we men." Surely not we apostles! Not we believers! Secondly, from the words preceding the text—"My brethren, be not many masters or teachers, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation. For in many things we offend all." We! Who? Not the apostles, nor true believers, but they who were to "receive the greater condemnation," because of those many offences. Nay, thirdly, the verse itself proves, that "we offend all," cannot be spoken either of all men, or of all christians. For in it immediately follows the mention of a man who "offends not," as the we first mentioned did; from whom therefore he is professedly contradistinguished and pronounced "a perfect man." "But St. John himself says: 'If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves.' And, 'if we say we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.'"

I answer (1.) The tenth verse fixes the sense of the eighth: "If we say we have no sin" in the former, being explained by "If we say we have not sinned," in the latter verse: (2.) The point under consideration is not, whether we have or have not sinned heretofore; and neither of these verses asserts that we do sin or commit sin now. (3.) The ninth verse explains both the eighth and tenth, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse from all unrighteousness." As if he had said, I have before affirmed, "the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin." And no man can say, I need it not; I have no sin to be cleansed from. "If we say we have no sin," that "we have not sinned, we deceive ourselves" and make God a liar. But "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just" not only "to forgive us our sins," but also to "cleanse us from all unrighteousness," that we may "go and sin no more." In conformity therefore both to the doctrine of St. John, and the whole tenor of the New Testament, we fix the conclusion, a christian is so far perfect as not to commit sin.

This is the glorious privilege of every christian, yea, though he be but a babe in Christ. But it is only of grown christians it can be affirmed, they are in such a sense perfect, as, secondly, to be freed from evil desires and evil tempers. First, from evil or sinful desires. Indeed, whence should they spring? Out of the heart of man? But if the heart be no longer evil, then evil desires no longer proceed out of it; "for a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit."

And as they are freed from evil desires, so likewise from evil tempers. Every one of these can say, with St. Paul, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me;" words that manifestly describe a deliverance from inward, as well as from outward sin. This is expressed both negatively, "I live not;" my evil nature, the body of sin is destroyed; and positively, "Christ liveth in me," and therefore all that is holy, and just, and good. Indeed, both these, "Christ liveth in me, and I live not," are inseparately connected. For what communion hath light with darkness, or Christ with Belial?

He therefore who liveth in these christians hath "purified their hearts by faith;" insomuch, that every one that has Christ in him, "the hope of glory, purifieth himself even as he is pure." He is purified from pride; for Christ was lowly in heart. He is pure from evil desire and self-will; for Christ desired only to do the will of his Father. And he is pure from anger, in the common sense of the word; for Christ was meek and gentle. I say in the common sense of the word; for he is angry while he is grieved for the sinner. He feels a displacency at every offence against God, and tender compassion to the offender.

Thus doth Jesus "save his people from their sins," not only from outward sins, but from the sins of their hearts. "True," say some, "but not till death, not in this world." Nay, St. John says, "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is, so are we in this world." The apostle here, beyond all contradiction, speaks of himself and other living christians, of whom he flatly affirms that not only at or after death, but in this world they are as their Master.

Exactly agreeable to this are his words in the first chapter: "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we walk in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." And again; "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Now it is evident the apostle here speaks of a deliverance wrought in this world. For he saith not, The blood of Christ will cleanse, (at the hour of death, or in the day of judgment,) but it cleanseth at the present time us living christians from all sin. And it is equally evident that if any sin remain, we are not cleansed from all sin. If any unrighteousness remain in the soul, it is not cleansed from all unrighteousness. Neither let any say that this relates to justification only, or the cleansing us from the guilt of sin; first, because this is confounding together what the apostle clearly distinguishes, who mentions first to forgive us our sins, and then to cleanse us from all unrighteousness; secondly, because this is asserting justification by works, in the strongest sense possible; it is making all inward as well as outward holiness necessarily previous to justification. For if the cleansing here spoken of is no other than the cleansing us from the guilt of sin, then we are not cleansed from guilt, that is, not justified, unless on condition of walking in the light as he is in the light. It remains, then, that christians are saved in this world from all sin, from all unrighteousness; that they are now in such a sense perfect as not to commit sin, and to be freed from evil desires and evil tempers.

This great gift of God, the salvation of their souls, is no other than the image of God stamped on their hearts. It is a renewal in the spirit of their minds, after the likeness of Him that created them. God hath now laid the axe unto the root of the tree, purifying their hearts by faith, and cleansing all the thoughts of their hearts by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit. Having this hope, that they shall see God as he is, they "purify themselves, even as he is pure," and are "holy, as he that hath called them is holy, in all manner of conversation." "Not that they have already attained" all that they shall attain, "or are already [in this sense] perfect." But they daily "go on from strength to strength;" beholding now, "as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, they are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of the Lord."—John Wesley.

THE PLAIN WAY.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

There is a class, consisting in part of educated and intelligent men, who object to believing anything that they cannot understand and comprehend. They choose to analyze every subject, dissect it, examine it on every side and in every part, and usually find some pretext for rejecting the essential truth, because they say it will not bear the test of analysis. Let us illustrate this dissecting process. Take, for instance, a clock or a watch. Take the best and most perfect one that can be found. Now let one who does not understand the mechanism of the timepiece undertake to dissect it. It may be a comparatively easy matter to take in pieces, but much more difficult to put it together again. Perhaps ninety-nine out of every hundred inexperienced persons would find it nearly or quite impossible for them to restore every part to its place, so that the machine would perform its allotted task, and keep time again. Is it a more easy work to reconstruct the temple of truth, after you have taken it in pieces by the analyzing and dissecting process? Skeptics do not find it so. They can tear down, but cannot build up, either the original structure or any adequate substitute.

But it is not with unbelievers strictly so-called, that we wish to deal at this time. It is rather with those who profess to be seeking diligently after the truth, but do not find a satisfying portion in all their search. After years of hard study, they seem to be in a starved condition, instead of fat and flourishing, as those who feed upon the truth should be. They see others, with smaller abilities, and fewer helps, and less favorable opportunities, who seem to have found what they have been so long and so vainly seeking.

It is here that we may see that "the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favor to men of skill." Eccl. 9: 11. The race here to be run is the race after truth and holiness. The battle is one which ought to result in victory over the world, the flesh and the devil; every inward and outward foe to righteousness and progress toward the pilgrim's final rest. The "bread" which the wise (worldly wise) fail to find, is the bread of life. The "favor" is "the grace of God, which bringeth salvation." Now what object can you possibly have in view, in your search, that is not included in this catalogue? How is it that "these things" are hid from the wise and prudent, yet revealed unto babes? Allow me to deal plainly and faithfully with you. Is it not because you do not receive the truth with humility, "as a little child"? You must lay aside your own wisdom, your own righteousness, and your own strength, and give up all to Christ, and then you may "seek and find;" "ask and receive;" "knock and it shall be opened unto you." If you cannot thus humble yourself, you are like the young man who had "great possessions," and it will be as difficult for you to attain the great object (life and salvation) as for a camel to go through the eye of a needle. You desire to possess faith. You want that hope that is an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, and that reacheth to the sure foundation, even to Christ, the Rock, who is now in the holy place "within the vail."

But with all these years of hard study and patient toil, digging deep as for hid treasure, you have only a hope that you may eventually have a hope. This is an "unsubstantial shade." Why not try the simple way, the lowly way, the childlike way, that you may thus find the great end and object of your search? You have tried long enough

"To satisfy the ocean with a drop;
To marry immortality to death,
And with the unsubstantial shade of time,
To fill the embrace of all eternity."

Will you now give up trying to measure the infinite with your limited and finite mind, and consent to love and obey, rather than strive to comprehend God and his word and works? Can you not believe all that God has revealed to man, and let the dark and deep and unfathomable things rest till after you have made your calling and election sure? Time is too short to find the essential truth in the way you have been following. But you may "know the truth" and enjoy the liberty of those whom the truth makes free, if you can only turn toward the true light, even Jesus. It is only "look and live." And in just such a plain, simple, easy way must you be saved, if saved at all. Naaman was not told to do some great thing, but only to "wash and be clean." So with you. Look to Jesus. Believe on him, love him, obey him, and you shall be saved.

— If you would be pungent, be brief; for it is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed the deeper they burn.

HAPPY NEW YEAR.—Thank the Lord that it is our privilege to say once more to our friends, WE WISH YOU ALL A HAPPY NEW YEAR IN THE LORD.

BILLS! BILLS!!

ELDER I. I. LESLIE, Editor of the Young Pilgrim, has gone to Maine for a few days, and will call upon subscribers of the Crisis and the Pilgrim who are in arrears, with bills of their indebtedness; and we hope the friends will do their duty,—pay up, or, if they cannot, make such statements as the case may require, so that we may know how it is, and do what appears for the good of the cause.

ELDER J. T. DIXON has gone to parts of New York and Pennsylvania, and also Bro. E. WYMAN to New Hampshire, for the same purpose. Brethren and sisters, do the best you can in this matter, and the Lord will bless. AG'T.

THE OPENING YEAR.

The opening of a new year is an interesting event, and is a fit time to correct all wrongs, settle old accounts, and to close up all intercourse with Satan for ever. It is a good time to have all our sins forgiven, and to open a clean page in the book of life, and then avoid all spots of evil. Although the year just closed has been crowded with startling events, we may expect more startling ones the present year. Signs indicate that great political changes are about to open. Crowned heads begin to tremble before the waking up of the people—the laboring classes. The "Internationale" party is already striking terror to the hearts of kings and the aristocracy. The British government has sent in an order to their agents in different parts of the world to gather what facts they could obtain in relation to the Internationale, and report the same to headquarters. Apparently, it is the most formidable political party in the world at the present time, and is making rapid additions to its strength on both continents. A telegram from London says:

"The agents of the Internationale Society, who are employed in operating among the soldiers of the French army, have just reported to the revolutionary headquarters in this city, that they find the opinion of the military divided on the subject of the future plan of Government for France. The parties are classed as Republicans and Imperialists; the latter is much the strongest in number, and the only serious obstacles to the fulfillment of its public hopes comes from the Internationale."

The object of this party is well expressed in the Train Ligue, published by George Francis Train:—"Down with the kings; smash the rings. God save the people." There are various smaller parties which are aiming to accomplish the same result, which may yet unite with this leading one. This political undertow is dashing powerfully against the foundation of thrones and the aristocracy. For several years Spiritualism has been advocating just what is being done by the Internationale. George Francis Train is said to be a Communist, which is but another name for a member of the Internationale party. At the same time he says he represents eight million Spiritualists. The whole movement looks like the last gathering of the foes of Christ, preparatory for the closing conflict between truth and error, light and darkness, Christianity and infidelity. Men are fast deciding, and taking their position either for the Lord or Satan. Let us gird on our armor for the conflict, and be ready to stand in the hottest of the fight. This is the hour for brave men, clothed with "the whole armor af God." The conflict may be fierce and terrible, but the victory glorious and eternal. Christ will lead to a sure triumph over all the hosts of the enemy.

While Satan is gathering his forces into martial order, and drilling them night and day in all the arts of fiendish warfare; we expect to see the saints of the Most High taking advanced ground in christian experience; consecrating themselves entirely to Christ, being "filled with the Spirit," and walking in the highway of holiness, waiting with longing hearts for the coming of the Son of man. It seems that the time has come to trim our lamps, and be in readiness to meet the Bridegroom. The night of watching and weeping is nearly ended. Soon the morning of joy will dawn in all its brilliant glory.

Dear Brn. and Srs., do not look back now, but make a grand rally around the standard of the cross, "fight the good fight; lay hold on eternal life." You see the prize. It is the highest that can be offered by our Redeemer. Let us secure it, without regard to cost. Eternal life! Look at those words. Estimate the value of that which they represent. Can we afford to lose such a priceless gift? Shall it be bartered away for the sake of gratifying the passions and appetites? Shall a grudge, a root of bitterness, hatred or variance, be allowed to defile our hearts, and thus render us unfit to receive eternal life at the coming of Jesus? Will it pay to let Satan have the control of a part of our hearts? We cannot serve God and mammon. Let us be wholly the Lord's now, henceforth, and FOREVER.

☞ BRO. E. BELLOWS wishes to say the call for the R. I. Conference, to be held at Providence, is a mistake. The conference will meet at Rockland. See notice.

JOURNEYINGS.

We are now (Tuesday, Dec. 19) on our way from Montreal to Chicago, passing through the snows of Canada. The weather is mild for the season, though there has been some very cold weather. There is not over a foot of snow on the ground at present. The scenery looks dreary, and makes one sigh for our new earth home, where the snows of winter, and the scorching heat of summer will be for ever unknown.

On our way, after leaving Rye, we had meetings in Canada at Melbourne, Danville, and Montreal. At Melbourne we found a few firm in the faith, waiting for the coming of the Just One. The quickening power of the Holy Spirit was present, and strong resolutions were made to live nearer to the Lord. Several requested prayers that they might be among the redeemed.

Our meetings at Danville were seasons of refreshing. We learned that the church had been more lively than usual during the present year. As ever, we found a good home, and received a hearty welcome at Bro. J. Porter's, the pastor of the church. He is an ardent lover of the blessed hope, and stands up boldly in its defense.

While there, we had a very pleasant visit with the Congregational minister, Bro. Ray, who is fully satisfied that we get our eternal life through Christ, and not through Adam. He sees clearly that the Bible teaches the destruction of the wicked, and not their eternal life in torment. He is an intelligent man, fully competent to defend the truth. He receives considerable opposition from some members of the church, who do not yet see the light on this subject. It requires much grace and firmness to stand up for an unpopular truth, when it is done at the expense of our reputation, and the loss of dear friends. Bro. Ray has concluded to pay the price, and thus be free in Christ.

At Montreal we found a few steadfast ones, waiting for redemption. They have to endure much bitter opposition from those who sustain the popular theology. Their numbers have been thinned by death, removals and backslidings; while some new ones have come in to fill their places. We had one of the most interesting seasons that we have enjoyed in that city since our first great conflict there some years since. Of late there has been quite a stir on the subject of "materialism," in consequence of a lecture delivered against it by Mr. Mc.Vicar, who is connected with the Presbyterian college in the city. In connection with the notice of our meeting, the editor of the Montreal Evening Star took occasion to say that the subject of "materialism" would receive attention; and that it would be well for the friends of Mr. Mc. Vicar no be present as there would be an opportunity for asking questions. This notice brought out an unusual number of intelligent men. Among these was one of Mr. Mc. Vicar's theological students, who improved the opportunity, in company with another, and after the sermon asked questions for an hour and a half. The audience was intensely interested. We felt special help from the Spirit of the Lord in answering their questions, and meeting their objections relating to the nature of man, the punishment of the wicked, the operation of the Holy Spirit upon the hearts of men, christian experience, the personality of our Heavenly Father, and other points of interest. It was a rare theological feast. The guests were anxious for another entertainment.

THE BEST ROUTE.

It may be of some value to travelers going west from Rochester to Chicago to be informed in relation to the best route. It has been our lot to travel some ten or fifteen thousand miles a year, north, south, east and west, but we have found no roads with which we have been so well pleased in all respects as the Great Western and Michigan Central, extending from the Suspension Bridge to Detroit and Chicago. By taking this route, one has a sight at the Niagara Falls, and a ride across the noted Suspension Bridge, besides the privilege of traveling through a portion of the Dominion of England's Queen. The tracks are in good repair, the cars are elegant, very convenient, well ventilated, drawn by new engines, and under the charge of gentlemanly and experinced conductors. The system of ventilation on the Michigan Central is the best we have ever seen. There are fewer changes on this than any other route; a uniform and narrow guage, and the best connexions. Pullman Palace cars are run with all express trains. On these roads one feels an unusual degree of safety, when acquainted with all the facts connected with their careful management under Mr. Wm. K. Muir, General Superintendent of the Great Western, and Mr. H. E. Sargent, of the Mich. Central. These roads are worthy of the popular patronage they are receiving. No pains are spared to make passengers enjoy their journey. When we went through (Dec. 20th,) a cold, driving snow-storm, of a severe nature, surrounded us; but in the cars it seemed like being seated by our home fireside during an old-fashioned New England snow storm. What a contrast between such riding and that of the stage-coach in our boyhood days. Truly, this is a changing world.

SKEPTICISM.

This is emphatically an age of scepticism. It is but a natural result of the worldly-minded religion now prevalent in christendom. When the people see that professors of religion do not live much better than those who make no profession, it causes them to lose confidence in christianity. The time has come when if it is known a person is a member of the church it affords but small evidence that he is really in Christ, and is a new creature. Those who are trying to be true followers of Jesus are alarmed at the low state of religious interest. They find but little to feed them in the popular preaching. Like Noah's dove, they find no rest. They know not what to do. They go to different meetings; and in nearly all prevails the same cold, formal condition of things. It is winter and darkness all around. The form remains, but the power is gone.

This state of things is just adapted to make infidels. We see no way to arrest this tide of infidelity only by raising the standard of religion up to the Bible stand-point—holiness and purity of heart. And when this is done, we must expect bitter opposition from those who have settled down in lukewarmness, seeking the praise of men, rather than of God. We must expect false criticism, impeachment of motives, misrepresentation, like what our Savior endured from those who professed to be Moses' disciples. Let us bear it all without a murmur, remembering, if we suffer with Jesus, we shall reign with him.

Says the Chicago Times, of Dec. 25th 1871, "The pagan age was followed by a religious one, and is now being succeeded by one of scepticism, in which all the greater thinkers of the period are leaders." The editor thinks the cause of this state of things is owing to the unfaithfulness of the professors of the christian religion. We believe his conclusion is very nearly correct.

THE FUTURE JUDGMENT.

Some erroneous views grow out of an incorrect impression concerning the nature of the coming judgment. Owing to the impression that the future judgment is for the purpose of investigation, some have imbibed the theory that the saints are to be raised to a mortal state for the term of forty days, more or less, during which time it is claimed that the judgment investigation will be going on. This is an error, from the fact that in the "better resurrection" the sainted "dead shall be raised incorruptible," this resurrection including two features—re-organization and immortalization; and though the re-organization precedes the execution of judgment, the immortalization is the result of judgment executed in favor of the saint, it being the finishing feature of the resurrection of the just, and the feature which constitutes the "better resurrection"—"better" from the fact that it includes immortalization with re-organization.

The query here arises, whether God will immortalize the scattered fragments of the human system before their re-organization, or after it? If before it, then instead of having the dead stand before God to be judged in any sense, they could only stand before God after having received their judgment in its execution, for immortality is a prominent item in the reward to be given by the Judge; but if immortalization is after re-organization, it can be the execution of judgment in favor of the saint, and still be recognized as a part of the "better resurrection," as no time need intervene between re-organization and immortalization for a judgment investigation, as God knows every man's character at the close of his life, and the future judgment will simply be the manifestation and execution of judgment, which will not require an interval of time after the re-organization, before immortalization takes place.

But as God will not do so foolish a thing as to execute judgment on unconscious matter by giving it immortality, which is a part of the reward, and subsequently giving it a re-organization, he has arranged to re-organize man first, and then by the next stroke of his power to immortalize the newly re-organized saint, this being the last feature in what is denominated the "better resurrection," and at the same time being the execution of judgment in favor of the saint. The excuse that this leaves no time for the judgment between the re-organization and the immortalization, falls powerless when we consider that it is not a judgment of investigation—God's investigation having ended with the death of each man—but a judgment to manifest and the decision of Deity, which will be executed in the "twinkling of an eye" on every saint. It will be a day of remuneration, instead of a day of investigation; and the remuneration of the saint will begin with his immortality—begin, too, in immediate connection with his re-organization, there being no need of a judgment investigation after the re-organization, but merely the manifestation of the decision by executing it in favor of the saint by changing the "vile body." Though it has ceased to be a body by being burned to ashes at the stake, or by mouldering back to dust, and being scattered to the four winds, re-organization will constitute it a "body" again, and then as a "body" and not as disorganized dust, it will be "changed," and "fashioned" like the deathless and glorious body of Christ.

That this "change" is recognized as one ingredient of the "better resurrection," is evident from the following facts:—

1. Christ was the "first born from the dead"—"the first born among many brethren"—in consideration of the fact that he was the first one immortalized, thus making the resurrection birth consist of something more than resuscitation or re-organization, for others before him had been called to life again on this principle; hence, when the "many brethren" are born from the dead, or when "a nation shall be born at once," it will not consist in mere re-organization, but will include the "change" of the "body," and not the change of material to manufacture a body out of.

2. If re-organization constitutes the new birth independent of the "change," the living saints can never share the new birth.

3. If re-organization constitutes the new birth, all the wicked will experience it.

4. If re-organization is the new birth, then it precedes the execution of judgment, thus forestalling the judgment; but if the "change" which is a part of the "better resurrection" is the new birth, then it can be the execution of judgment in favor of the saints—can be shared by the living saints, and be denied to sinners, for they will experience immortalization, or this change.

If immortality, or eternal life, is any part of our reward, it must be the result of judgment rendered in our favor, and therefore cannot precede the execution of judgment; nor can the execution of judgment begin before the dead are "delivered up" to be judged; and as long as they remain dead, they are not "delivered up" by death. If to be given over to death implies the cessation of life, then to be "delivered up" by death, involves a return to life; and this precedes the execution of judgment, in the case of the saint as well as in the case of the sinner. But the supposition that the saints must remain in a mortal state after their re-organization, to pass through a judgment investigation, before obtaining immortality, is not correct, for the better resurrection includes immortalization, or a change of the re-organized body, as its distinguishing and excelling feature; and it will take God but a "moment" to "change" every saint on earth.

Re-organization alone will not make the body a "spiritual body," nor a body "raised in glory," but the accompanying change, which is the completion of the "better resurrection," will accomplish this result. If we can come in possession of spiritual bodies before God begins to execute judgment in our favor, even in the very act of the delivering up of the dead to be judged, judgment is thereby supplanted. We conclude, therefore, that the execution of judgment in favor of the saints begins with the change of the re-organized body, this being regarded a part of the better resurrection, immediately subsequent to re-organization. W. S.

Was the first man created with a dying nature? or was he created with a deathless nature? Both views are entertained, and both are open to irrefutable objections. If created with a dying nature, God's assurance that death would be incurred by eating of the forbidden tree is rendered incorrect; for a man with a dying nature would just as certainly die without eating of it. If created with a deathless nature, he could not have incurred death by eating of the forbidden tree, as deathless beings cannot die, and this would make God's statement incorrect in telling Adam that he should die if he ate of it, and also make his statement meaningless in assigning a reason why Adam was kept away from the tree of life—"lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever."

When God told Adam that if he ate of a certain tree he should die, it was tantamount to an assertion that he would not die unless he should eat of it—that the eating thereof would render him a dying being. If he were already a dying being, he would just as certainly have died without eating of the forbidden tree, as by doing so, which would make Jehovah's statement either deceptive or meaningless; and Adam might have replied, "Lord, as I am already a dying being, I shall just as really die without eating this fruit, as by eating it; then why tell me if I eat I shall die?" Would God have trifled thus with a man already death-doomed, and tell him, "dying thou shalt die," for this act? If there is any meaning to language, God communicated the impression to Adam that he could escape death by refusing to eat of the forbidden tree, or continue to live by so doing while he would incur death by eating of it.

When we understand that one tree possessed a property that would cause death, and the other tree a property that could render one death-proof, the matter is plain; and we are prepared to see how man, perfectly organized, could have lived on unlimitedly, just as do "the angels who kept not their first estate," and yet not have been death-proof, as he would have been after eating of life's tree, which would have imparted a deathless nature. There is a difference between a nature that can live on without limitation, if not interfered with, and a nature that must live on endlessly whether interfered with or not. The former was doubtless Adam's nature before his disobedience, and the latter would have been his nature after eating of the tree of life.

With this understanding of the matter both statements of the Lord are reasonable, for (1) God could consistently tell such a man that he would become a dying man by eating of certain death-producing fruits, though not yet immortal; and (2) at the same time he could consistently say to the same man, You shall 'live forever,' in spite of contingencies, by eating of the tree of life, which could impart a deathless nature. Doubtless the forbidden fruit planted the seeds of death in man, who otherwise would have lived on till he had gained access to the tree of life, and become deathless. W. S.

WHEN IS JUDGMENT EXECUTED?

As the execution of judgment is the last feature in the judgment of God (investigation and decision always preceding execution) if we can learn definitely at what epoch the execution of divine judgment is due, it will negate reward at any earlier date, for no matter how long beforehand the investigation may have taken place, or the decision have been made, only the execution of judgment gives reward. Investigation precedes decision, and decision precedes execution, so neither investigation nor decision can give reward before the time of execution. When, then, is the execution of judgment due? Let an inspired witness testify—"Behold, the Lord cometh . . . to execute judgment upon all." Jude 1: 14, 15. Then the execution of judgment cannot precede the Lord's coming. Then the dead, small and great, will be delivered up to be judged—not to pass through a judgment investigation (for the divine Judge already knows the character of every man,) but to have the decision of the Judge executed.

First, the dead are delivered up, or reorganized, to be judged, and then begins the execution of judgment; in the case of the saint, the first thing in order is to "change" the "body" to an immortal state, this change being recognized as a part of "the better resurrection;" and the next thing is to give them the kingdom. In the case of the sinner, the second death must be executed. A thousand deaths before God's execution of judgment, even if just like the penalty—death, could have nothing to do with the matter. God's judgment will not be executed till the right time, and then it is sure. W. S.

PIONEERING.—By the time this note reaches the subscribers of the Crisis, we expect to be proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom in the "regions beyond" our ordinary field of labor, in the southern part of our country. As it is a new field for our peculiar faith, pioneering will be the work in which we expect to engage. But it is right that the seed should be sown in the southern field. While it is not expected that every body will see the light, many will be delighted to learn the neglected truths of the Bible. Pray for the southern pioneers. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 2.

My last note left me on Sand mountain, Ala., at the residence of Eld. Smith, a Baptist minister of good intellect, who has been some years investigating our faith, and has finally embraced it in full—life and death not excepted—and has commenced preaching it. Another Baptist minister in this State has sent me a request to call on him, who has also fully come into the faith after two years' investigation.

I preached my first sermon in Alabama at the house of Eld. Smith, on the 13th of Dec., to a candid audience. Since opening a correspondence with Bro. Smith about visiting this region, Sr. Hastings and Bro. H. Davis have held a meeting on Sand mountain, leaving a good impression on the minds of the people; but had left before I arrived. After my first meeting, the people took pine torches, as substitutes for lanterns, to light themselves home through the dark, as in the early days of New England settlers.

Dec. 14th, preached to a candid audience in the Methodist house of worship, about three miles from Bro. Smith's. The Methodist minister, Bro. McDonald, was out. After meeting, I went home with him to tarry for the night, in company with Bro. Smith. Had a pleasant interview. I had previously sent him some works by mail, which he is reading. He is a man of intellect and independence. Hope he may yet see the whole truth.

Dec. 15th, preached again at the same house of worship, Brn. McDonald and Smith taking part in the services, and we had a good time. We then went about eight miles to a place called Carpenter, in the valley, where I preached in the evening. Good attention.

Dec. 16th, preached two sermons at the same place. A deep interest is being felt, and many who heard me on the mountain came on foot to Carpenter, from five to eight miles, men and women. I have sent scores of works by mail into this region, and many have been much enlightened by reading, and are prepared to listen to preaching.

Sunday, Dec. 17th, preached at the same place. The crowd was such that the windows of the house were taken out, and the doors thrown open to accommodate the people. Solemnity pervaded the congregation. The interest to hear is deep. Many seem almost ready to seek the Lord. God helped me preach. Sunday evening the house was packed to its utmost capacity, and the people outside, who could not get in, thronged the doors and windows (it being a moderate night), and listened with the deepest attention, while I reined them up to the judgment. I called upon sinners and backsliders to start for the kingdom, when over forty requested prayers, many of whom had never before made a start in religion, all adults, and some of the most prominent citizens in the place. It was a melting time.

It seemed too bad to leave this interest, but having previously complied with an earnest request to send an appointment to a place about fifty miles away, I could not do otherwise than to leave for a time. But every person in the house arose to signify their anxiety to have me return again as soon as I had met my engagement. The poor condition of the meeting-houses in this region makes them unfit for meetings except in a warm spell. Were it not for this, I should consider matters ripe for a sweeping revival here. Thus my first five days have been spent in Alabama, during which I have preached eight sermons, to interested congregations. W. S.

REPORT OF VT. A. C. CONFERENCE.

This conference met, agreeable to notice, Wednesday evening, Dec. 6th, and continued until the evening of the 9th, with deep interest. Preachers present during the meeting—H. F. Carpenter, North Springfield; Daniel Brailey, H. C. Howard, East Roxbury; Oscar Beckwith, J. Harding, West Fairlee; A. A. Hoyt, Cabot; S. Lamson, Snowsville; Z. T. Wood, Springfield.

Friday, 9½ A. M., came together for business. President absent. Meeting called to order by Vice President, H. F. Carpenter. The Secretary being absent, A. A. Hoyt was chosen Secretary pro tem. The report of the churches was then called for, in alphabetical order, and the following churches were reported by those present who knew of their whereabouts: Bethel (Camp Brook), Bridgewater, Bristol, Braintree (Snowsville), Cabot, Castleton, Poultney, Rutland, East Roxbury, Rawsonville, St. Johnsbury, No. Springfield, Stowe Hollow, Vernon, West Barnard, West Fairlee, Wheelock Hollow, Warren, Waterbury and Stockbridge. North Hyde-Park, Newport, Middlesex, and others, not reported for want of some one that knows their history.

The above churches number a membership of from six to one hundred, and nearly all told of a rising interest of late, and a determination to be numbered with the redeemed of God; each one in turn spoke of the great benefit and new impetus received at our annual Bethel campmeetings, especially the last one; also are being strengthened and encouraged by our new-born conference, organized after God's order, and carried on in the spirit and power of godliness. The preachers' reports were called for and given in with pith and power, showing a resolution to press the battle to the very gate of the enemy, and, in the strength of our Captain, go up and possess the goodly land.

Motion was made and carried that we send an abstract report of this conference to the Crisis for publication. Voted, to adjourn to the first of March, where the officers of the conference may appoint.

In conclusion we would say, our conference reports, both of churches and preachers, were of telling interest; many souls have been brought to Christ and churches formed within the past few months. By the self-sacrificing spirit manifested, we were made to feel that Vermont is now determined to rise and stand among her sister States in the cause of truth. Pray God that he will guide us in the unerring counsels of his word. May each church report by delegate or letter at our next quarterly conference.

"NO MORE CURSE."

I. T. HODSDON.

Nearly six thousand years their cycles have run, since God said—"Cursed be the earth for thy sake;" since that time creation has been wailing and travailing in pain, groaning to its very centre, beneath the burden of that curse. Earth was once the abode of purity,—the home of blessedness, virtue and love. Yet how great was the transition from purity unsullied, from happiness unalloyed, from perfect health and peaceful life,—to impurity most degrading in its nature, to sorrow inexpressible, and, above all to death, that severest penalty of God's violated law. Alas! the "golden age" soon passed away, and sin commenced its terrible reign.

But earth, man, was cursed for thee. Look where we may, the marks of its dark and bitter trail are inevitably seen: in every faded flower,—in every withered leaf,—in every worm that writhes,—in every dark and stormy cloud that gathers in the sky,—in every poisonous breeze that bears before it pestilence and death,—in every pale form upon which relentless death has left the awful imprint of its icy hand; in fact, in every thing around, do we see suffering, change and decay.

O! sin-cursed earth. "O, wretched man that I am; who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" How often have these words in heart-rending accents issued from the lips of the holy child of God. Yet no sooner is fallen man made to see his forlorn condition, and the fearful effect of sin in his nature, than a ray of light shines in upon his beclouded mind, then, in the flood of light that bursts upon his troubled soul, arises a bright and shining form; a great halo of glory hangs around his head, and in the bright and holy light emanating from the divine face is recognized the glorious person of the Son of man. He stoops, and with pitying eye looks upon him who is marked with the sign of His own sorrow. He lifts him up above the scenes of all earth's trials, and permits him just for a moment to look through an eye of faith upon that country, where the dreadful sin-curse no longer rules. Enraptured, he beholds it, while from all around borne upon the gentle zephyrs, he can seem to hear, in sweetest whispers, "No more curse."

Then, with renewed animation the believer pushes valiantly forward in the good fight of faith, struggling along through windy storm and howling tempest, sometimes almost overpowered by conflicting elements. But then, as with slow and trembling steps he drags his weary feet from sorrow to sorrow, and finds his energy begin to flag, and himself ready to give up the contest,—just then, Faith bids him look beyond, and behold the "recompense of reward" as portrayed in the vision of the apostle. What a glorious change! Earth robed in beauty; no curse, no pain, no temptation, no sin, no death. Transported he gazes upon the scene, while he seems to hear, again and again, "He that overcometh, shall inherit all things."

The vision is passed; again he finds himself in desperate combat with invisible foes; darkness of night settles upon him; but through the darkness, light gleams. He sees there is One who fights with him, and, knowing that victory will soon be his, waits patiently for the battle to cease. He does not wait long. The victory is won. The mighty Conqueror in whom he conquers, appears. The shattered sword is thrown aside. Patience and faith have done their perfect work, and the Christian warrior caught away from the scenes of his warfare, now joins that innumerable company, whom sin, with its terrible flying roll of curses can no longer pursue. They are conquerors; they have been made victorious through "the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony," and they now stand, a white-robed multitude, palms of victory in their hands,—crowns of glory on their heads. No enemy is there to molest them;—nothing there to harm them. The rude waves of tribulation no longer sweep over them; there is no more shrinking from rough winds and hoarse-sounding floods.

Yes, we can almost see them now, as they stand upon that calm, crystal sea, and shout, "victory! victory!" Lo! they wave their palms; they strike their golden harps, and their glad anthems rise louder and still louder, till angels in heaven catch the strain, sweep their golden lyres, and make the vault of heaven resound with—"Worthy the Lamb!" But the angelic choir pause, while the redeemed of earth sing on—"Who giveth us the victory;" then once more the heavenly host join in full chorus of ascriptions of "praise and honor unto God."

But now let us turn earthward. The fiery indignation is over and past, a great white throne is erected on Mount Zion; the Prince of the house of David sits upon it; the robe of the priesthood has been thrown aside, and the kingly robe placed upon him; now they bring forth the royal diadem and crown him Lord of all. His face shines as the sun, and casts a light of such intense brilliancy around, that night flees before him; there is, indeed, no night there. No dusky veil or wandering film will ever stain that long, bright day of eternity.

Lone traveler Zionward, look not back upon the paradise that is lost, but look forward to the better paradise to come. Think not of the misery, pain and death the first Adam has brought upon you, but think rather of the blessedness, happiness, and eternal life, the second Adam will soon bestow. Remember that in that land, which "he that endureth to the end" shall inherit, no evil can exist. No serpent-like trail will ever be made among those ever-blooming flowers. All the direful effects of temptation, sin, and death can only go to the border of that better country.

Already the misty darkness that veils the future from our view is breaking away. We can almost catch a glimpse of the Heavenly Canaan, and, like John of Patmos, seem to stand upon the glad, new earth; while from the beautiful phase that nature has assumed, from the bright and cloudless sky, from the balmy breeze that fans the cheek,—from the beautiful flowers that bloom at the feet, and even from the very depths of the heart,—into which sin no longer strikes its terrible root, coiling around every fibre of the being,—comes the soft, sweet whisper, "No more curse."

No more curse! How we attempt to grasp the idea with our feeble minds, but in vain. When finally we shall stand on the calm, peaceful shore of lovely Beulah, and have before our minds in vivid reality those things which we now faintly imagine, then, and only then, can we realize the magnitude of the full import of these words—"No more curse."

CHICAGO RELIEF REPORT.

BRO. GRANT:—The A. C. Church of Chicago, Ills., acknowledge and report an additional receipt of money and clothing as follows:—Cash from "Sympathy," Boston, Mass., $10; Boston, Mass., 50 cts.; Philadelphia, $1; Hyde Park, Mass., $10; Hinesburg, Vt., $3.25; Adrian, Mich., $1; Waldo Co., Me., $5; clothing from Boston, Mass., and Philadelphia, one barrel each. Chelsea, one box. Wolfboro, N. H., one barrel. Lake Village, N. H., one box. This is up to Dec. 25th, 1871.

With many thanks for these favors, I would say to the kind friends everywhere, that by God's blessing our church is prospering as usual, and no longer feel like calling for relief from abroad, yet if any is sent, it shall be faithfully bestowed upon destitute ones among us. We are notified of clothing on the way to us from Washington, D. C., and Hinesburg, Vt. We pray God to bless all who have aided us in this work of relieving the suffering ones. F. BURR.

CHRISTMAS—WHEN IS CHRISTMAS DAY?

Ever since the dark ages, error has ruled over the church. Many errors have been adopted and kept alive without a shadow of truth for their support. Perhaps a few thoughts on the time of Christ's birth, and Christ's baptism, ministry and death, would be interesting to some of your readers.

Says E. Robinson—If we admit facts, and Scripture, we can get at the year, month and day of the birth of Christ. The Babylonish captivity commenced on the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 558, and the Lord said, "After seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you and cause you to return to this place" (Jer. 29: 10); as the word of God was strictly fulfilled. The commandment to restore and build Jerusalem went forth on the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 488; from this unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks, which end on the tenth day of the fifth month, B. C. 5. And in that year the tenth day of the fifth month fell on August 14th. Again, Luke (2: 8) says the shepherds were in the field with their flocks, which go out to feed after the passover in April, and are taken up before the equinox in September. Again, Christ was born the day that Cæsar Augustus caused all his realm to go up to Jerusalem to be taxed, and that was the very year that Cyrenius was governor of Syria (Luke 2: 2-12), the weather being warm enough to stay in a barn, where Christ was born. Again, the death of Herod, and the eclipse spoken of by Josephus as occurring March 13th. This all goes to show that Christmas occurred August 14th, B. C. 5. Other testimony could be given, but it is not necessary unless this is disputed.

Christ's baptism was in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar (see Luke 3: 1, 3: 23); Christ being thirty years old, was baptized August 12th, A. D. 26; for the fifteenth of Tiberius commenced in August 28th, A. D. 25. This fixes the date, as Christ must fulfill the law by beginning his ministry at thirty years of age, and as our A. D. begins when Christ was four years old (see Matt. 2: 1), in all Polyglot Bibles the account call Anno Domini is four years after Christ was born. This added to twenty-six makes the thirty years. The feast of tabernacles in A. D. 26, proves this time, as well as the time of John's baptizing. See John 1: 28-39.

The Lord's disciples commenced following him at the baptism, and it is a fact that can be demonstrated that our Lord died April 6th, A. D. 30, about the tenth hour, Jewish time. See Matt. 27: 46-49. These facts will clear our minds of many superstitious notions adhered to by our fathers, who adopted the errors of the dark ages. This so confused the mind concerning the truth; truth never suffers by investigation. Those who take the ground of the seventh-day Sabbath, claiming that Christ died Thursday, must deny the scripture that says he laid three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, to allow him to rise Saturday.

Some Protestants say that he died Friday; this would also deny the three days and three nights, to have him rise Sunday morning. The truth has been hidden by Catholic and other anti-christian powers; we should not swallow it down without knowing whether it is true or not. Ministers are in a great measure responsible for the errors handed down by the Papal church for Protestants to believe.—H. MUNGER, in Springfield Union.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Through the tender remembrance and loving kindness of Him who has promised to be a "God of the widow and the fatherless," I have received, during the past three weeks, from the kind brothers and sisters, the following: Eld. W. Shepherd, $1; O. Goodrich, Boston, $1; "A sister in bonds," Detroit, $4; J. Busch, Phila., $5; J. C. Atkins, Northford, $2.50; "One tenth to the Lord," $2.75; "The Lord's money," $1; E. A., Hartford, Conn., $2.

May the blessing of the Lord rest upon you all, dear ones. Could you know the gratitude I feel toward you, and how much you have lightened my heavy burdens, you would heartily say—"It is more blessed to give than to receive." M. E. I. HERRON.

WHO ARE THEY?—Do any of the brethren, east or west, know anything about Rev. David Wyatt and wife? Since my return from Pittsburgh, they presented themselves (Dec. 19) to Bro. and Sr. Conley, No. 81 Webster Street, Alleghany, Pa., as "Home Missionaries," alleging that they "engaged in a revival with me at Rutland, Vt." Now my memory is not apt to be treacherous, but I have no recollection of them, do not know and doubt if I ever saw them. If any body does know and they are all right, let them be commended, and if they are all wrong, let them be exposed.

FUTURE EXALTATION OF THE WORTHY.

M. A. SEYMOUR.

"Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels: and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20: 36.

The Greek and Hebrew word messenger, translated angel, sometimes refers to earthly, sometimes to heavenly beings, either good or evil (see 2 Sam. 2: 5; James 2: 25: Mark 1: 2); but many times to an order of intelligences of heavenly origin, in every way far superior to man: See Gen. 18 and 19, also Ps. 103: 20, and Matt. 28. These proof-texts will suffice on this point.

Our wise heavenly Father has proffered to the overcomer, in this trying state of probation, most exalted benefits in the coming world. These benefits not only pertain to our locality and associates, but some of them to our personality; and have special regard to a bodily transformation, or regeneration (not annihilation and new creation). This new moulding of himself, every thinking christian feels the need of; for he very well knows that a home in Valparaiso would not exempt us from continual physical ills and sorrow of heart. This most desirable change is promised on the veracity of God in 1 Cor. 15: 8, and also in our text. Without this even the fifth kingdom itself would not be very heavenly.

"Neither can they die any more." How wonderful the change that shall exempt or redeem us from death evermore, make us immortal all, and give us the velocity of angels. Mark the flight of Gabriel from the presence of God, on wings swifter than lightning, yea, as swift as thought he comes to Daniel in answer to prayer.

We shall also be potent as they in their might. One whose countenance was as the light, by the touch of his finger rolled away the ponderous stone at the door of Christ's sepulchre, and then seated himself thereon. Another slew all the first-born of Egypt in one night; and still another slew one hundred and eighty-five thousand of the Assyrian's defiant host in the nocturnal shades, utterly unperceived, so quietly was it done.

We shall be equal to them in our acuteness of vision also. Note the unmistakable correctness of those sent to Lot in Sodom; to Abraham in his tent; Hagar in the wilderness; Elijah by the brook; Daniel in the lion's den; Mary and Elizabeth, to announce the births of John and Jesus; of John on the isle of Patmos. Such instances seem to teach us that they can survey the whole habitable earth at a glance, and wing their way directly to any part of it.

They also have great mental endowment, for one gave Daniel a prophetic history of the world down through a space of more than two thousand years. It is doubtful whether a more comprehensive prophecy was ever uttered in so few words. About the year A. D. 96, the beloved John was shown by one of the wise ones the persecutions of the Lamb's followers, the rise and fall of empires one after another for hundreds of years, until the sad programme of sin, sorrow and death is ended, and the worthy enter the new-earth home, the "many mansions" pure and fair, while they sing in beauteous harmony—"Worthy is the Lamb who was slain, to redeem us" May the writer and reader be found worthy at last.

BRN. AND SRS.:—Thinking it may be of interest to you to hear of the cause in Maine, I will report a few meetings held in this vicinity of late. Held one in Litchfield with the brethren and sisters from other towns. They came filled with the Spirit of truth to labor for the lost. A number were reclaimed and many were blest. A general interest was manifested for a closer walk with God, and a preparation to meet him in peace at his coming. Brn. Wm. Doughty and Rhodes were with us to preach the word in love and union. The interest is still good in that place. We thank our dear Father for what he has done for the people in Litchfield.

At Wayne Village the Free Baptists gave us the use of their house. Storm prevented from commencing as appointed. Some came next day. The interest increased. A few came to help in the Lord. Sunday the house was filled, and all listened with interest to the many exhortations from warm hearts. Our prayer-meeting continued past twelve, when we adjourned to the water, where Bro. W. Doughty buried one sister in the likeness of Jesus' death. I thought of the lines—

"Christian, if your hearts be warm,
Ice and snow can do no harm."

In the afternoon and evening I spoke to a full house. A few were much blest. One requested prayers, that she might be a christian. I left leaving the result with the Lord, who doeth all things well.

At Lewiston the brethren commenced Tuesday evening with good interest. The cause in Lewiston is in a divided condition. Some united heartily, thank the Lord, for salvation, enough to think and let think, speak and let speak; but the worst feature anywhere is to see brethren belonging to the same church not fellowshiping each other, and withdrawing from each other; not because of difference in doctrine, but through envying and strife. We need much meekness and the Holy Ghost to walk as christians. Quite a number confessed their wanderings and were blest. The Lord will judge us in the last day. We had better be kind and good, forgiving one another, as we would be forgiven. This is the measure that will be meted to us. O Lord, give help, or we perish at last, and beg for oil when too late. Awake! arouse! let us not sleep as do others.

Brn. N. G. Reed, Wm. Doughty, and others, were with me to help. We had the Communion in the evening, and closed in hope to meet soon in the kingdom of God.

SR. R. WESTCOTT writes:—Reading a suggestion from F. H. Chamberlain in a late number of the Crisis concerning the case of L. B. Weaver, I was touched with sensations of sympathy, and my heart responded—I will try and do something for her; but I, too, am an invalid, and all that I can consistently do is so comparativey small to what I would fain do if I could, that I cannot feel content with it, and am constrained to call on the friends of humanity to say, Daughters of Zion, let me ask you in the name of my Master to look about you and examine yourselves, and see if there is not something that you can do to relieve the wants of that suffering exile and dear disciple of Jesus? Let us see to it that we do in this case as we would wish to have others do by us. How blessed and happy will that servant be who when his Lord shall come shall be found so doing. We shall soon be called to an account for our stewardship, when we shall be no longer stewards; and it may be very soon the Master will come and say to us—'Inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these my little ones, you have done it unto me.' And then I am sure we shall not be sorry if we make some sacrifice to lend a little friendly aid to a suffering child of sorrow and affliction like Luthera B. Weaver. God bless her!"

TERRIBLE EARTHQUAKES IN THE PROVINCE OF SALTA—TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF THE TOWN OF ORAN.—"Our community had no sooner recovered from the shock occasioned by the sad accident to Chicago than one almost as sad and appalling strikes home in our midst. On the 22d day of October, at 11 o'clock P. M., when most of the inhabitants of the doomed town of Oran had retired to their houses, the first shock of an earthquake was felt. The greatest terror at once prevailed, and the people rushed madly into the streets. Few had gone to bed, as for hours before a dull, rumbling sound had been heard in the distance, and all feared that it portended some unusual catastrophe. The shocks continued at intervals for nearly nine hours, during which time forty distinct movements of the earth were felt. The pavement of the street was split open, now here, now there, and the houses fell in confused heaps of ruins. There is only one death to record—that of Senor Reves—and some confusion to other parties. Most of the inhabitants rushed out to the camp after the first shock, and so saved their lives; but the once flourishing town of Oran, second in importance in the province, may be considered as totally destroyed.

Private letters from Dr. James Aguirre to his father state that the whole town disappeared in ten minutes, not a stone remaining. The inhabitants were huddled together without anything to shelter them from the burning rays of the sun, and apprehensive of fresh shocks every moment. The people of Salta are making the noblest efforts to relieve the sufferers. News has been received from the Province of Jujuy to the effect that the earthquake was felt there with violence, and that a volcano has burst out in eruption, and it is feared that subterranean movements may be expected along the whole line of the Andes.

ORAN, Oct. 13, 1871.

SIR: I write in sorrow and alarm to request that you will inform His Excellency the Governor of the Province that the town of Oran has disappeared, nothing remaining of it but ruins. The earthquake shocks commenced at 11 o'clock last night and continued till 8 o'clock this morning. Thirty-eight or forty shocks were felt in all, and it is feared that more will follow. The unfortunate inhabitants are on their knees imploring the mercy of the Almighty. The losses and injuries to persons are not yet accurately known, but everything is being done to discover if any persons have been crushed by the fallen houses or are beneath them. His Excellency the Governor must excuse my not sending him a longer report, as I am busy aiding the sufferers, and have only time for this short note. God preserve you.

A VERMILION EDICT.—The Capt. Gen. of Cuba has issued a proclamation which surpasses in cold and devilish brutality anything of which we have any record in modern times. He announces to the Cubans, and to the world, that on the 15th of next month even the present derisive offers of grace and pardon will cease; that all insurgents captured after that date will be shot; that all surrendering after that date will be condemned to perpetual imprisonment; that white women captured "in the woods," that is to say, outside of the Spanish lines, will be sent out of the country; negro women will be given up to their owners, and will be forced to wear a chain for four years We shall have to look into the history of savage tribes to find any parallel to this stolid atrocity. In its own naked horror it dispenses with all comment.—N. Y. Tribune.

☞ A WRITER from Wisconsin says:—"We have had unusually cold weather since winter set in, with little snow. Very little suffering in the burnt region exists, thanks to the bountiful charity of the whole world. The pineries are alive with teams and men, and more lumber will be cut the present winter than for many years previous, in anticipation of an increased demand from burnt Chicago the next season."

A PANIC AMONG THE NEGROES.—A letter from Beaufort, South Carolina, to the Sun, states that there is immense excitement among the negroes on Sea Island, they having been given to understand that their late masters were again to enslave them. They are arming with rifles, and threaten death to the rebels. Serious trouble is apprehended.

REVISED VERSION OF THE BIBLE.—The invitation extended by the British Committee on the Revision of the Authorized Version of the Scriptures, to American scholars, to co-operate with them in the work, has led to the organization of an American committee for that purpose. The members of it were selected from the most prominent scholars in the different denominations, and are divided into two sections, for work upon the Old and New Testaments respectively. Those who have been invited and have accepted the invitation to engage in the work upon the Old Testament are Professors Thomas J. Conant, D. D., George E. Day, D. D., John DeWitt, D. D., Wm. Henry Green, D. D., George E Hare, D. D., Charles P. Krauth, D. D., Joseph Packard, D. D., Calvin Stowe, D. D., James Story, D. D., C. V. A. Van Dyck, M. D., Taylor Lewis, LL.D. Those engaged in the New Testament division of the work are Professors Philip Schaff, D. D., H. B. Hackett, D. D., Charles Hodge, D. D., Matthew B. Riddle, D. D., Henry B. Smith, D. D., J. Henry Thayer, D. D., James Hadley, LL.D., Charles Short, LL.D., Revs. Edward A. Washburn, D. D. and Theodore D. Woolsey, D. D., LL.D., and Ezra Abbott, LL.D. A formal organization of the committee has been effected and a constitution adopted. A joint meeting of the American and British committees will be held in London, if possible, before final action.—Journal.

In Brief.

—— The hopes which had been entertained of the speedy convalescence of the Prince of Wales are again disappointed by the announcement of a troublesome tumor, which will retard, even if it does not endanger, his recovery.——Mrs. Colt of Hartford, who is noted for her munificent and constant charities, has determined to build a school for the workpeople's children, to cost not less than $60,000.——One of Cromwell's letters is said to furnish the original of the maxim in regard to the relative power of "sword and pen.' In it there is a device of a sword crossing a pen, and underneath the legend: "Two to one the feather beats the iron."——Very interesting discoveries are made in the Archæological researches now going on at Rome. The excavations about the old Forum, especially, promise to change the whole aspect of that classic centre, and probably to revolutionize its hitherto assumed topography. ——A Quebec letter says the contract for building the Great North Shore Railway between Quebec and Montreal has been awarded to New York and Boston contractors. The work will be commenced as soon as the frost is out of the ground, and the entire road will be completed in two years. The North Shore Railway will be a part and parcel of the Central Pacific Railroad.

ON the door of the Roman Catholic Chapel at Chiselhurst the following notice is posted:—Strangers are requested to observe that as the accommodation in this church is limited, they cannot be admitted during the services except on the following conditions:—1st. A fee of one shilling or two shillings must be paid according to the seat occupied. 2nd. There must be the most perfect silence and respectful behavior in the church. If strangers are not willing to comply with these conditions, they have the simple alternative of stopping away.

Who could have imagined two years ago that in so short a time the arbiter of Europe would serve merely as a source of revenue to an obscure country church in England?—Christian Union

THE FIRST QUARTERLY SESSION of the Hoosick Valley A. C. Conference will be held at Hebron, N. Y., commencing Wednesday evening, Jan. 17th, 1872, and hold over the following Sunday. The church in Hebron extends a hearty invitation to all the friends of Jesus in the surrounding country to come and labor for God and the salvation of men, and share in the comforts of their homes during this quarterly session. Let the churches of the Hoosick Valley be largely represented by delegates. Do not fail to attend to this matter. Those churches who do not represent themselves by delegates, may by letter, directed to the President. We wish to know what churches are members now, and what churches wish to become members, so that we may arrange for meetings within the bounds of this conference, where there is a demand for quarterly and protracted efforts. Those coming by railroad will stop at Rupert station, where teams will be in readiness to transport passengers to and from the meeting, free of charge.
A. W. SIBLEY, President.
A. P. BUMP, Secretary.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING of the "Woman's Christian Association" will, by invitation, be held at Charlestown, Mass., to commence on the evening of Jan. 17th, 1872, and continue over the following Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of Christ and his cause. We hope to see a goodly number from abroad. Directions to strangers will be duly given.
E. S. JENNINGS, Pres.
R. E. CHILDS, Sec.

THE MAINE north westerly quarterly conference will be held at Webb's Mills, Casco, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 18th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Come, brethren and sisters, make an effort to attend this meeting. The coming of the Lord is at hand, and what is done to save men must be done soon. Preaching brethren are especially invited.
JESSE GAY, President.
A. W. TAYLOR, Secretary.

THERE will be a protracted meeting in Litchfield, Me. (Baker school-house), commencing Jan. 11th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday. A general invitation is given all to come and help labor to save sinners. I. Damman, H. B. Sevey, Wm. Doughty, L. Rhodes.

MOTTO FOR 1872—ALL FOR JESUS.

All for Jesus! All for Jesus!
All my being's ransomed powers,
All my thoughts and words and doings,
All my days and all my hours,—
All for Jesus!
All my days, and all my hours.

Let my hands perform his bidding;
Let my feet run in his ways;
Let my eyes see Jesus only;
Let my lips speak forth his praise.
All for Jesus!
Let my lips speak forth his praise.

Worldlings prize their gems of beauty,
Cling to guilded toys of dust,
Boast of wealth and fame and pleasure:
Only Jesus will I trust.
All for Jesus!
Only Jesus will I trust.

Since my eyes were fixed on Jesus,
I've lost sight of all beside;
So enchained my spirit's vision
Looking at the Crucified.
All for Jesus!
Looking at the Crucified.

All entranced my soul, while gazing
At my Savior's matchless charms;
Falling at his feet, adoring,
Lo! he clasps me in his arms!
All for Jesus!
Clasped in my Redeemer's arms.

Oh, what wonder! how amazing!
Jesus, glorious King of kings,
Deigns to call me his beloved,
Let me rest beneath his wings.
All for Jesus!
Resting now beneath his wings.
—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

A SERMON ON SPIRITUALISM.

C. E. BARNES.

(Concluded.)

3. It is from demons or devils. The Scriptures speak of it on this wise: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils," 1 Tim. 4: 1, and in referring to these same, John says "they are the spirits of devils, working miracles." Rev. 16: 14.

In making this evident I shall prove (1.) That devils do exist. Although some christians do not hesitate to deny this, it is as consistent to believe wicked angels exist as it is to believe good ones do. It is no more a matter of wonder that wicked angels exist, than it is that wicked men do; the reasoning which satisfactorily accounts for one, will also account for the other.

As there is a source from whence all good flows, so there must be a source of evil. If it be consistent to go beyond man to trace this source of good, then it is also consistent to go beyond him in tracing our way to the source of evil. If the evil may be justly attributed solely to man's evil propensities, the same principle of logic will permit us to consider the opposite propensities as being the only source of good. The method of reasoning which leads to a denial of the existence of a personal spirit of evil, if carried out to its legitimate conclusion would also lead to a denial of the divine existence.

But to the proof. There is reason to think that prior to the creation of man, the angels were on probation, as man is now, and that some fell. Jude speaks of "the angels which kept not their first estate," v. 6, and Peter says "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell . . . . to be reserved unto judgment." 2 Pet. 2: 4. From this latter passage, we learn "the angels that sinned" are in "hell," but "hell" is here so rendered, not from gehenna, which denotes the place of future punishment, not from hades, which signifies the realm of the dead, but from tartarus, which occurs no where else in the Scriptures. Hence to learn where the demons or fallen angels are now, we must learn what is signified by tartarus as it occurs here. Dr. Wm. Ramsey, an able and learned writer, says: "The word tartarus means, according to Greek writers, in a physical sense, the bounds or verge of this material system." . . . Dr. R. remarks, 'That place is, probably, at present, within the atmosphere of our earth.' "The learned Ralph Cudworth, D. D. in his Intellectual System (vol. 3, p. 363), while speaking of Peter's remark, says:—'And by tartarus here, in all probability, is meant this lower caliginous (i. e., dark) air, or atmosphere of the earth.'

"Dr Parkhurst, the lexicographer, says:—'It appears from a passage in Lucian, that by tartarus was meant, in a physical sense, the bounds of this material creation'. . . . . Grotius, an ancient and learned writer says: 'That is called tartarus which is lowest in any thing; whether in the earth, or in the water, or, as here, in the air.'"

Thus we find tartatus, to which the fallen angels were cast down, is the exterior region of this earth. Agreeably to this we find that Jesus frequently met them, thus verifying the opinions above. In Mark 1, we find an account of one crying out "Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God." On another occasion, they said to him, "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? art thou come to torment us before the time?" Matt. 8: 29. These passages are sufficient to prove that devils are not the creatures of fancy, but veritable beings.

(2.) That anciently they controlled mediums.

In the Acts of the Apostles we read that as certain of them were on their way to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met them, and cried after them, "These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation. And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned, and said to the spirit, I command thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, to come out of her. And he came out the same hour." ch. 16: 17, 18.

As further evidence on this point I quote the ancient laws forbidding the consultation of such: "Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them." Lev. 19: 31. "A man also, or a woman, that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death." Ib. 20: 27. Thus we find by these quotations, that Spiritualism, instead of being of recent origin, is very ancient.

I proceed to show

(3.) That the ancient and modern manifestations are identical with each other. This can be proved from the Scriptures. When Moses was sent to Pharaoh, he was met with opposition by certain Egyptian soothsayers, who endeavored to counteract his influence by performing wondrous feats. In referring to the manifestations just prior to Jesus' coming, Paul speaks of certain opposers and says, "Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth" (2 Tim. 3: 8), thus identifying the ancient and modern. And further, this claim is admitted by prominent Spiritualists. "Governor Talmadge says: 'Now all the magic, the mysteries, the witchcraft, and necromancy of the ancient world . . . . are explained by these modern investigations.' Quoted from Spiritualism versus Christianity. "Mr. Putnam, also a Spiritualist, says: 'The doctrine that the oracles, soothsaying, and witchcraft of past ages were kindred to the manifestations of our day. I most fully believe.' Ib. "Charles Partridge, publisher of the Spiritual Telegraph, says of the woman of Endor, 'Call her witch, or what you please, she was a medium for the spirits.' Ib. "Mr. Brittain, editor of the Telegraph, says that 'Simon Magus, was of all men prince among the workers of spiritual miracles.' Ib."

From the foregoing, the following has been proved: First, that anciently demons possessed and influenced men and women; second, that the ancient and modern manifestations are the same in kind, even according to the admissions of the Spiritualists themselves. Therefore, it is just to conclude the modern manifestations are from demons also.

Satan has manifested himself in many different ways in trying to lead the world astray; his footprints can be traced through the records of Paganism, and more recently in the great Roman apostasy, and again in the Mahometan delusions; but his latest attempt is through the agency of modern Spiritualism. Its every steps leads directly away from the Bible, from Christianity, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, into the lowest and worst kind of Infidelity the world has ever seen, and it becomes christians to have a correct knowledge of its origin and tendency that they may not be led away by its seductions.

II. The principle of action which underlies all its phenomena.

But let us first notice more particularly than we have done, the similarity of the ancient and modern manifestations. When under influence of controlling spirits the mediums often manifest remarkable physical strength, much greater than their natural capacity. Such exhibitions are quite common, but they are not new; in Mark's gospel, we read of a man possessed by an unclean spirit that successfully resisted all attempts to confine him, even with chains; "because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces." Mk. 5: 1-4. Then too there are in the present times "seeing mediums," who become entranced and then see what purports to be a dead father, mother, brother or sister. So plainly do they see the supposed deceased that they can often describe them very minutely—but in this we have nothing new.

An instance is on record in the Scriptures of a woman living at Endor, who was enabled to "see" even in the same manner. Receiving no answer from the Lord, Saul sought out this woman who had a "familiar spirit," and desired her to bring up Samuel. And when he asked her to describe what she saw, she said, "An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle," and by the description Saul at once recognized Samuel. 1 Sam. 28. These two instances will serve to show that the modern mediums do not differ materially from the ancient ones in the manifestation of their powers. I am now prepared to enter into an examination of the principle of action, whereby these phenomena are produced. I affirm they are produced by mesmerism. A good mesmerizer, one who can completely control the will of his subject, it is well known, can cause his subject to see apparently as realities, what are merely the fancies of the controller. The mesmerizer may picture to himself the burning of Chicago, and the subject will behold it as real. The mesmerizer may mentally dwell upon the scenes of Calvary, and the subject will behold as real, Jesus dying on the cross in the midst of his enemies. Now if man has such power over the mind of his fellow-man, how much stronger must be the influence of the fallen angels!

The "seeing mediums" when beholding the supposed form of the departed, is instead thereof, seeing as real what is merely a mental vision to the controlling spirit. Thus it was the woman of Endor was operated upon; not that she had power to bring Samuel from the grave, if he be there, nor, to bring him from the realms of glory, if he be there, but the familiar spirit, knowing Saul's errand, mesmerizes his medium, and causes her to apparently see Samuel as he was when on earth.

Now if this be the solution of the "spiritual phenomena," there is no occasion for believers in the Bible to be led away by them, and that it is the true one will be plainly manifest from the following testimony of the Spiritualists themselves: Andrew Jackson Davis, in the Herald of Progress says:—"It is known that a wise and strong-minded person in the spirit-world has the power to make visible to the eyes of mortals the exact appearance of the body it wore before death. This representation is elaborated sometimes to the minutest particular, even to the reproduction of the appearance of the habiliments, etc., by which the person was characterized and identified while a resident of the earth."

"All intelligent spirits are great artists. They can psychologize a medium to see them, and to describe them, in the style which would produce the deepest impressions on the receiver. . . . They can easily represent themselves as being old or young, as in worldly dress or flowing robes, as is deemed best suited to accomplish the end of the visitation."

In the Banner of Light the following occurs:—"The correctness of communications from spirits, through trance mediums, depends upon the more or less perfect mesmeric control the spirit has of the medium or subject. We have been able to discover little difference in the control a spirit takes of a trance medium and that taken of a subject by a good mesmerizer, though undoubtedly the power of the spirit to control the medium's mind is stronger, and the will more effective in using the organs."

Here then we have the solution of the entire matter: it is "the spirits of the devils" operating upon human minds, representing themselves to be the departed dead, and thus leading to ruin and death, all that repose confidence in them.

Now what shall be done by christians? It is rapidly spreading because the masses adopt as true that which is the main plank in its platform, namely, the immortality of the human race, and that death ushers them into the life beyond.

The only way it can be successfully resisted is to meet it with the Bible in hand, teaching the mortality of the human race and their dependence upon the resurrection for a future, unending life.

God be thanked for the light which shineth from his sacred word, whereby we are enabled to shun all the pitfalls of the adversary, and be preserved blameless unto the coming of his dear Son.

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 1.

Z. S. WILLARD.

INTRODUCTION—STATE OF NATURE—GRACE—JOY OF FIRST LOVE—PIOUS PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

Sacred as are home scenes, they are not too sacred to be used for the glory of God; indeed, this is their highest exaltation. The least of all households, perhaps for interest, is ours, except, like that of Mary and Martha and Lazarus, for the Guest it has been called to entertain. The death of Lazarus would have had no more interest than the decease of many other brothers in other households, except for the fact that the "Son of God" was glorified thereby. Jno. 11: 4. The indifference of Mary to household duties, and her sister's consequent displeasure, in itself was a trivial affair, and would soon have been forgotten but for the presence of the "Master," who made it worthy of everlasting record by these words—"Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her." Lk. 10: 41.

So with us; all the interest that gathers around our household is in the doings and leadings of Jesus, "the good shepherd," who has condescended to come unto us, and make his abode with us. To us belong shame "and confusion of face"; but to Him belongeth exaltation and glory forever.

Parental instruction impressed me deeply from time to time, but it pleased God to use the ministry of his word to give the final quickening to life. Mr. Gallaher, a faithful evangelist and revival preacher of the Presbyterian order, was holding a series of meetings in the First Presbyterian church of Cincinnati, Ohio, at that time under the pastoral care of Dr. Joshua L. Wilson; and was speaking of the various excuses made by different individuals for their neglect of religion. Among others, he said, there was a class of persons harder to be reached than many others: it was those who had not done anything so very wrong; they were free from those outbreaking sins of which some others were guilty; they did not lie, steal, cheat, swear, nor break the Sabbath; therefore they could not see what they had so particularly to repent of.

I followed him closely along up to this point, and then said to myself, this is my case. I obey my parents, and try to be a good girl at school, and do not indulge in anything so very bad; therefore, I do not know what I have done that cries so loudly for repentance! But he proceeded to say: "Do not such persons know that every hour they neglect to give their hearts to God, they are sinning against him?" These words were made "the arrow of the Lord's deliverance" to my soul, to open my eyes, and to turn me from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God, that I might receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in Christ. Acts 26: 18.

My whole life now rose up before me to my condemnation and overwhelmed me with the the forbearance and mercy of God, and I resolved at once, if my life was spared, to begin to seek his face and favor.

Never shall I forget the moment when the Spirit of God flashed this great truth upon my mind how God can "be just and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus."—"Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God." Rom. 3: 25, 26.

This gave me the first ray of true comfort. I now saw the way to be saved but had not the witness that I was in that way, but this was given a few evenings after, while I tarried at the family altar, after all had risen and retired, except my beloved sister and a christian friend, who knelt again beside me, and prayed that the Lord would now give me deliverance, for I felt that I could not rise until he did. And now the blessing comes, and what a blessing.

"The opening heavens around me shine,
With beams of sacred bliss;
While Jesus shows his heart is mine,
And whispers I am his."

It is a new world to me—God is mine and I am his—reconciled in Jesus Christ; it is life from the dead, made "alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. 6: 11. O, the calm joy of that hour none can know but a sinner saved by grace! Angels know it not, for they know not the anguish of sin.

I felt now that I was in the way back to God, for I had found Jesus who said of himself—"I am the way, the truth and the light: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." Jno. 14: 6. The great question of salvation with me was, for the time, settled. I felt as perfectly saved as if I had never sinned.

I first found my dear mother, and rejoiced her heart with what the Lord had done for me; and in the morning as I entered the school-room before school-call, one of my classmates said to me—"What makes you look so happy this morning, Lizzie? I never saw you look so before." "O," said I, "Hattie, I have found Jesus, and he has forgiven me my sins, and I know he loves me;" and as I went on telling her the tears trickled down her face, which greatly surprised me, for she too loved Jesus, and I said, "O Hattie, how can you shed a tear when we have such a Savior?" As said "Mercy," after leaving the Wicket Gate on pilgrimage with "Christiana," "I made account that we had passed all danger, and that we should never see sorrow more." So it seemed to me that I never should weep, that I never should suffer again. I longed to tell the school of my joy in Jesus' forgiving love, and as it was composition morning, availed of that mode to inform my teacher, who, in turn, gave her most approving smile, and returned lines of cheer.

At this time I was sixteen years of age, attending Mr. and Mrs. Truesdell's Female Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio. As this school bore a noble part in this story of grace, we trust it will not be deemed out of place to give it a passing notice. Bright as learning, and the ability to impart it, shone here, learning was not the jewel of this school; but piety, together with her twin-sister, purity. This piety and purity were the vitalizing elements which gave life, power, and stability to the Institution.

But of all the bright scenes there, the brightest and most indelible to my mind was the worship. Every morning the whole school, numbering sometimes two hundred, was assembled in the hall, where the Principal read a portion from the blessed Bible; then we all rose to our feet, closed our eyes, and covered them with our hand or handkerchief, while his low, clear voice pervaded every part of the room, so profound was the stillness. It was here we were taught to listen to prayer. O it seemed to me that God was near, so lovingly near that I wished not to lose a word, but thus to learn, myself, to pray. Says Tupper:—

Let him see thee speak to thy God, he will not forget it afterward.
For the seeds of first instruction are dropped into the deepest furrows."

And as if to give us a parting motto for life, our teachers caused to be printed upon the longer streamer of the broad satin ribbon of blue worn by the first class at the examination at the close of their three years' term, these words:—

Science may conduct thee to Eminence.
Piety alone can guide thee to Felicity.

Thus was piety exalted in our young minds as the superexcellence of all attainment. Hence my joy that I entered this particular school. It looks now to me that it was the ebb-tide to my little barque for both worlds. Here was my mind preeminently prepared for the reception of divine grace, and while here, I became the recipient; indeed, here I found every thing that my unfolding nature required—it was the right mould at the right time.

All honor to pious teachers! they are as God-given as pious parents, and are their true yoke-fellows. The young mind, tender and pliable as clay in the hand of the potter, is placed in their charge, and receives impressions and instructions which form the character and in a great measure shape its future course. Hence we say, if to any class there be a trophy due, it is to pious teachers.

Our aim has been to lift the vail upon home scenes, only so far as a lucid setting forth of our Christian experience has made imperative.

Since yielding our hand to this work, peace and praise are our constant guests, while the following words, prophetically given to the Lord Jesus, which we appropriate in a most modified sense, come to reassure us in our fears—"For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded; therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed." Isa. 40: 7. While hidden in Jesus Christ, and having but one purpose with him, we have no cause for shame. "Yea, let none that wait on thee be ashamed: let them be ashamed that transgress without cause." Ps. 25: 3. Nevertheless we do most deeply feel our need of the sympathy and prayers of "the humble," whose hearts, we trust, will be made "glad" in this our lowly effort to honor our common Lord. "Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud." We have nothing new to set before you; it is the "old, old story of Jesus and his love," which grows richer with every testimony. "And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony." Rev. 12: 11.

Jesus found me a wandering lamb upon the cold mountains, exposed to that roaring lion that "walketh about seeking whom he may devour," and took me up in his arms as the purchase of his own precious blood, and carried me in his bosom. The tears may well fall fast as I record this blessed event. But for this Good Shepherd's love, where would I now have been? The very thought brings a shudder, and causes me to magnify his name beyond the power of language to convey, and to bless God who "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together"; and to exalt his name I lift my pen to record this story of his grace; "For by grace are ye saved, through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Eph. 2: 8. O for such grace

"Let all harmonious human tongues
His endless praises speak."

Gems.

— The rareness of christian communication argues the common poverty of holiness.

— A good conscience keeps always good cheer.

— In this troublesome wilderness, we are all stung by that fiery and old serpent; to the Savior we must look to be healed.

— Our inward disposition is the life of our actions; according to that does the God of spirits judge us, while men censure according to our eternal motions.

— It has ever been seen, that the false worshipers of God have made more pompous show, and fairer flourishes of their piety and religion, than the true.

— Many a soul has miscarried through ignorance of his enemy, which had not perished if he had well known that the weakness of satan stands in our faith.

— If there shall not be a future judgment by a just God, then has there been a past and final judgment by an almighty and an unjust devil.

— If a man is so disposed, let him be "carried away" with a good thing; only let him be careful to be carried in the right direction and not go out of sight.

— Nothing shows the love of iniquity more than the rejoicing over the fall of one whose life has reproved iniquity.

— If we have been made to feel the evil of sin, no one can persuade us that it is not an evil.

— Many a one loses the land of promise by lingering.

— Happy is that resolution that can follow God in the dark; and let him dispose of the event.

THE TRAVELER IN THE SNOW.—A traveler was crossing a mountain height alone, over almost untrodden snow. Warning had been given him that if slumber pressed down his weary eyelids, they would inevitably be sealed in death. For a time he went bravely along his dreary path; but with the deepening shade and freezing blast at night there fell a weight upon his brain and eyes which seemed to be irresistible. In vain he tried to reason with himself, in vain he strained his utmost energies to shake off that fatal heaviness. At this crisis of his fate, his foot struck against a heap that lay across his path. No stone was that, although no stone could be colder or more lifeless. He stooped to touch it, and found a human body, half buried beneath a fresh drift of snow. The next moment the traveler had taken a brother in his arms, and was chafing his hands, and chest, and brow; breathing upon the stiff, cold lips, the warm breath of a living soul; pressing the silent heart to the beating pulse of his own generous bosom.

The effort to save another had brought back to himself life, and warmth, and energy. He was a man again, instead of a weak creature, succumbing to despairing helplessness, drooping down in dreamless sleep to die. "He saved a brother, and was saved himself."—English Hearts and English Hands.

GRACE AND GLORY.—The more grace here, the more glory hereafter: the higher in grace, the higher in glory. Grace differs nothing from glory but in name; grace is glory in the bud, and glory is grace in the full; grace is glory in the flower, and glory is grace in the fruit; grace is glory militant, and glory is grace triumphant.

LINES.

E. M. FREEMAN.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Cheer thee, lonely child of sorrow,
Oft by grief and woe oppressed,
For thee there's a happy morrow,
An eternal day of rest.

In thy sorrows look to Jesus,
Cast on him thy every care,
With a pitying eye he sees us,
He our griefs and woes will share.

Soon arrayed in brightest glory
Shall the King of kings descend;
All life's ills will flee before thee,
Tears will cease and sorrows end.

O what heights of joy and rapture
Shall earth's toil-worn pilgrims know,
When from this long night of weeping
To that blissful home they go.

They shall roam the fields elysian
Angel feet ne'er yet have trod,
Which the prophets saw in vision
In the paradise of God.

Shall I on that glorious morning,
When earth's story has been told,
Hail with joy that brighter dawning?
Shall I walk the streets of gold?

Jesus, make me pure and holy,
Lead me ever by thy hand,
With thy saints let me adore thee
At the marriage of the Lamb.

THE USE OF A LITTLE TIME.—One of the hours, each day wasted on trifles or indolence, saved, and daily devoted to improvement, is enough to make an ignorant man wise in ten years; to provide the luxury of intelligence to a mind torpid from lack of thought; to brighten and strengthen faculties perishing with rust; to make life a fruitful field, and death a harvest of glorious deeds.

CANDY POISONING.

Impure candy runs through the entire range of sweets, from fruit to peppermint. The percentage of sugar ranges from 10 to 90 per cent, and the rest is made up of materials which are absolutely hurtful—deranging the stomach and all the vital organs, producing palpitation of the heart, costiveness and stone. Besides, there enter into the composition of some varieties, the oil of bitter almonds, sulphuric acid, very badly decayed cheese, and a crystallized substance resulting from the distillation of crude petroleum. Many of these candies contain at least 90 per cent of poisonous matter.

Terra alba, or white earth, enters more largely than any other ingredient into these vile mixtures. It came first as ballast from Ireland, has also been imported from France and England; and is now brought largely from Kentucky. Thousands of hogsheads of it are used every year in this country for adulterating. It is employed by the grocers who sell "doctored" sugar, which is adulterated sometimes to such an extent that three tea-spoonfuls are required to sweeten a cup of tea. It also enters largely into cheap mustard and pepper, cream-of-tartar, etc. Terra alba when first brought as ballast from Europe was considered worthless, but in an evil hour a knavish confectioner, noticing its availability as a substitute for sugar, began to use it. This "earth" is a delicate substance, which has been ground by some process of nature to powder so fine that there is no gritty sensation in the mouth when it is eaten with even 10 per cent of sugar. . . . . .

This article enters into almost every one of the 1,500 varieties of candy. In lozenges adulterations are almost universal. For instance, thirty pounds of peppermint lozenges can be made for fourteen cents a pound, so cheap are the materials employed. The other ingredients are starch, glue, and glucose. The terra alba gives them the appearance and the weight of sugar, and the starch and glue hold them together. Before terra alba came into use, the foreign substances introduced were starch, flour, and soapstone. The glue used costs a few cents a pound, while gum-arabic costs forty cents. The genuine gum-drop can be easily distinguished from the counterfeit. The genuine will stretch almost like India-rubber, while the glue drop, or that made from an extract of potatoes, will not stretch. . . . .

Candy when first made is white unless composed of the vilest materials. As it suits the public to see it colored, various cheap devices are employed as substitutes for cochineal and saffron. The red color is usually produced by amboline, which is obtained in a crystallized form from coal tar during its process of refining. A small portion of this dangerous precipitate is placed in a vessel, and a quantity of alcohol poured upon it, when it is immediately ready for use. Before it is mixed with the alcohol it is bright green, but subsequently turns a rich magenta hue. With this poisonous compound the candy is colored, and then packed for sale. Amboline is sold for $2 an ounce, and will equal in coloring strength twenty times its weight of cochineal. A green color is also made from verdigris. An amount of candy can be colored by this mixture, for fifteen cents, which it would cost $15 to color in a legitimate way. . . . .

All candies are flavored, and of these flavors many are very dangerous and some are deadly poisons. The varieties least likely to be "doctored" are clove, sassafras, and wintergreen. These oils are low-priced, and the manufacturers can afford to use them honestly. Peppermint oil is made of all grades, and that used in the low-priced candy is principally turpentine. Lemon and cinnamon are similarly adulterated, and the oil produced has a strong, hard odor, which is readily distinguishable, but when reduced to an essence and poured into the half-made candy, it adds its quota to the danger, with but slight risk of detection.

The flavors used in the higher grades of candies are still more dangerous. Fruit candies have been very extensively used for many years. The different flavors of peach, pear, pine-apple, banana, etc., are imitated with a naturalness that readily deceives the palate. The flavor of pine-apple is produced by the union of sulphuric acid and decayed cheese, and the flavors of pear, peach, and banana are obtained by a mixture into which fusel oil enters largely. This oil is produced from grain, and is known to be a great promoter of Bright's disease of the kidneys. Many ladies hardly think their day satisfactorily completed unless they have eaten a quarter of a pound of sugared almonds, or, as they are usually called, "sweet almonds." To such it may be interesting to know that the flavor of the almond is often produced by the oil of bitter almonds—a poison of which a very small quantity would serve to destroy life.

The consequences of eating even sparingly of these noxious compounds cannot be overestimated. Many diseases which torment adults are known to date their origin from the sweet things consumed in childhood. The newspapers occasionally discover an instance which shows that candy has been instrumental in killing some child; but the majority of such cases are considered mysterious providences.

EXERCISE FOR SEDENTARY PEOPLE.—It is a law of our nature that we must have exercise, and although we can live longer without it than we can without food or air, still it is just as necessary to perfect health. Those who cannot get a sufficient amount in their occupation, or in other natural ways, must adopt some artificial mode of obtaining it, or their health will suffer materially and permanently. Almost any of the different kinds of exercise are good, if judiciously practiced. The Indian clubs constitute one of the best pieces of apparatus for exercising and developing the upper half of the body. The dumb bell is good, but far inferior to the club. Lifting, when carefully and systematically practiced, is an excellent mode of exercise, but there are few that will practice it methodically enough to derive great benefit from it, unless they are under the direction of a good teacher. . . . .

Sedentary persons should also take some kind of out-door exercise daily, of which walking is one of the best. Rowing is excellent, and in connection with walking constitutes a very complete exercise. The time for taking exercise may, and must be varied somewhat, to suit circumstances. An hour or two before dinner is perhaps the best time. Most persons would be benefited by a half hour's walk or row before breakfast. No very active exercise should be taken soon after eating. The amount of exercise necessary to health varies as much with different persons as the amount of food eaten. No one should give less than an hour a day to physical exercise, and most persons would be benefited by more. Much, however, depends upon the kind of exercise, and the spirit with which it is entered into.—Herald of Health.

HEALTH VERSUS FASHION.—A distinguished Paris physician says: "I believe that, during the twenty years I have practiced my profession, twenty thousand children have been carried to the cemeteries, a sacrifice to the absurd custom of exposing their arms. Put the bulb of a thermometer into a baby's mouth, and the mercury rises to ninety degrees. Now carry the same to its little hand; if the arm be bare, and the evening cool, the mercury will sink to fifty degrees. Of course, all the blood that flows through these arms must fall from ten to forty degrees below the temperature of the heart. Need I say, when these currents of the blood flow back to the chest, the child's vitality must be more or less compromised? And need I add that we ought not to be surprised at its frequent recurring affections of the tongue, throat and stomach? I have seen more than one child, with habitual cough or hoarseness, entirely relieved by simply keeping the hands and arms warm."

ALLIE'S DOLLAR.

"Ninety-five, ninety-six, ninety-seven, ninety-eight, ninety-nine, one hundred," counted Allie.

"Ah, mother! I've got a dollar—a whole dollar! haven't I?"

Allie's mother answered that she had.

"And papa said, when my pennies got to be a dollar, I might spend it just as I pleased; didn't he, mother?"

"I believe he did," answered Mrs. Raymond, smiling at her little daughter's eagerness.

"Oh, won't it be nice!" cried Allie. "What shall I get?" There's so much to buy, you know; and I don't know what I want most."

"Think of how you could do the most good with it," said Mrs. Raymond. "You can use your money in such a way that it will do good to yourself, and to others at the same time."

"O mother!" cried Allie, in her impulsive way, "there's little Prue Wells! She can't go to Sunday-school because she hasn't got any dress warm enough. She wears her calico dress to school; and her mother washes it Saturday night, and she wears an old one Sundays, because her good one isn't dry. My dollar would get her a real nice, warm, delaine dress, and then she could go to Sunday-school every week. May I get her address, mother?"

"I am perfectly willing," answered Mrs. Raymond. "You couldn't use your dollar in a better way I think."

That afternoon Allie went down to the store and selected a pretty red-and-black delaine.

"How surprised Prue will be!" she kept thinking. She was so excited when she reached Widow Wells little cottage, that she fairly ran up the path, and could hardly stop to knock.

Prue opened the door herself.

"Oh, Prue!" cried Allie, almost out of breath, "there's a present for you! See how you like it."

Prue wonderingly opened the bundle.

"You don't mean that this is mine, do you?" cried she, holding up the pretty cloth, and looking at Allie, who was enjoying her surprise in great delight.

"Of course I do," answered Allie. "I got it on purpose for you. Ain't it pretty?"

"O! it's the prettiest dress I ever had," answered Prue, hugging it up closely, as if it were a doll. "I don't know how to thank you for it."

"I'm satisfied if you are," answered Allie, and ran down the path again. The next Sunday Prue made her appearance at the Sunday school in the warm and pretty new dress; and Allie felt how true that passage in the Bible is that says, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Selected.

THE LORD'S LITTLE ERRANDS.

"I was kept in Sabbath-school by a gentleman who was always out on the Lord's errands. If he missed me, he would come and hunt me up. If I was playing on the railroad track, he found me. If I was lounging on the wharves, he found me. There was no escape from him; so I gave in at last, and came to Sabbath-school regularly, and there I found the Lord. And now that I am the Lord's I'll see if He has not some little errands for me to do too."

This is what a young man said the other day; and I know that he is as good as his word. In his spare moments he helps out a neighborhood prayer-meeting, visits a sick-room, goes with a friendly word to a poor man. Ah, there are a great many ways to go for the Lord.

And has he not errands, little errands at least, for us all to do, and which all can do?

I know a boy who has just denied himself the pleasure of sucking a "splendid" orange, for the sake of carrying it to a poor sick boy around the corner.

Fanny stopped in during a long recess on a very pleasant day to show a dull scholar how to do her arithmetic lesson.

Gussie brought four new scholars into Sabbath school.

Sarah goes every Wednesday and Saturday afternoon to read the Bible or some other good book to a blind girl.

These, and others like them, are some of the Lord's little errands which the children can go and do.

HONESTY AND GENEROSITY.—A man was carrying some peaches contained in baskets covered with cloth and swung over his shoulder. By some means one of the covers became loosened and some of the peaches rolled down upon the pathway, and the man went on without knowing the loss. A poorly dressed boy, about ten years old, who was walking a little way behind, observed them, and at once ran and picked them up. We expected to see him put them in his pocket and run away, but we had mistaken his character. "Here! here!" he shouted to the man, who stopped, and the honest little fellow restored him his fruit. He was rewarded with one of the finest of the peaches, but just then he met two companions and divided his peach with them. We could but look upon him with respect, ragged and dirty as he was. The part of the peach he had for his own portion, was sweetened by honesty, by kindness and generosity, and was more luscious than the most costly fruit could have been if obtained dishonestly.

IT is only by the habit of representing faithfully all things, that you can truly learn what is beautiful and what is not.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE DAY IS NEAR.

S. S. BREWER.

All hail! the day is near,
When our triumphant Head
In glory will appear,
To wake his sleeping dead.

What if some long have lain
Death's captives in the grave?
The Conqueror comes again,
In power and might to save.

The saints in death's domain
Shall hear his mighty voice,
And rise with Christ to reign,
Then evermore rejoice.

Lord, help us now to live
Obedient to thy word,
And when thou com'st may we
"Be ever with the Lord."

THE PROPHETIC PERIODS.—No. 3.

DANIEL 8th AND 9th CONSIDERED.

D. CLOW.

But what shall we say of the "king of fierce countenance and understanding dark sentences" (Dan. 8: 23), who stands up against the "Prince of princes"? Be patient, and we will give you our opinion of the matter, as briefly as possible.

First, we do not believe that it relates to the little horn or the Romans at all, for very obvious reasons; the first of which is, that there is no necessity for departing from the universally adknowledged rule of interpretation. The literal sense is, therefore, to be taken of the said text.

Second, the Roman government never did stand up against the Prince of princes in any other sense than you and I have stood up against him—by transgression. It is true, indeed, that he was put to death by Roman soldiers, but that does not change the facts at all. He was tried, indeed, before a Roman governor, and I am glad of this, as I want his testimony to show that Rome never did stand up against the Prince of princes, even in the most remote sense; nay, in no way, shape, or manner.

In order to make out a case against the Roman government, it must appear that he was tried and condemned under Roman laws, and that can never be done. He was tried and acquitted under the Roman law, and then taken and brutally murdered by his own people under a pretext of a violation of their own law. Hear them—"We have a law, and by our law he ought to die." But there was nothing found against him even under their own criminal code to justify a conviction; nor was he ever condemned under any law. He was simply given over (through fear) to a murderous mob, who took him and crucified him under the solemn protest of the Roman governor who tried him, and against the laws of the land. The governor commanded water to be brought, and "he washed his hands before all the people, and publicly declared himself "innocent of the blood of that just person." "Then answered all the people and said, His blood be on us and on our children." And God took them at their word, and has ever held them responsible for the bloody deed, and not the Roman government.

To illustrate. A man is charged with a capital crime here in our own country, and under our own laws. He is arraigned to answer his indictment. The witnesses are called upon the stand and sworn; the court and jury listen with profound attention to all they have to say, and are satisfied that every word is false—that the whole thing was conceived in hatred and malice. And now the court openly declares that it "finds no cause of death in him, and the jury say, "Not guilty." Now the laws are justified. The government has discharged its duty, and is not responsible for what may follow. If the rabble clamor for his life; nay, if the court and jury join in with them and murder the victim, the government is not responsible for the unlawful act in any sense.

I think that I have set the matter in its true light, and fairly acquitted the Roman government of the crime of "standing up against the Prince of princes," and putting him to death. As it will be required of me to tell who the "king of fierce countenance" is, I shall have to beg your patience once more. I will commence with the negative view first. It can not relate to a kingdom, without violating the common rule of interpretation. Nay, I charge you to bear this in mind, as it is enough of itself to disprove the popular view of the said text. Mark, it is not said that the said little horn is this said "king of fierce countenance"; as it is said of the ram, that it was the kings of Media and Persia; and of the goat, it "is the king of Grecia." Then it follows that we are to understand it in a literal sense, and meaning a king.

We must not fancy, because the "little horn" symbolizes the Roman Empire, that the "king of fierce countenance" signifies the same thing. Nor does it follow, because the little horn succeeds the "four notable ones," that it should succeed in the explanation of the vision. Nay, the little horn power, or the Roman kingdom, had been very elaborately explained in the former part of the vision; whereas its predecessors had not been explained at all, beyond the simple declaration that they were kingdoms.

Again, "a king of fierce countenance" will not apply to the Romans in any better sense (in that day) than to the Grecians, the Syrians, and the Parthians, if it relates simply to military fierceness and desperation. "And understanding dark sentences" will not apply to the Romans, as well as to the Grecians, if it relates to the wisdom and the sciences of the world; as they borrowed their literature from the Grecians. Nay, nay, the said text relates to a literal king, a political demagogue and tyrant, an unscrupulous and uncompromising prince, a subtle, political intriguer, a successful political aspirant and demagogue, a man of blood—a weak and subordinate prince, in himself considered, but mighty in power, with a borrowed sword in his hand, and clothed with Roman authority.

As to the little horn, his power was his own, as much so as any other nation upon earth. Nay, the Romans never went begging for power, and they seldom ever invited their allies to aid them in their wars. Can it be possible, then, that the said text relates to Rome? Nay, it does seem to me that prejudice must yield to such obvious facts as these. But I am aware that, in the midst of conflicting views, there are many who cannot see the point so clearly. What an idea; the great Roman Empire standing up against the meek and lowly Jesus! What could be more ridiculous? What so strangely inconsistent with the character of a mighty prince, or empire? What could be its motive? Was he exciting a spirit of rebellion among the people? Was he kindling a flame of civil war against the Romans? Nay, indeed, but he told them to render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. And the Roman governor testified to his innocence when he said, "I find no fault in him." Then it follows that the Roman government never did stand up against the Prince of princes in any way, shape, or manner. "And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power."

Now if this relates to the great Roman empire, and at a time when all the nations of the earth were tributary to them, what, in the name of kind heaven—I reverently ask—can this text mean? If the power of the Romans was not their own, whose was it? To say that it was power derived from the Almighty, would be a mere subterfuge, and unworthy of notice; for we know that all power flows from him. Nay, nay, the meaning of the said text is, that the said king would be tributary and dependent upon another power. That he would derive his power from his superiors. That he would be recognized and known by his fierceness in political strife, and understanding the spirit that governs the people of the earth, and the destiny of nations. That he would be a great statesman and successful legislator, and withal a dreadful tyrant. "He shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice; and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." At the siege of Jerusalem, by Herod and Sosius, the Roman General, the slaughter was terrible, and only equalled in the destruction of the city by Titus. "And by peace shall destroy many." This is a very significant text, and implies that the said Prince, in the midst of profound peace, would destroy many. "He shall also stand up against the Prince of princes, but he shall be broken without hand."

Now every feature of this peculiar specification will apply to no other king or kingdom upon earth but to Herod the Great. And it will apply to him in every sense of the word. He was a king literally. He was recognized as a great statesman and political intriguer. Possessing the faculty of deceiving his friends and foes alike, and retaining the reins of government under the most discouraging circumstances, when the mightiest influences upon earth were exerted against him. By peace (in the time of peace) he did destroy many, and through policy, too, he did cause craft to prosper in his hands. And he did magnify himself in his heart. Nay, he was one of the most vain and self-conceited Princes that ever cursed the earth. And he did stand up against the Prince of princes in the most literal sense. And he was broken without hand.

No human hand was stained with his blood. God himself poured out his judgments upon him, and he "died under circumstances of the most loathsome character." "A premature report of his death caused a tumult in Jerusalem, excited by the zealots, who were impatient to demolish a golden eagle which he had placed over the gate of the temple. The perpetrators of this rash act were seized, and, by order of the dying king, put to death." "At the same time he ordered his son Antipater to be slain in prison. He had previously murdered his wife, and several sons." "At times he would fly from the sight of men, and on his return from solitude, which was ill suited to a mind conscious of the most ferocious deeds, he became more brutal than ever, and in fits of fury spared neither foes nor friends."—Encyclopedia.

The marvelous wisdom and shrewdness of this king may be seen in his address to Cæsar, after the battle of Actium. (See Josephus B. 1, c. 20); and in commanding the respect of Augustus and the whole Roman Senate, who not only appointed him king of the Jewish nation, but greatly enlarged the borders of his kingdom. Nay, whatever he desired was at his command. And Josephus tells us that "Cæsar had only one friend that he preferred before him, and that was Agrippa." And it follows, therefore, that his "power was mighty, but not by his own power." The power of the whole Roman empire stood at his door, and moved at his bidding. Again, we have a very fair exhibit of the said king's subtlety and wisdom in defeating the plans of Cleopatra, his most deadly enemy, and at the same time Antony's wife; she, the most cunning, subtle, and cruel of her sex upon earth. But she did not "understand the dark sentences." "And he shall destroy wonderfully."

We have hinted at some two or three of the cruel deeds of the said king, and if time and the limits of this article would allow, we might go on ad infinitum with the details of his crimes. But one more must suffice. Turn your thoughts to Bethlehem, and listen to the mournful lamentations of Rachel, weeping for her children, and tell me if the said king had not a fierce countenance. Nay, tell me if he did not destroy "the people of the holy ones," the babes of Bethlehem. "By peace he shall destroy many"; i. e., in the midst of peace and prosperity, when there was no occasion for human slaughter, nor signs of political strife in the nation. Tell me too, if he did not "stand up against the Prince of princes"? I will appeal to the mothers of those innocent little victims in "Bethlehem and all the coasts thereof"; and to "Rachel weeping for her children. In Rama was there a voice heard; lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning; Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they were not."

In the midst of profound peace and prosperity, the Temple of Janus closed, and no casus belli to justify a civil war, this fierce monster sends forth Roman soldiers (a power not his own), to snatch the innocent little victims from the mother's arms—wild with agonizing despair—and lugging them away to the common slaughter house, like wild basts of the forest, where this monster of monsters sat to witness the flowing tide of human blood, and, with the fierceness of a tiger, to feast upon the horrid sight. Not, indeed, for crimes that any had committed, was this horrid destruction of human life; but it was to feast a fierce monster on human flesh and blood, in the vain hope of slaying a rival king, in the person of the promised Messiah. Did he not stand up against the "Prince of princes"? Could there be a more signal standing up than this?

Nay, in this we find a motive of the greatest magnitude, and one, too, that has ever been the cause of the rise and fall of empires. Secret societies were formed, and divers plans matured to assassinate this cruel creature; but being jealous of all men, "having a fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," he had his secret informers in every part of the land, who defeated all their plans, and they were slain at the single suggestion of the tyrant. No man could survive long when suspected of meddling with public matters without his knowledge and consent. At times, however, he would lavish hypocritical kindness upon the people to secure their respect and friendship; and at others again he would pour out his ferocious nature upon friends and foes alike.

Josephus tells us of an incident that transpired while on his death bed. "He gathered together the most illustrious men of the whole Jewish nation, out of every village, into a place called the Hippodrome, and there shut them in. He then called his sister Salome and her husband, Alexas, and made this speech to them: 'I know well enough that the Jews will keep a festival upon my death. However, it is in my power to be mourned for on other accounts, and to have a splendid funeral, if you will but be subservient to my will. Do but you take care to send soldiers [not his own power] to encompass these men that are now in custody, and slay them immediately upon my death, then all Judea will weep at it, whether they will or no." "He magnified himself in his heart," even on his way to the region of the damned. Then there remains but one more item in the specification to harmon izewith the reign of this king, and that relates to the time he "stands up." "And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up." Dan. 8: 23.

Gabriel, in explaining the vision, says "the ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia; and the rough goat is the king of Grecia. And the great horn that is between his eyes, is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation." And in the latter time of their kingdom, the said king, with a fierce countenance, stands up. As there is a diversity of opinion about what four kingdoms are meant, we would simply remark that it makes but little or no difference who they were, so far as the said king is concerned. All that we want to know is that he began to stand up before all became tributary to Rome. All concede that Syria and Egypt constituted two of the said four kingdoms. And Egypt was the last to succumb to Roman dictation. B.C. 31. Now Herod was born B. C. 71, made governor of Galilee at the age of fifteen years—if Josephus is correct—B. C. 56. Then it follows that Herod began to stand up in the latter time of their kingdom.

Thurman believes that Rome was one of the four grand divisions of Grecia, and I am inclined to believe he is correct. But now a query arises: If Rome is one of the said divisions, how can she answer to the little horn in Dan. 8: 9? I answer, very easily. Rome lost her identity, as one of the four kingdoms, in her transit to imperialism, and the supremacy of the world, through the revolution that forever destroyed republican Rome; upon the ruins of which, the empire arose under Cæsar Augustus, B. C. 28. And this was the beginning of "the little horn." A little before this, however, B. C. 40, Herod was reappointed king of Judea. Still in the "latter time of their kingdom." "And out of one of them came forth a little horn." This must be understood in the same sense that we understand the four kingdoms standing up out of the nation. Dan. 8: 22 And there is only one logical construction of this text, i. e., immediately succeeding the death of Alexander, his empire was broken into four grand divisions, and so four kingdoms stood up out of the nation. To use a vulgar expression for illustration, four new kingdoms were manufactured out of the old empire. And so with the little horn, "out of one of them, came forth a little horn." The old republican Rome was transformed into a new and mighty empire, B. C. 31.

But mark, I do not understand that the said little horn must rise in the latter time of their kingdom by any means at all. The little horn succeeds the four horns in the same way that the four horns succeeded the great horn. The trouble has been in confounding the little horn, with the "king of fierce countenance." It must be remembered that Rome did not grow up like a mushroom in one night. Over two hundred years before Babylon fell into the hands of the Medes and Persians, the Romans were a well organized nation. But, like all contiguous nations, she fell under the dominion of the Medes and Persians, and of the Grecians; and when the great horn was broken, she fell into the western or Macedonian division. And from that time onward a perpetual war existed among all those nations till Rome obtained the ascendency, subsequent to the inauguration of Cæsar Augustus, when ancient republican Rome ceased to exist, and the empire arose upon its ruins. This was the epoch of the little horn. Nay, it could not be cotemporaneous with the four horns in any better sense than the "dreadful and terrible beast" (Dan. 7: 7) could be cotemporaneous with the leopard beast. The four great empires arose in the order of the vision. When Babylon fell, the Medes and Persians took the empire. When the Medes and Persians fell, the Grecians took it. When the Grecians fell, the Romans came into power. Nay, I cannot understand how the little horn (Rome imperial) could exist in the midst of, and in the time of, the said four horns; I can understand very well, however, how the Romans could. The little horn was a symbol of a universal, and not a fractional empire. It could not coexist with the four horns. I am aware that many will insist that the little horn began to develope itself in the latter time of the four horns. In the same sense that the ram began to develope itself in the latter time of the Chaldeans, and the goat in the latter time of the two horns of the ram, and the four horns in the latter time of the "great horn," I grant that it did, and in no other sense. To say that the "king of fierce countenance" is identical with the little horn, simply because it comes next in order in the explanation of the vision; and not regarding the fact that the little horn was previously largely explained in the 9th to the 12th verse of the same chapter, seems to me to be a very great error. It matters not what transpired between the Jews and the Romans previous to the organization of the Roman empire, as it relates to the rise of the little horn, any more than what transpired between the Parthians and the Jews, or the Syrians and the Jews, or the Macedonians and the Jews. Long subsequent to Pompey's siege and capture of Jerusalem, the Parthians besieged and took it, and appointed Antigonus governor. So it is a mere piece of folly, to try to establish the vision upon such a weak basis as the taking of Jerusalem by Pompey. It is not required. Nay, its absolutely inadmissible and illogical.—Upon the fall of Babylon, the ram came up. Upon the fall of the ram, the goat came up. Upon the fall of the great horn of the goat, the four horns came up. Upon the fall of the four horns, the little horn came up. Nor must we suppose that the body of the goat was destroyed, when the great horn was broken. The leopard had four heads, and these heads answered to the said four horns of the goat. The great horn being broken, "Whereas four stood up [mark the language] for it, but not in his power," meaning just what it says, not "in his power." Now his power was the four united into one. "In union there is strength," and weakness is the result of division. It was not in his power or integrity. Again, can we say, in any degree of logical sense, that the fourth great empire merged into the third, and co-existed with it? Nay, it is out of all harmony with the vision, and should not be thought of a moment.

But a "king of fierce countenance" could "stand up in the latter time of their kingdom" with the greatest propriety and in the most literal sense. What was it that distinguished the Medes and Persians from the Babylonians? It was the possession of the empire. What was it that distinguished the Grecians from the Medes and Persians? It was the possession of the empire. What was it that distinguished the Grecians in their divided form from the Romans, or the little horn? It was the possession of universal empire. And that was not acquired until subsequent to B. C. 31, when the last of the four horns was brought in subjection to the Romans. This was the epoch of the little horn, and no criticism can weaken this view of the case. Nay, it is invulnerable in every feature.

Subsequent to the conquest of Jerusalem by Pompey B. C. 63 (as I have before stated) the Parthians besieged and took Jerusalem, and appointed the high priest and governors of Judea. And Herod fled into Idumea, and thence to the Romans for protection. Then it follows that Rome was excluded, and had not yet attained to the supremacy of universal empire. Now, about B. C. 38 the Romans expelled the Parthians, and put Herod in full possession of the whole country "in the latter time of their kingdom." But mark you, she had not yet acquired the reins of government over all the four grand divisions of Grecia; and she could not, therefore, claim the title of "the little horn." "In the year B. C. 28 Cæsar Octavianus, nephew to Julius Cæsar, with the assent of the senate and people of Rome, assumed the title of emperor, at which time the government among the Romans was legally changed from a republic into a monarchy." This was the epoch of the little horn, and "the transgressors—the Jews—having come to the full," they now pass under its power altogether.

Previous to this the Jews were allowed to govern themselves, under their own peculiar laws, and to appoint their high priests and subordinate civil functionaries; and their treaty stipulations with the Romans, as also with the Parthians, were mainly of mutual friendship and international commerce. Dan. 8: 12—"The host was given over for the transgression against the daily sacrifice" (margin.) It seems that this is pointed and positive enough to settle the controversy as to what constitutes "the daily," or "the daily sacrifice." It was the sacrificial law. And Josephus says, that this was called the "daily sacrifice" And this view of the case renders the whole thing consistent and harmonious. The religion of the Jews had become corrupted with Paganism, the high priesthood associated with the title of king, and all the subordinate branches of government corrupted with idolatry. "The holy theocracy, or divine government, had been suspended; and now follows the profane and tyrannical Jewish monarchy, first of the Asamoneans, and then of Herod the Great, the Idumean, till the coming of the Messiah."

Immediately upon the organization of the Roman empire (B. C. 28), Cæsar Augustus, in addressing a mandamus to the Macedonians and others, to restore the silver and the gold that they had plundered of the Jews, and to allow them to enjoy their own laws and customs, uses the following language—"Cæsar Augustus, high priest and tribune of the people, ordains thus." Now this shows at a glance how the little horn "magnified himself" even to the Prince of the host, what the dignity of the high priesthood was, and the extent of the corruption that had crept into the Jewish religion. Nay, "the transgressors had come to the full, and they were now given over into the hands of the little horn. "Magnify himself even to the Prince of the host," means that he will exalt himself, and make himself equal with the Prince of the host, and the language of Cæsar Augustus shows conclusively that he recognized in the office of the high priesthood, a title that was at once honorable, enviable, and dignifying. And hence he "magnified himself even to the prince of the host."

I know that many will insist that "the Prince of the host" relates to the Savior, and that the little horn magnified himself against him in crucifying him; not regarding the sense and meaning of the word "magnify." And hence we deem it quite important in this connection to give Webster's definition in full—"Magnify," first, "to make great or greater; second, to make great in representation; to extol; to exalt in description or praise. The embassador magnified the king and queen. Third, to extol, to exalt, to elevate, to raise in estmation. The Lord magnified Solomon exceedingly. To magnify one's self; to raise one's self in pride and pretentions." "He shall magnify himself in his heart."—Dan. 8."

I would avoid boasting in this matter, as that is not my style of discussing a question of this magnitude. But I would respectfully invite the most acute criticism here, and if I err in judgment, I hope to be corrected by some kind friend, whose only motive shall be the glory of God, and the advancement of light and truth. Let us apply Webster's definitions to the little horn, or the Roman empire. And in the first instance allow me to ask you how the said empire magnified itself, or made itself "great or greater," in any thing that transpired between it and the meek and lowly Jesus, "who made himself of no reputation, and took upon himself the form of a servant"? How did the said horn "exalt itself in pride" in any thing that transpired between it and the humble Nazarene? Was it in their total ignorance of his existence upon earth? Was the blessed Son of God an object of envy in any way, shape, or manner? What motive could the said horn have in standing up against him? Without a motive no intelligent mind can act. Again, the said "king of fierce countenance" was to be broken without hand; whereas the little horn was broken with bloody hands many years ago; and for it the ten horns came up, then another little horn; and subsequently a multitude of others.

The little horn (Dan. 8) symbolized a consolidated universe, and not a fractional empire. Rome, in her divided form, was not Rome in her consolidated form, by any means at all. The little horn, like the "great horn" of the goat, and the two horns of the ram, was broken, and for it came up ten horns, and then a little horn again; all of which were fractional parts of the first little horn. Do we see clearly that the said little horn was broken? not without hands however. In the foregoing remarks we have aimed to show that the ninth chapter of Daniel is simply an extension of the eighth, and this, we think, is fully accomplished in the fact that the little horn of the eighth, and the people of "the Prince that shall come" of the ninth, are one and the same thing. The seventy weeks are indeed presumptive evidence of the said connection. But the facts that exist in relation to the fulfillment of the said horn, by the people of the said prince, leave no room for presumption. Nay, they establish the said connection, and the covenant of 2300 days, as plainly and positively as one fact can establish another.

Janesville, Wis.

— As flowers carry dewdrops, trembling on the edges of the petals, and ready to fall at the first waft of wind or brush of bird, so the heart should carry its beaded words of thanksgiving; and at the first breath of heavenly favor, let down the shower, perfumed with the heart's gratitude.

THE DAILY SACRIFICE.

J. S. WHITE.

Bro. Leslie asks for an exposition of a part of the eleventh of Daniel, commencing with the twentieth verse, and closing with the 30th.

The key to this prophecy is in the thirty-first verse,—"And arms shall stand on his part, and they [the arms] shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." This is a part of the explanation of the vision which Daniel had before Gabriel was sent to make him understand. After his vision in the eighth, Daniel said—"I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai, which called and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision."

If Gabriel did do as he was commanded, he did make Daniel understand it. The angel explained it in part at that time, and left him. Daniel said, "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." As the angel did not make Daniel understand it fully at his first visit, he must make him another visit to finish his explanation, and do as he was told—"Make this man to understand the vision."

His next visit is noted in the ninth chapter. Daniel said—"Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision."

I claim that Gabriel did do as he was told, and did do what he told Daniel he came to do; that he was sent to make him understand the vision, and that he did make Daniel understand it, not partially, but fully. To say the contrary, would be to say that Gabriel did not obey his orders, and that he did not do what he told Daniel he came to do. Daniel did not intimate, after Gabriel came to him the second time, that he did not understand the vision perfectly.

While the angel was explaining this vision, Daniel had another vision, as recorded in the twelfth chap. While he was having this last vision, the angel stopped his explanation, to let Daniel see and hear what he did. It was this vision Daniel said he did not understand, and the angel did not explain it to him in any form. When Daniel asked him about it, he told him to "Go thy way." As much as to say, I am not at liberty to give you any explanation of this. I was sent to explain the vision you had before I came, and this is what I told you at my second visit. I was not told to explain any vision you might have after I told you to understand the matter and consider the vision. It is therefore clear that Gabriel did not give Daniel any light on the vision of the twelfth chapter.

After Daniel had seen this vision, Gabriel went on with the vision he was told to make Daniel understand. I have said thus much to show, that whether we understand the vision of the eighth chapter or not, Daniel was made to understand it. Gabriel was faithful to the command, "Make this man to understand the vision." This being true, Daniel knew what the angel meant by "the daily sacrifice," in the thirty-first verse of the eleventh chapter. It is the daily sacrifice I propose to notice.

Some say as "sacrifice" is a supplied word, it may, and should, be left out. If so, why do they use it when they try to make out their argument? They say "daily" refers to the pagan, or to the true, worship of God. But, daily what? Why, either the daily sacrifices the pagans offer to their gods, or the daily sacrifices which true believers offer to God. Now if the word should not be in the text, then be consistent and leave it out altogether. Does the word refer to paganism, or to the pagan worship? It is claimed that the power which was to take away the daily is the Roman power. If the daily belongs to paganism, I inquire, when did the Roman power take it away? Goodrich says in his History of the World, that the reign of Theodosius is distinguished by the total abolition of heathen idolatry, and the establishment of the Christian religion throughout the Roman empire, and that he died A. D. 395. Gibbon says that twenty-eight years after the death of Theodosius paganism was not known in the Roman empire. This makes the extinction of paganism too early for those who apply the word "daily" to that worship. How is it possible that Daniel could understand that paganism was referred to by the "daily"? and especially after the angel said to him, "Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days." Chap. 10: 14.

If the word is applied to the true religious worship of the Gentile church, I ask, was that ever taken away? If so, when and how was it done? If an edict by the Romans against religious worship is the taking away of that worship, it has been taken away many times. This was done in the days of the apostles. After their day, in the reign of the Roman emperors in the first three centuries, there were ten such edicts, followed by violent persecutions, in which thousands, and in all these persecutions millions, of the believers in Christ were put to death. Constantine, who was the first Roman emperor that professed faith in Christ, in 337 issued an edict against all who would not subscribe to the orthodox faith. He banished Arius, and ordered that the books written by the Arians should be burnt, that there might remain to posterity no vestige of their doctrine; and to complete the climax, enacted that if any should dare to keep in his possession any book written by Arius, and should not immediately burn it, he should no sooner be convicted of the crime than he should be put to death. See Jones' Church History.

In 453, in the time of Leo the Great, Bishop of Rome, there was one of the most cruel persecutions against a portion of the church by another portion that we have in history. Bowers says, "This commission was executed with a cruelty hardly to be matched in history." This persecution was carried into Jerusalem and other cities of Palestine. In the reign of Justinian and onward edicts were passed against those who would not subscribe to the orthodox faith, as it was called. These edicts and persecutions did not take away the worship of God. It is truly said that "the blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the church."

True religion has never shone brighter than in great persecutions. If some, and even many, are killed, others still live. The true worship of God has never been taken away. In Elijah's day, though he thought all the saints were killed, God said he had reserved seven thousand that had not bowed the knee to Baal. Prohibiting the worship of God in one place, only makes it shine brighter in another. The worship of God has never been taken away, neither can it be. Though the good man is killed, his religion is not taken away. Abel's blood cried to God from the ground.

The "daily" was to be taken away. If taken, it would not be left; it would be gone. How is it possible that Daniel could understand the "daily" meant the worship of God by the Gentile church? The "daily" occurs first in this prophecy, in the eighth chapter and eleventh verse. "Yea, he magnified himself to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down."

The "daily" must have been something which Daniel understood as belonging to his people. The angel did not tell Daniel, while explaining the vision, what the "daily" meant, which he would have done if Daniel had not known; for he was to make him understand the vision. The Jews, Daniel's people, did have a daily sacrifice. It was required in their law. Exodus 29: 38, 39—"Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the altar; two lambs of the first year day by day continually. The one lamb thou shalt offer in the morning; and the other lamb thou shalt offer at even." Num. 28: 3—"This is the offering made by fire which ye shall offer unto the Lord; two lambs of the first year without spot day by day, for a continual burnt offering." Paul, in referring to this daily offering, calls it a sacrifice. Heb. 7: 27—"Who needeth not daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice." I think the translators have used the right word in saying "daily sacrifice." Some tell us that "daily" is continual. If they prefer this word, they should be told that the "daily" is so called in a passage already cited.

The "daily" was a continual offering, and it was a daily sacrifice, as the apostle calls it. Daniel understood that this vision related to his people, as his prayer in the ninth chapter shows, and as the angel showed him by saying, "I have come to show thee what shall befall thy people in the latter days." Daniel, therefore, understood the "daily" to be the daily sacrifice offered by his people. This, he was told, would be taken away, and by the same power that would cast down the sanctuary. This agrees with the angel's explanation in chapter 9: 26—"And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and sanctuary: and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined." This also agrees with our Savior in Luke 21: 24—"And they [the Jews, Daniel's people] shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The power that was to take away the "daily" and destroy the city and the sanctuary, is the power that was to set up the abomination of desolation. This power was the Gentile Roman power; and this desolation on the city and sanctuary was to be perpetuated by the Gentiles until their times shall end. Inasmuch as the city was to be made desolate by different Gentile powers, the angel properly said, "For the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate until the consummation." 9: 27.

The "daily" was taken away in the last six months of the two years and a half war with the Romans, as Josephus informs us. He gives us the month and day in which the "sacrifice ceased." Then and there the daily sacrifice was taken away, and it has never been offered since. That part of the prophecy was then fulfilled strictly and literally. This is the way all prophecy is fulfilled—not mystically or figuratively, but so fulfilled that it can be said, "This is that spoken of by the prophet." This agrees with what the Savior said—"When ye see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, whoso readeth let him understand." Understand it when ye see it. Not a thousand years after it is seen.

The "daily" was taken away by the Romans at the destruction of Jerusalem. It is admitted by all that this took place in A. D. 70. As the Jews have had no sacrifice since, and as Jerusalem has been in the hands of the Gentiles for eighteen hundred years, the saints have had a standing sign of our Savior's return.

It may be said that this view conflicts with some other parts of the prophecy. It may conflict with some inferences some have drawn from them. But it does not oppose any fact. One truth does not conflict with another. I have noticed the facts in this case; let not inferences set these aside.

If you carry the talisman of Christ in your heart, it will give you strength in all conflicts.

BILLS! BILLS!!

ELDER I. I. LESLIE, Editor of the Young Pilgrim, has gone to Maine for a few days, and will call upon subscribers of the Crisis and the Pilgrim who are in arrears, with bills of their indebtedness; and we hope the friends will do their duty,—pay up, or, if they cannot, make such statements as the case may require, so that we may know how it is, and do what appears for the good of the cause.

ELDER J. T. DIXON has gone to parts of New York and Pennsylvania, and also Bro. E. WYMAN to New Hampshire, for the same purpose. Brethren and sisters, do the best you can in this matter, and the Lord will bless. AG'T.

CHICAGO.

We arrived in Chicago, Thursday forenoon, Dec. 21st, several hours late, in consequence of a snow storm and cold weather. Thus far this year has been noted for cold weather and heavy storms, especially in the far west. In Paris, France, the mercury has been to twenty-one degrees below zero, and the Seine has been frozen over. In Utah, in the mining district, the snow is said to be ten feet deep on a level. Several have been frozen to death. The trains on the Pacific R. R. have been delayed several days by the snow. It is the toughest season that has been experienced since the opening of the road. The weather in Nov. this year was colder than we often have any time during the winter.

The day before our arrival in Chicago, the mercury was seventeen degrees below zero, and fifteen below on the day of our arrival. Things wore a most dreary aspect in the burnt district. Some masons and other laborers were so anxious to continue their work, in spite of the severe cold, that they had a number of small stoves in which the coal might be seen blazing with much freshness, fanned by a strong wind, away up on the third or fourth story of some large brick building in process of erection. It was a cheerless sight. The Chicago perseverance is wonderful. The people seem determined that they will not be conquered by any opposing power.

THE FIRE JUBILEE.

Boston has had its "Peace Jubilee," and Chicago its fire Jubilee. When one looks over the ruins in Chicago, he stands appalled. It is desolation run wild. Think of twenty-five hundred acres, covered with the best business blocks, hotels, banks, churches and private residences, in a great city of 300,000 inhabitants, all burnt over, so that not a single building is left standing, and you may have some idea of the condition of this noted city of the west. Truly it sits in ashes. Think of a place four miles distant, then imagine a field one mile wide extending over the four miles all covered with buildings, most of which are massive and costly, made up of brick, stone and iron, filled with immense quantities of costly merchandise; and besides these a multitude of elegant residences, with beautiful surroundings, charming to the eye of the beholder, occupied by the fashionable and wealthy, having more than heart could wish; and then imagine this vast area all in flames, ascending two hundred feet into the air, at the hour of midnight, and progressing so rapidly that thousands had to run for their lives, leaving every thing to the mercy of the flames, and you can have but a faint idea of the reality of that terrible scene. It is no wonder that many thought the great burning day had come; and that it was of no use to try to save any thing. It is believed the devouring flames have not done such an awful work in any other city during the christian dispensation. It seems like a sample of what will take place at the end of the world. Massive stone church edifices, towering granite blocks, and wooden buildings bowed together in ashes before the intense heat that melted iron as wax, and made stone crumble into dust.

It was truly a reign of terror, especially after the burning of the Water Works. That event cut off the supply of water from the city and left the people entirely to the mercy of the flames as the wind might direct. Besides this, it was a very dry time. Every thing seemed to be in the best burning condition. In this state of things, the Mayor issued a proclamation that no fires should be kindled in any remaining dwellings; hence they could cook no food, and were without water; and then in addition to all this, the burning of a part of the gas works left a portion of the city without light. The people became so alarmed about incendiary fires, that were occurring all about the city, that each one was required to watch his own premises night and day. It finally became necessary to prohibit the sounding of the fire alarm bells, so great was the panic, and only give notice as best they could to the fire companies, so that the first that would be known about a fire in the unburnt district would be the passing of the firemen with their engines.

We found our Brn. and Srs. in Chicago in good cheer, pressing onward for the prize to be received at the coming of Christ. Those who have lost all in the fire seem to be more happy in the Lord than ever. They have taken joyfully the spoiling of their goods. Their tribulation has brought them nearer to the divine fountain, and caused them to love more ardently the coming of Jesus, when all trials and tribulations will be ended.

The supplies sent from our Brn. and Srs. in the East have been thankfully received by the church. The gifts came when they were needed. There are still some forty thousand in Chicago who are supported by charity, and will have no other means of support during the winter. Some four thousand temporary houses have been built on the north side for the winter accommodation of those who are destitute. Besides these, barracks have been built in various parts of the city, and depots for dealing out rations to the needy. Those who have never known before what it was to want are now among those who are obliged to live on charity supplies, receiving a scanty daily allowance. Among these, we found Sr. T., who before marriage was a school teacher in East Boston, and known as Sr. W. from Portsmouth. We found her calmly trusting in the Lord, having a bright hope for the future. She felt that the great calamity had brought her nearer to the Lord than ever before. She has found the grace of God sufficient, and is hungering and thirsting after righteousness. If any of her eastern friends wish to send her any presents, they can direct to 822 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Those who wish to send to the Chicago Church, can direct to Bro. Frank Burr, 230 West Randolph St., Chicago, and he will see that the gifts are properly applied. He has labored beyond his strength in behalf of the church, and needs rest. His heart is in the work.

Our meetings in Chicago were seasons of unusual interest. We never had a better time in that city. The Spirit of the Most High was manifested specially in our midst. A large number expressed a desire for clean hearts, and some gave up all to Jesus, and were filled with perfect love. We had a rich feast from the Lord. We could truly say, It was good to be there. Saints rejoiced, and sinners trembled. The prospect looked very encouraging for real progress in divine things. Many see the importance of entire consecration to the Lord, if they would be ready to meet the coming Savior. The Holy Spirit is impressing this upon minds of christian men and women in a special manner at the present time. Let none keep back part of the price, but cheerfully put all on the altar; then the peace will be like a river, continually growing wider and deeper.

While at Chicago we met Bro. and Sr. R. W. Wilson, of Clinton, Iowa, who were on their way home from an eastern visit. They purpose to go with us to California, with a design to make it their home. Bro. W. has consecrated himself to the work of the ministry. We believe that in doing this, he has done the will of the Lord. He is a true man of God, who has had experience in the "higher life." His heart is fully set to do the will of the Lord, and to spend the remnant of his days in persuading the people to follow Christ, and get ready for his coming. We believe his labors on the Pacific coast will be richly blest, and that he will have no occasion to repent for going to California.

BRO. W. KELLAWAY is still publishing the Herald of Salvation, and has reduced the price from $1 to 60 cts. per year. His present address is 131 Division Street, New York city.

☞ We learn through the Herald of Life, that Bro. B. Matthias is lying very ill at his home in Lanesfield, Ka. He desires the prayers of the church.

☞ WILL THE BROTHER who sent an appointment for East Canaan, N. H. (Chapel), for Jan. 28th, send us his name?

DUTY OF MINISTERS.

In the December number of the Guide to Holiness, we find some questions and sensible answers. By the way, we would commend the Guide to Holiness to all our readers. Also the "Advocate of Christian Holiness." The "Guide" is published by W. C. Palmer, Jr., 14 Bible House, New York City. Price $1.25 a year. The "Advocate" is published by J. Bent, 3 Cornhill, Boston. Price 75 cts. a year. Dr. and Mrs. Palmer are the editors of the "Guide to Holiness," and are doing much towards spreading Bible holiness. The following are the questions to which we have referred:—

QUERY.

Dear Sr. Palmer:—Will you favor me by answering the following questions:

First, Is a minister justified in receiving money as a part of his salary, raised by festivals? I am serving a very feeble church. Up to this time, six months of the conference year, I have received $183.77. I pay my house rent out of it, My expense in moving to this place was over $50. It is proposed to get up a festival to aid in meeting my claim. I am in doubt as to its being christianly right. It troubles me. I want help. Hence I ask you.

Second, What is the duty of those ministers who believe Christ's second coming is nigh; I mean relative to preaching it? Such is my hope. I want to know and do all my duty. Please answer, and so confer on me a great favor.

Yours in the love of Jesus and of his appearing.

CHURCH FESTIVALS AND FAIRS.—Your question, "Is a minister justified in receiving money as a part of his salary, raised by festivals?" has been with me a subject of prayerful inquiry. If under any circumstances it might seem admissible, those in which you are placed might furnish the strongest inducement.

To church festivals and fairs, viewed from the standpoint where we have made our observations, we strongly object. The ground of our objections may be inferred from reading an editorial in the November No. of the "Guide to Holiness," under the caption "A house of merchandise!" The article is suggestive of views entertained by us, ever since we entered the King's highway, over which the unclean may not pass.

Yet while to ourselves, the usage of holding festivals and fairs in churches for the support of the gospel seems very inexpedient, and in fact repulsive to our christian sensibilities, as not pertaining to the beauty of holiness, we would be careful not to walk uncharitably. Doubtless some engage in festivals and fairs who would not intentionally do wrong.

When holiness is experimentally apprehended in the churches, we shall hear no more of church festivals and fairs as necessary for the sustainment of christian enterprises. Holiness means entireness—wholeness. It lives out of self, and prefers Zion above its chief joy. It accounts money, time, and every-thing worth possessing as already the Lord's, and rejoicingly makes all subservient to the upbuilding of Zion's walls. O that its pure, beautiful, world-renovating principles may spread and speedily cover the whole earth!

Yet can we expect that the earth-transforming principles of holiness will ever fully prevail till Jesus comes, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of God and his Christ?

I think not. Our Lord tells us that the wheat and the tares will grow together till the end comes. Paul says, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

MADE WHITE AND TRIED.—You are indeed placed in trying circumstances, but we live in that day of which the prophet spake, "many shall be purified and made white, and tried;" that is, first purified and made white and then tried. Thus it is that God takes his chosen ones to try. It was because Job was a perfect man that the Lord permitted Satan to try him. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation. It is a blessedness that many do not covet. But Peter says "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.—I am glad that you are numbered with those who love the appearing of our Lord and Saviour. We are also of those who have long believed that we were living in the first part of the last days. You ask "what our thoughts are in relation to the duty of a minister who believes in the speedy coming of Jesus?" We would say, proclaim it fearlessly in common with other great specialities pertaining to salvation. If Jesus said, nearly two thousand years ago, Behold, I come quickly! shall those who are called to speak in his name be silent on this subject? How emphatic were Peter, Paul, and John on this subject, in their ministrations. If Peter, by divine inspiration, could say so many centuries since, in writing to his brethren, "We upon whom the ends of the world are come,"—in what period of the world must we be living? O, it is passing strange, that Christ's ministers of the present day, so seldom speak of his coming again, when so much is said of it in the Scriptures!

The only apology I can make for this omission is, that the proclamation of Christ's second coming has so often been mixed with error in doctrine and in spirit. This has kept many devoted people aloof from the subject.

After all, the one great object of the christian ministry is, to get the people ready for the coming of the Lord. Holiness is the one grand ultimatum of all christian ministration. Without it, whatever our belief may be on other objects, we are not ready for the coming of Jesus—inasmuch as without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

THE "SONG" ON THE "SEA OF GLASS."—The Revelator brings to view a glorious city now on high, and tells us that within it is the throne of God and the Lamb to be located (Rev. 22: 3), and also that "before the throne" lies "a sea of glass." Rev. 4: 6. He also brings to view a time when on this sea of glass, before the throne, in the New Jerusalem, the victors shall sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Rev. 15: 3. The song of Moses succeeds the overthrow of his enemies in the Red Sea, by the hand of the Lord—"I will sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously." Ex. 15: 1. It was a song of triumph. The song of the Lamb is the song of redemption. So the time is coming when the victors will stand on this sea of glass, and sing the song of triumph, blended with the song of redemption—triumph over all enemies, and redemption for all the saints from death and mortality.

But, firstly, the saints must enter their chambers "till the indignation be overpast," no more to return. The song of triumph will be sung, not before, but after the enemies are overthrown, or as John expresses the thought, in telling us what they will sing, "Thy judgment are made manifest"—that is, in the overthrow of enemies; and then all nations will sweetly join in the worship of God, being all righteous, having been gathered out of all nations; and then, with the new Jerusalem connected with the new Earth, "the nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of of it." W. S.

DISBELIEF AND MISBELIEF.—Belief in the word of God is the last thing in these days; for multitudes who are wedded to a system of unbelief in the book of God, receive the statements of that book only subject to their own explanations; that is, they will permit God to speak on theological topics, without claiming to disbelieve him, but insist that he means something else; while on practical and experimental themes they allow that he means just what he says; as for instance, when he says, Repent, pray, preach, exhort, and many other such like things, they insist he means just what he says; but when the same God comes to talk on doctrinal themes, they seem to think he needs an interpreter. As for instance, such statements as, "The kingdom under the whole heaven," "The kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," "Reign on the earth," must be amended, and then these amendments must be believed, instead of the plain statements of the Bible.

Why is it that God is supposed to talk straight when treating on practical topics, and to get off such a tangled up mess when talking on theology, we are not told. Was theology a more dificult theme to present, and did it require some of the wisdom of modern theologians to get it out correctly? What if we should take the same liberty with the language of God on practical themes, and make the prohibition of stealing, swearing, and lying, mean something else, what would become of religion? W. S.

A STRANGE QUESTION.

BRO. SHELDON.—I have a question I would like to ask for a friend's sake and my own, if you will be so kind as to answer it through the Crisis. What is the duty of a wife towards her husband and family? Is she to abuse him and leave him, for the cause of Christ without any [excuse?] of her own whatever? W. B.

REPLY.—The Bible tells us plainly concerning the duty of the wife to the husband and also of the husband to the wife. I cannot improved the directions there given. One is not to "abuse" the other. What our correspondent means by the wife's leaving the husband for "the cause of Christ," I do not know. If reference is made to a permanent separation, we should answer No. If the allusion is to a short absence to attend worship, in obedience to a Bible requisition, being obedient to her own husband in matters not in conflict with the Bible, that changes the matter. When God and man differ, God stands first. But the domestic circle should not be blindly sacrificed to gratify will. Let will submit, but principle, based on God's word, never. W. S.

"HERODIANS"—WHO WERE THEY?

"BRO. SHELDON:—Were the Herodians a religious, or political sect among the Jews? INQUIRER."

As Josephus does not include the Herodians in the list of religious sects, we conclude that they were a band of politicians named after Herod, and perhaps made up of the different religious sects of the Jews. Of these religious sects Josephus says: "These sects are three; the first is that of the Pharisees, the second that of the Sadducees, and the third that of the Essenes." The Union Bible Dictionary thus speaks concerning the Herodians—"A Jewish sect, or party, originating probably in a political partiality toward the Roman emperor and Herod his deputy. It is generally supposed that the great body of the Jews, and especially the Pharisees, held that the law of Moses (Deut. 17: 15) forbade their subjection to a foreign power; while Herod and his party (the Herodians) regarded that law as forbidding a voluntary subjection; but if they were reduced to subjection by force of arms, they considered it lawful to avow their allegiance and pay tribute; and they not only paid it themselves, but urged others to pay it, and to submit cheerfully to Rome. Hence the difficulty of the question proposed to Christ (Matt. 22: 17). The Herodians also held, that it was on the same principle lawful to comply with the customs and adopt the rites of the conquering nation. This is probably the leaven of Herod (Mark 8: 15). Some have inferred, from a comparison of Mark 8: 15 with Matt. 16: 6, that the Herodians were chiefly Sadducees."

Doubtless they were a political party headed by Herod, and supported by members of different Jewish sects. W. S.

"A LITTLE WHILE."—Eighteen hundred years ago, Paul, in contrasting time to come, with time already past, could say: "Yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Eighteen hundred years ago, Jesus said to his disciples—"A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to my Father . . . . And ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." John 16: 16, 22.

This "little while," instead of measuring the time between his death and resurrection, was not to begin till he should "go to the Father"; then for a "little while" they should see him no more; but after the lapse of a "little while," compared with time gone by, they should see him again, be succeeded by sorrow.

As that "little while" is a shorter space of time than the preceding measurement of human probation, we must certainly be very near its close. With its close ends the reign of death. With its close come the resurrection and reward; for then Jesus himself comes to "reward every man." Are we ready? W. S.

THE NEW YEAR.

DEAR BRN.:—The yearly circle has run its round amid wonderful developments of the fulfillment of prophecy, showing plainly that "the end of all things is at hand." We have only to look over the catalogue of crime in their daily record. Then cast your eye upon the once puritan evangelical religion, with its sacred regard for the Bible and all its teachings, and forty years have developed an apostasy observable to all who will draw the contrast. Such recklessness of human life, theft, robbery, suicide, murder in every horrid form, uprisings and outbreakings in every quarter; restraint, both legal and moral, is daily growing weaker upon the human mind, and the result is obvious. Add to this the prevailing outgrowth in the religious community of the Bible, superceding the necessity of its claims to save fallen humanity through Jesus Christ and his word; and the fruit, the rapid growth of this deadly tree, gives us the signs of this time.

Now what shall we do in view of this apostasy and anarchy? Will it not add a happy year, to first resolve to stand up more firmly for Bible teaching, for its God-inspired word, for God's well-beloved Son, given to save lost humanity and bring back all who will hearken to his gracious call, and believe on him with strong, confiding trust? This, and this only, will save us from sin and the perils that must be endured in these last day; and his second coming is the only remedy for this dreadful state of the world.

The truth is, the longer we have to wait for the Son of man from heaven, the more shall we see the development of human depravity, confusion, calamity, war, and overturn, with men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after the things coming to pass. "For the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

Now while we cannot stay this mighty current which is sweeping and will engulph the multitude, let us by the grace of God do all we can to save the perishing, by "pulling them out of the fire." Meetings should be multiplied, and when a course of lectures is given on the prophecies, we should avail ourselves of the privilege speedily. This course would, under God, create an interest among ourselves which is needed, and awaken a deep interest in others that would save some in the day of the Lord Jesus. Bro. Couch has been giving a course of lectures in Chelsea, and they are doing us good. So let us, one and all, covenant ourselves anew to Jesus and this specific work of giving the signs of this time, with the truth given by Christ to save a lost world. God will give prosperity.

L. BOUTELL.

SELF-WILL.—It is not safe for us to always have our own way. If we do, we become obstinate and self-willed, and incapable of bearing contradiction. Our self-will wears, in our own eyes, the guise of zeal for God. Submission to the judgment of others, as spiritual as ourselves, even where no principle is involved, and where the peace and welfare of a whole society may be at stake, looks to us like compromising; and so we dare not yield. The judgment of the very best is liable to be swayed by ignorance or prejudice. We should not, then, in matters where others are as much interested as ourselves, always insist upon having our way. We should learn to yield fully and gracefully. The divine rule is, submitting ourselves one to another in the fear of God.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

MORTALITY vs. IMMORTALITY. No. 3.

O. R. FASSETT.

"Thou shalt surely die."—GEN. 2: 17.

It is argued that the death of the body is all that is here threatened, and that death is mere dissolution of the soul and body, in which the body returns to dust, while the soul escapes alive, being immortal. If this be so, it is exceedingly strange that God did not say in his law, "Thy body shall die, but thy soul shall escape"; or affix to his law the penalty which both the soul and the body independently should experience. Why should not God disclose so important a matter, as do all human governments in the enactment of their laws of far less moment, and in plain, unambiguous terms, if the soul and body were to experience a different fate? If the body alone is punished in death, and the soul escapes death, then an irresponsible agent is punished, while the responsible eludes the penalty; for certainly it must be conceded by all that the body without the intelligence (which it is claimed is the soul) could not sin. If, therefore, the soul is alive anywhere in God's universe, in any condition whatever but death, it has eluded the penalty of the law. In that case the sinner has escaped the penalty threatened, the body alone suffering the penalty. This would do in human government, where the transgressor eludes the officers of justice, and escapes the just desert of his crime. But this interpretation of God's righteous judgment will not stand, since he is both omniscient and omnipotent. "Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Almighty. Can any hide himself in secret places?" Will God punish the mere body, and let the soul escape, or evade the penalty?

Against any interpretation which will allow the execution of the penalty to fail of its intent, or reach the real transgressor, we aver that God addressed the whole being called "man" when he said, "Thou shalt surely die." He certainly must have addressed himself to man's intellectual being. For none, I conceive, will take the ground that he addressed the mere body of Adam, and not his intelligence. Therefore, if either part of man (if he possess a dual nature, as is claimed), is threatened with "death" and "mortality," it is that part which the intelligent God addressed; namely, the intellectual part of man. We maintain, however, that God addressed man as man; and as we address our fellow man as man in any transaction between us; and as human law addresses man, and deals with man; not as separate dual entities, but as one being.

John Milton says—"Man is a living being, intrinsically and properly one and individual; not compound and separable; not according to the common opinion, made up of distinct and different natures, as body and soul; but the whole man is soul, and the soul man; that is to say, a body or substance, individual, animated, sensitive, and rational." It was with such a being God dealt in Eden, and with such beings he deals now.

FATAL ERRORS.

There are a thousand fatal errors the product of the devil's doctrine of the inherent immortality of the human race. Let us mention some of them.

1. The whole race, from Adam down to the last man, is destined by virtue of this immortality to have "eternal life" independently of Jesus Christ the Life-giver, or of obedience to the gospel. And the whole human family, civilized, christianized, barbarous, and debased lower than the brutes, are to live eternally in the universe of God, whether sinners and rebels against God or not; whether worthy or not! Who cannot see that this makes Christ and the salvation by him to "life everlasting" in vain, and nullifies the gospel which offers "immortality and eternal life," as the reward of "faithful continuance in well doing." Rom. 2.

2. Conscious existence in death, and rewards immediate on dying, follow the belief of the doctrine of the soul's immortality, as a natural sequence. And hence there is every conceivable and imaginary conjecture as to the condition of the departed spirits supposed to be alive somewhere in the universe.

regarding that their dead friends are alive, are at vast expense to transport the remains of their bodies, if in foreign countries, back to the father-land for interment; and of furnishing their spirits with garments, utensils for carrying on business, and money and provisions to sustain them in "the spirit land," lest these spirits of their dead turn demons and inflict the most terrible calamities upon them. These material things furnished them must first be made immaterial, to reach the immaterial spirits of their deceased! Hence, paper hats, caps, and other garments, are furnished, paper boats, or implements of art or husbandry, and gold or silver tissue paper, or money; and all must be burned in the open air, to become spiritized, and thus reach their conceived destination!

THE MOHAMMEDANS

are promised Paradise in one of "the seven heavens," visited by Mohammed in one night's journey from Mecca via Jerusalem and back again! And to the soldier who dies fighting for his faith on the field of battle, is promised in Paradise beautiful houris and fair-complexioned spirits as his companions, with whom he may loll on luxuriant lounges and in princely splendor throughout eternity!

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS

regard the state of the departed, as first one of suffering and purgation from sins not atoned for by the atonement in Jesus, and by priestly extortion while living. Hence they have invented a purgatory for the souls of the departed, from which these souls may be liberated by the liberal contributions of the surviving relatives into the coffers of the church, or by the payment for holding "mass for the repose of the souls of the dead."

THE SPIRITUALISTS

of every description, including Swedenborgians, who maintain that Baron Swedenborg passed through the ordeal of death, and returned again to life in order to make a revelation of the future life, maintain that there are different spheres into which the spirits of the dead enter by regular gradation, according to the development or progress one has made in his "earth life"; and that there are some spirits who have already entered upon a plane so far above their living friends, and are still progressing "onward and upward," that when they die they will never overtake them, whatever strides of advancement they may make. While other spirits have been in "the earth sphere" for centuries without the least advancement having been made! Judge Edmonds affirms that he has "seen spirits who have been eighteen thousand years in celestial spheres, and yet retain the form of monkeys, while others have horns and hoofs, as seen in the pictures representing devils." Other spirits he has "seen in the invisible world from three inches to twenty feet in height"!

PROFESSED ORTHODOX CHRISTIANS,

who have incorporated the heathen philosophy into the gospel hope of future life, claim that "the immortal souls" of the departed have gone to their reward either in heaven or hell. Some few maintain that "the never-dying souls" of the deceased are in some intermediate state somewhere in God's universe, but where these deponents say not. Heaven is conceived to be "in the sky"—"above the starry sky," or which, if it be true, is without the bounds of the universe, and must be a condition of annihilation! But it is supposed that these immortal, immaterial souls are birds of passage at the same time, and omniscient withal; for it is fancied that they see, and at times are in the presence of, their surviving friends, especially on funeral occasions, as "every" dead man "attends his own funeral"; and yet at the same time being omnipresent, are far away "in the highest heavens, where they behold the face of [an immaterial] God in light and glory" (Conf. of Faith of evangelical churches.—Landis). There they are "immaterial spirits," having upon their immortal heads immaterial crowns, upon their immaterial bodies immaterial vestments, in their immaterial hands immaterial harps, and sing the high anthems of praise in the presence of an immaterial God and Savior, with immaterial tongues and vocal organs. Here they bask in the sunlight of blessedness and glory, till of a sudden the last trump of judgment summons a world before the bar of God, when they cease their anthems, lay aside their harps, lay off their crowns and garments of light, and descend with the Judge to judgment, to put on again their earthly bodies raised from the dead, in which they are judged for final rewards! "The souls of the righteous being then at death made perfect in holiness, are received into the highest heavens, where they behold the face of God in light and glory, waiting for the full redemption of their bodies."—(Conf. of Faith.)

Immaterial, immortal souls of the wicked descend to hell, when the body dies, it is claimed. Here they are confined in a burning, unquenchable lake of fire (material, or metaphorical), where they are with immaterial devils, and damned immaterial spirits, and are tormented with unutterable anguish, and ever-increasing misery, till the day of judgment, when they are called forth, having a little respite from the consuming flames, to retake themselves to their bodies again raised from the dead; and then, after the sentence of final judgment, be remanded back to the prison of hell again, where they are to be in everlasting pains, wailing the wails of despair, and howling the bitterest curses in the ears of God, and in the hearing of the redeemed saints, unremitting and everlasting as eternity rolls its ceaseless rounds! and yet neither God, the saints, nor the universe, be disturbed by their terrible fate, lamentable cries, or horrid groans and curses! "The souls of the wicked are cast into hell, where they remain in torment and utter darkness, reserved to the day of judgment.—Besides these two places for souls (heaven and hell), separate from their bodies, the Scripture acknowledgeth none."—(Conf. of Faith Evangelical Churches.—Landis.)

We say, "The Scripture acknowledgeth none" such intermediate state nor future state for either the righteous or wicked. We demand the proof. We challenge the churches and ministry to give us the scriptures, and the world the scriptures, upon which they base the doctrine they advocate. Until they do, they, and not Adventists, shall be held heretical, having "made void the word of God by tradition," and from heathen philosophy.

These, and a multitude of other errors as unreasonable, inconsistent, gross, and horrible, a slander on the divine character, and a wicked perversion of the word of God, are the result of belief in the devil's lie and "the doctrine of devils," which is a negation of the penalty of the divine law, "Thou shalt surely die":—"Ye shall not surely die."

It is time that intelligent christians who believe the Bible should found their faith on the word of God, instead of human tradition; and believe God, instead of the devil; and throw up old theories and superstitions which belonged to the dark ages, and emerge into the full light and glories of divine revelation, as it "shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

—An hour passed in sincere and earnest prayer, or in conflict with, and conquest over a single passion or a subtle bosom sin, will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awake in faculty and form the habit of reflection, than a year's study in the schools without them.

WIS. QUARTERLY MEETING.

Our second quarterly meeting for the E. District, held at Webster's Prairie, Dec. 22d to 24th, was not a failure, although the stormy elements conspired to make it so. A fearful snow storm set in and raged for two days, which not only prevented many from a distance from attending, but made it nearly impossible for those in the immediate vicinity to get out. But there were a few there, and the Spirit of the Lord was with us, which made up for the deficiency in numbers.

Our meetings were characterized by a spirit of earnestness and zeal, proving that those present were all alive to the grand and stirring issues of the day in which we live. We were ably assisted by Elders Adams, Graves, and Groat. One started for the kingdom. Praise God. The churches of the District are, in the main, in working order. Some are wholly, others partially supplied. There is great need of two things. 1. A more thorough organization, in order to make our present material more effective. 2. More laborers in the field.

We fear that there are many hid away among sewing machines, shoe shops, patent rights, patent medicines, etc., etc., who ought to be in the field proclaiming the judgment at hand. The church is slumbering. The world is slumbering. Many of the watchmen are asleep. Who shall sound the alarm? God help us! The judgment is impending, eternity rolling in upon us, and we asleep. "Woe to them who are at ease in Zion." Let there be one grand rally in all the borders of Zion before the Lord comes. Amen.

GEO. THOMSON.

QUARTERLY REPORT OF MASS. A. C. CONFERENCE.

In accordance with the published "call," the conference met at Lawrence, Wednesday evening, Jan. 3d. Preaching by Bro. Luther Boutell. The meeting was called to order for business on the afternoon of Jan. 4th, by the Secretary. After prayer, Bro. L. T. Cunningham was chosen chairman pro tem.

Three business sessions were held, during which Bro. F. M. Drake, S. S. Mooney, and J. W. Bridge, were admitted to membership. The attendance from abroad was not very great, but the attendance at the meetings was large. Earnestness and seriousness characterized the devotional meetings; the preaching was timely and well received, and calculated to stimulate to piety and spirituality; to produce hope, and the confirmation of long-cherished anticipations. On Saturday evening several manifested a desire to become christians, and also on the Sabbath. Bro. L. T. Cunningham remained with the church over the Sabbath, doing them good with "meat in due season." C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. L. B. WEAVER writes:—"May the good Lord more than bless you all, every one of you, for the great kindness you have done me in my suffering and feeble state. My heart has been cheered and gladdened by your words of love and cheer with your substantial aid sent to me; and how many tears of true thankfulness have I shed, to know and feel that the dear ones in Jesus had not forgotten Theria, in her deeply trying condition. Since my earliest recollection I have suffered extreme pain and distress, and for the past eighteen years God besides myself only knows what I have suffered. It is so cheering to me to know that God has some dear ones that love to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. May the good Lord more than bless you all, my dear ones, who have written and contributed to me in my deep sufferings. Words fail me to one thousandth part express to you the deep thankfulness of my heart. I can do no better now than to write my deep thankfulness through the Crisis to you all. A sister in Palermo says, 'If you receive my mite, please acknowledge it through the Crisis.' God bless you, dear sister, and not only you, but all who have contributed to my necessity; and when Jesus comes you will no doubt hear it said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these . . . ye have done it to me.' I sigh for home. Not one moment do I pass free from pain and distress; but I rest in hope. Jesus comforts me. It is all working for me a 'far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.'"

BRO. W. J. HOBBS writes from Springwater, N. Y.:—"I came to this place last April, and commenced labor with the church, preaching alternate Sabbaths. I found a band of warm-hearted brethren and sisters fighting the good fight of faith, but laboring under disadvantages in not having a place of worship. Early in June our friends went to work to build a house in which to worship God, and in due time it was finished, and on the 26th of Oct. was dedicated to the Lord. Bro. J. Couch preached the dedication sermon, and remained with us over the Sabbath. We had a very interesting meeting, a large audience the 26th and through the meeting. I am sure that the meetings on that occasion will result in great good, as we brought truth before a class of hearers that were benefited. Our house is a neat, plain, wooden building, that cost about $5000; and being on the railroad from Rochester to Corning, will make it very convenient for our conferences, or any large meeting in this part of the State. We trust it will be a great help to our cause in this section, and be the means of doing much good.

We as a church feel very thankful that we have a good, convenient place for worship, but would be very glad to exchange it for the "house of many mansions"; and we feel that if we are faithful we shall soon. I felt very sorry that circumstances were such that I could not come east to some of our large campmeetings and greet many familiar faces, especially those of my own native State (N. H.). But let me say to all such that I do beseech them to be faithful a little longer. The condition of the world is speaking in thunder tones that the day of the Lord is just before us. I want to be filled with the Spirit of God to labor in God's order, so that when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, I may find that I have not run or labored in vain."

SR. M. J. PRATT writes:—"Sr. L. B. Weaver is one of the Lord's children, and is poor and needy. May the hearts of the people be moved to sympathy and to help this dear sufferer in her need. Let us do as we would wish others to do to us, and remember that it is 'more blessed to give than to receive.' Her address is North Dana, Mass."

SR. E. K. THOMAS writes:—"For eighteen months disease had preyed upon me, consuming flesh and strength, until many of my friends despaired of my recovery. I was only able to walk with difficulty about my room, and to ride a short distance with great care, when Bro. H. B. Sevey, from Vienna, called to see us, with cheering words from the Captain of our salvation, of whom the prophet spoke—'Himself took our infirmities and bore our sicknesses.' We bowed together, claiming the sweet promise—'If ye shall ask any thing in my name I will do it,' and I was made whole in the same hour. He is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. O, how sweet it is to trust our all in his hands, fearing no evil.

Four months have passed away, and I have been performing all the labor for seven in the family, and strength sufficient to my day has been given. Truly, the Lord is good, and greatly to be praised. In this thing the finger of God is manifest for Jesus' sake. To God be all praise and glory."

WHAT THE CHURCH NEEDS:—What the Christian churches need to-day is this peculiar baptism. Just in proportion as the heart of the church is fired and filled with God, will be the area and success of her labor. John Wesley's parish is none too large for a soul filled with the Holy Ghost.

The church purified in the manner we have indicated, is divested of that covetousness which is binding the hands, blinding the eyes, corrupting the hearts, and dwarfing the moral power of millions.

The treasury of the church is unlocked, in most cases, by very questionable means. We force open the pockets of the people by the use of unjustifiable expedients, and the amounts contributed are often regretted by donors afterwards. We pander to the pride of the natural heart, by offering the contributors an honorable record in our reports, or the perpetuation of a name in the person of some heathen boy, or a membership in some honored society. But is this primitive benevolence? Is not this allowing God's cause to go worse than begging? Is this the extent of our faith? If so, we need another baptism of fire to consume this spirit of covetousness in the churches; for when this spirit is consumed there will be no lack of means. And when the baptism of fire shall abide on the ministry, there will be no lack of men.—A. C. Holiness.

Obituaries.

ODIORNE. Died in Portsmouth, N. H., Dec. 27th, Sr. Ruth Odiorne, aged ninety-two years, three months, and four days.

When eighteen years of age, Sr. O. became interested in religious matters, becoming a member of the Christian church. In the early preaching of the coming of Christ she became interested, and since 1842 has been looking for Jesus, and exemplifying her faith by a well ordered life and a godly conversation. Her end was peace.

E. OWEN.

BEALS. Died in Newcastle, N. H., Dec. 27th, at the residence of her father, Wallace Martin, Seddie A., wife of Oscar J. Beals, aged twenty-three years and seven days.

Only eight months since a bride in her robes, now sleeping in death's embrace. Five of those months have been months of suffering, during which time she found Jesus. Now she sweetly rests in him. The stricken husband, parents, and two brothers, sorrow not even as others who have no hope.

"How long shall death the tyrant reign?"

E. O.

MANSON. Died in Portsmouth, N. H., Jan. 4th, after a very painful illness, lasting for months, Mrs. Mary Manson, aged eighty-two years and seven months.

Sr. M. was a member of the Christian connection from her youth, though she had loved the "blessed hope" for many years. The last few weeks of her life were those of unusual assurance. She passed tranquilly away. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." E. O.

COLCORD. Died in Fairfield, Me., Dec. 1st, Mr. Lorenzo D. Colcord, aged fifty-three years and eleven months.

In the death of Mr. Colcord the town loses an esteemed and valued citizen, the neighborhood one of its best neighbors, and the Sunday school has met with an irreparable loss. He was a firm believer in the speedy coming of Christ and his kingdom, and an exemplary christian.—Com.

SCOTT. Died in Jefferson, Butler Co., Iowa, May 8th, 1871, of consumption, Sr. Louisa A., wife of Bro. Tracy Scott, aged sixty years, nine months, and four days.

Sr. Scott lived a devoted christian, and died a peaceful death, in hope of a blest immortality soon to come. Words of comfort by Bro. D. Dilts, from Rev. 14: 13. H. H. JANES.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

ROME, Tuesday, Jan. 2. The King of Italy sent a special Embassador to the Vatican on New Year's day to tender His Majesty's congratulations to the Holy Father. The Embassador was met by Cardinal Antonelli, who informed him that His Holiness was indisposed and unable to receive his visits.

DUBLIN, Jan. 3. The floor of the court room at Kittycloger in Leitrim, Ireland, gave way while a trial was in progress. The room was crowded, and three hundred persons were precipitated thirty or forty feet. The number killed is unknown. Some thirty were badly injured, most of them fatally.

PARIS, Jan. 4. The Duke d'Aumale intends making a political tour through the central and western departments of France.

THE CATACAZY TROUBLE.

LONDON, Jan. 4. Prince Gortschakoff, in a recent communication to Mr. Curtin, the American Minister, announces that the Russian Government has concluded to recall Minister Catacazy from Washington. Prince Gortschakoff writes that the difficulty arose and culminated during his absence from the capital. Instructions have been sent to Catacazy to transfer the Legation at Washington to other hands, and return to St. Petersburg. The Prince says he cannot but regret that some of the correspondence in regard to the matter at Washington appeared wanting in respect due the representative of the Russian Empire. He continues: "We shall consider the conduct of Catacazy, when he has had an opportunity of presenting his case in person, as he formally denies the justice of the complaints made against him in Washington. We must suspend judgment until we have heard his defence." The Prince in conclusion declares these unfortunate circumstances will not, he feels confident, impair the old and cordial friendship between the United States and Russia, of which there has been so recent demonstration in the reception of the Grand Duke Alexis.

The Daily Telegraph reports that the International Society has bought large quantities of French arms captured by Germans during the late war.

FAMINE IN PERSIA.

LONDON, Jan. 4. Official advices from Ispahan show that the famine in Persia continues, and the suffering and desolation are undiminished. Entire districts of the country have been depopulated, and the distress in the cities is terrible. The efforts of the Government to afford relief are unavailing.

During a violent thunder-storm at Manchester, to-day, a church was struck by lightning, took fire, and was entirely destroyed. A shock of earthquake is reported at Sheffield early this morning.

An important demonstration was made by the Irishmen of Liverpool, last night in favor of home rule for Ireland.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7. The tragic event of yesterday, with its fatal termination this morning, preoccupies the public mind. James Fisk, Jr., died at the Grand Central Hotel this morning, at 10.45 o'clock, from the effects of wounds received at the hands of Edward S. Stokes, his antagonist in the celebrated Mansfield case.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 2. Brigham Young, in custody of a United States Marshal, and accompanied by Geo. A. Smith, Daniel H. Wells, H. B. Clawson, and other high Church dignitaries, appeared before Chief-Justice McKean, this afternoon, under an indictment of murder. The courtroom was crowded to suffocation. Much anxiety exists among the Mormons, but there is not the least sign of disorder or disrespect to the Court. C. H. Hempstead and Thomas Fitch are the counsel for the prisoner, and United States Attorney Bates prosecutes for the people.

Mr. Hempstead moved that the prisoner be admitted to bail, on the ground that he was an old man, seventy-one years of age, and in feeble health. He had come four hundred miles to meet this and all other charges, and his physician certified that imprisonment would imperil his life. Mr. Bates had no opposition to bail, but suggested that if bail be taken, it be fixed at $500,000.

On leaving the Court, Brigham tendered the Marshal his residence in South Temple street, which was accepted, and Brigham is now a prisoner in his own house. He seemed perfectly cool and unconcerned.

Jan. 6. It is said that Baker, the principal witness in the Robinson murder case, has been spirited away.

The admission of Utah as a State is warmly opposed on the ground that if admitted with the proviso that polygamy is to be abolished, the proviso will be a dead letter, and the State virtually would be in the hands of the Mormons.

Robberies and garroting are frequent after dark here.

There have been no trains from the East for four days. The weather is freezing cold.

KU KLUX TRIALS.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 4. A special dispatch from Frankfort, Ky., to The Commercial says that a band of twenty Ku Klux made a raid upon some negroes near that place on the night of the 2d inst., whipping one of them and ordering the others to leave the neighborhood on pain of death. One farmer was warned to employ none but white laborers. It is the declared purpose of these outlaws to drive the negroes from the county.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 2. In the United States Circuit Court to-day arguments were made and a verdict of guilty returned against Dr. Edward T. Avery, who fled on Sunday last. No trace has yet been found of his whereabouts. This conviction is regarded as the most important yet obtained.

Eighteen prisoners from Spartanburg County appeared and offered to plead guilty. The Court consumed the day in hearing their statements. The prisoners declared that mostly every white man in Spartanburg County belonged to the Klan, including lawyers, doctors, and ministers; that they whipped men, women, and children belonging to Republican families. No reports have been so harrowing and melancholy as the simple stories of the prisoners, who asserted that they were compelled upon pain of death to execute the decrees of the Klan. Such a spectacle was never witnessed before in this Court.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 5. Our relations with Spain form the staple topic of conversation here, and correspondents are kept busily engaged in ascertaining the source of rumors, which they generally discover have but a small foundation in fact. It appears, however, that the present Ministry in Spain is inspired by belligerent sentiments toward the United States, and they have doubtless been stimulated by the officers of their fine steam navy, who are anxious to recover some of the lost glory of the Spanish arms.

A proof of this unfriendly feeling on the part of the Ministry now in power was the withdrawal of the discretionary power previously given to Mr. Lopez Roberts, their diplomatic representative here, to settle all difficulties arising in Cuba between American citizens and the Governor General, without referring the questions to Madrid. Not only was Mr. Roberts deprived of this power, but he has probably been recalled, to be succeeded by a naval fire eater anxious for a war.—Cor. of Journal.

SWITZERLAND'S CONTRIBUTION TO CHICAGO.—Switzerland has made a most liberal contribution to the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Chicago. The federal council has transmitted through Consul General Hitz 5000 francs, Zurich 44,000 francs, Basle 18,891 francs, and St. Gallen 13,800 francs.

STORM WEST.—Jan. 5. Four passenger trains, carrying about eight hundred passengers, arrived this morning from Ogden, which left Dec. 21, 23, and 28, respectively. They have been between here and Laramie, fifty-six miles, since Monday morning. There was little trouble on the road west of Medicine Bow, but the trains were detained between Ogden and that point a week, from no other cause than lack of proper understanding and information on the part of the company's officers. The greater part of the time was spent on side tracks, where it was almost impossible to obtain meats, and the passengers suffered considerably in consequence, subsisting on crackers and dried meats. Between Laramie and Cheyenne the road was impassable except with the help of a large force of men working night and day. The snow was deep and constantly drifting. On one part of the road, near Sherwin, the trains made only four miles in twenty-four hours. Should the weather continue favorable as now, the road may be kept clear, but winds or more snow will again blockade it. The time from San Francisco of the first passengers who arrived this morning was seventeen days.

WOMAN'S MISSION IN NEW YORK.—Rev. W. T. Boole, an earnest Methodist, took a lease of Kit Burns' dog pit, and opened it as a haven for the desperate and dissolute women of Water street. For over two weeks a great work has been going on. The mission is strictly a religious one. But temporal aid is not omitted, and work is given to all who want to earn an honest living. On Sunday three services are held; Mr. Boole preaches each Sunday afternoon, and he has some rare gifts for that work. The rooms are crowded each time, and remarkable reforms and conversions take place. The work is called a "Faith Work," as it is supported by voluntary contributions sent in without solicitation.

MR. TALMADGE gave a good argument in favor of a free pew system, when, after describing the horrors of a shipwreck, people drowning, and the launching of a life-boat, he paused and said: "Stop, you cannot get in here unless you pay! This seat in the middle of the boat is worth a dollar; this in the bow is fifty cents; you may have that one in the stern for a quarter. If you cannot pay that, wait for the free life-boat, the mission chapel! That will be along after a while."

In Brief.

—— Alexis left Chicago for St. Louis on Friday, after sending to Mayor Medill $5000 for the benefit of poor.——"A powerful imperialist propaganda" has been discovered in France, by agents of the government, men capable of discovering any thing that governments desire to have discovered. This new conspiracy would seem to be a sort of subterranean affair, as the conspirators are said to meet under ground, in passages and labyrinths.——Rev. Thomas K. Beecher says that good men come near each other and to God when they quit quoting proof texts and begin to pray.——Peru has sent $10,000 in gold to help the Chicagoans out of their fiery trials.——Italy is troubled by a threatened revolutionary movement. All the reds and radicals are combining,—Mazzinians, Garibaldians, Internationals, and others,—meaning to devote their united energies to the conversion of the Kingdom of Italy into an Italian Republic.——The records of the Freedman's Bank in Washington indicate pretty well what the negro is capable of with a fair chance. Five years ago this bank started with a deposit of $27; but the gradual increase compelled an increase in the facilities of the bank, and the number of depositors now ranges from 150 to 200 daily, and within a month recently the deposits were $20,000 in excess of the drafts.——Snow averages more than two and a half feet deep throughout the woods of the woods of the State of Maine, and in mountainous regions logging is nearly suspended.——The Bavarian government forbids State officials communicating State news to the newspapers.——Horses in Aroostook, Me., are dying from lung fever, cold, and other causes. A mysterious disease, which baffles the skill of the farmers, has appeared over across the lines—and many horses have already died from it.——The European steamers are making long passages this winter, owing to the prevalence of heavy westerly gales, which for the past month have been almost continuous and of greater violence than usual, especially in the track traversed by the steamers bound to ports in the United States.——An Italian photographer, by means of a diving bell, has succeeded in obtaining submarine views. The idea is said to be quite practical, several experiments off the Italian coasts having been attended with complete success.

THE MIKADO of Japan has ordered the closing of the Buddhist temples, and the priests, like the monks of England in the days of the Reformation, will have either to starve or earn an honest livelihood. In a land where superstition and feudalism have hitherto held sway over a semi-civilized race, this is a delicate and dangerous exercise of imperial power. The decree, it appears, has caused little excitement in the cities, but was regarded as intolerable in the rural districts. The disendowed priests will no doubt help to fan the flame of discontent, and may yet succeed in seriously endangering the throne of the Mikado.—Tribune.

A SINGULAR RESULT of the recent terrible storms in the mountains of California is that the wild creatures of all sorts have been driven down from the mountains into the valleys. Bears are raging in the neighborhood of farm houses, deer roaming through the quite thickly settled regions, and, all out of season, robins and larks are singing day after day in places that they deserted for the winter months ago.

OUR DIFFICULTIES WITH SPAIN.—New York, Jan. 8. A special Philadelphia dispatch to the Herald states that President Grant yesterday admitted having five days since demanded an apology from Spain. The monitors, now fitting out at Philadelphia, are not intended to proceed to Spanish waters, unless Spain refuses to apologize and remunerate the outrage on the steamer Florida. The President thinks the outrage was the result of rash Spanish subordinates.

ONE GOOD thing has resulted from the Chicago fire. Mr. Lill, the greatest of Chicago brewers, refuses to rebuild his brewery, declaring that the business made his employes drunkards. He had the largest brewery in the city, and it was an elegant building, but he says he will do some other business, if he don't get half as much profit, rather than continue in such a branch of trade.

Notices.

☞ NOTICE is hereby given that the Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee have made arrangements with J. D. Swain to build tents for all who wish to hire them built the coming year. We recommend him as a good practical carpenter, who can be trusted with the business. All who wish his services, correspond with him immediately, as he can procure lumber at this season to better advantage. Address J. D. Swain, Portsmouth, N. H., Box 1445. J. COUCH.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING of the "Woman's Christian Association" will, by invitation, be held at Charlestown, Mass., to commence on the evening of Jan. 17th, 1872, and continue over the following Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of Christ and his cause. We hope to see a goodly number from abroad. Directions to strangers will be duly given.

E. S. JENNINGS, Pres.

THOSE WHO attend the meeting of the Association at Charlestown, will take any of the Main street cars at Scollay's Square, Boston, and stop at Monument Avenue, Charlestown. The hall is directly opposite the end of the Avenue at No. 70 Main Street. Cars named "Charlestown and Boston," "Medford and Winter Hill," "Malden and South Malden," "Somerville," "Union Square and Somerville," are all Main Street cars, and all pass through Scollay's Square, and by the Boston and Maine depot. Should any arrive at an unseasonable hour for open doors at the hall, they will find the residence of Bro. Jasper Stone, at 249 Bunker Hill Street. E. S. JENNINGS.

THE FIRST QUARTERLY SESSION of the Hoosick Valley A. C. Conference will be held at Hebron, N. Y., commencing Wednesday evening, Jan. 17th, 1872, and hold over the following Sunday. The church in Hebron extends a hearty invitation to all the friends of Jesus in the surrounding country to come and labor for God and the salvation of men, and share in the comforts of their homes during this quarterly session. Let the churches of the Hoosick Valley be largely represented by delegates. Do not fail to attend to this matter. Those churches who do not represent themselves by delegates, may by letter, directed to the President. We wish to know what churches are members now, and what churches wish to become members, so that we may arrange for meetings within the bounds of this conference, where there is a demand for quarterly and protracted efforts. Those coming by railroad will stop at Rupert station, where teams will be in readiness to transport passengers to and from the meeting, free of charge.

A. W. SIBLEY, President.
A. P. BUMP, Secretary.

THE FIRST Anniversary of the organization of the Advent Christian Church at Arena, will be celebrated by a general meeting of days, Jan. 26th, 1872. We cordially invite our brethren to meet with us and work for the Lord. Eld. Adrian and other preaching brethren will be present to assist. Come with hearts full of love for Jesus and poor sinners. GEO. THOMSON.

THE SECOND quarterly meeting of the western district of Wisconsin will be held with the church in the town of Brunswick, Eau Claire Co., commencing Feb. 1st, 1872, and hold over Lord's day. Let us have a grand rally of warm hearts and sweet words for each other, and noble testimonies for Jesus. Come the first day.

P. W. HOUGH.

THE MAINE north westerly quarterly conference will be held at Webb's Mills, Casco, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 18th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Come, brethren and sisters, make an effort to attend this meeting. The coming of the Lord is at hand, and what is done to save men must be done soon. Preaching brethren are especially invited.

JESSE GAY, President.
A. W. TAYLOR, Secretary.

THERE will be a protracted meeting in Litchfield, Me. (Baker school-house), commencing Jan. 11th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday. A general invitation is given all to come and help labor to save sinners. I. Damman, H. B. Sevey, Wm. Doughty, L. Rhodes.

THE CONN. A. C. QUARTERLY CONFERENCE will meet in New Britain (instead of Southington, as before advertised), Wednesday, Jan. 17th, 1872.

CONFERENCE AND DEDICATION.—The Lord will, the first quarterly session of the N. H. State Conference for the coming year will be held with the church at Hampton, commencing Wednesday evening, Jan. 10th, to hold over the Sabbath. The new chapel, in which the meeting is to be held, will then be dedicated to the Lord. It is hoped that our preaching brethren will make arrangements to attend this conference, as there may be some business to come before the meeting. A general invitation is extended to all to come to the feast. Come with the harness on, to labor for God.

T. W PIPER.
J. G. SMITH.
C. H. FLETCHER.

A QUARTERLY CONFERENCE will be held at Branch Mills, China, Me., to commence Thursday evening, Jan. 11th, 1872, and hold over Sunday. A general invitation is given to ministers and members to come and worship with us.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.
J. T. HEMENWAY.

☞ CONFERENCE at Machiasport, Me., will commence Thursday, Jan. 11th, and hold over the Sabbath. Brn. J. M. Tosier, M. W. Corliss, J. R. Hall, and Bro. Snow are expected to preach the word. All are invited who can labor together with God to save the lost. For the Brn.,

A. J. DOW.

☞ BRETHREN wishing the German instrument or oil, will please direct their orders to Munger & Weaver, Springfield, Mass., Drawer 81, as that is the office where they are kept. You will thus get them quicker, as I am gone so much.

H. MUNGER.

LINCOLNVILLE, ME.—The brethren at Lincolnville and vicinity have established a monthly conference at the "Young school-house," to be held the Saturday before the second Sabbath in Dec., at two P. M., and thereafter monthly. They hope those ministering brethren who gather will remember them. F. A. BAKER.

LINES.

R. E. LIBBY.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

Bear ye one another's burdens,
Travelers through this vale of woe;
Cheer thy fainting, erring brother,
Christian pilgrim, as you go.

Has the wily tempter snared him
As he wanders to and fro?
Knowest thou his wild heart struggles?
Cheer him, pilgrim, as you go.

Think how Jesus blest the erring,
Tenderly the good seed sow;
With the spirit of the Master,
Cheer him, pilgrim, as you go.

Hast thou never, never wandered
Since the Savior thou didst know?
Jesus loves that tempted brother,
Cheer him, pilgrim, as you go.

Kindly words, they cost but little,
Burdened ones their value know;
Would'st thou hear a Savior's welcome?
Cheer the downcast as you go.

SERMONS ON THE "REVELATION."

WM. KELLAWAY.

"The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John."—Rev. 1: 1.

Pride is a very prolific weed. How it will grow in the human heart! and how common it is for a man to think more highly of himself than he ought. But there is one thing that will take it down, and humble a man in the very dust, and that is, a sense of his liability to err. "To err is human." Men often err. We frequently make mistakes ourselves. The compilers of this book we call the Bible is a case in proof and point. The title they have given this book is a misnomer. Probably they were good—probably honest. But they have evidently wrongly titled this Revelation. We read over the beginning of the chapter, "the revelation of St. John the divine"; but the introduction of the prophecy itself reads, "the revelation of Jesus Christ." So, then, this book is not the revelation of any saint, not even of an apostle; it claims a higher source; it is from a person of more masterly authority—it is even from Jesus Christ, our Savior.

"The revelation of Jesus Christ," that is, what light and truth we have in the deep book before us, containing the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, owe their communication to Jesus Christ. He has sent it. It was his, before it was ours. His light, his knowledge, is here spread out before us. Once it was hid from man; but it pleased him to take the canvas and unroll it, and so place the picture before our eyes. Before men dreamed of such things, even in their most discerning moments, it was with him. And he looked down from heaven, saw us, saw the path we should travel knew that we needed light, counsel and encouragement, and so has graciously given us a chart of the way from earth cursed to earth blessed.

The book takes in history from Christ's day to the end of time. It tells us of things, events, circumstances, which lay in the road of Christian from that time till he safely puts foot within thy gates, O Jerusalem. It defines positions, and makes us know where we are. So, with this "true light" which shineth on the sacred page, we can look at this scene of apostasy, and that of persecution, and the other of trial, and say, "I know those posts: in the chart delivered into my hands, and hid in my heart, those very things are described: now I know I cannot be far from the kingdom of God." O, Jesus knew how dark the way would be, if he did not irradiate it with knowledge. He knew how fearfully we should go through the world as men in the dark; how liable we should be to be ed away by the error of the wicked; so in wisdom and love he, all unasked, went on before us, our light for us to follow, that we walk not in darkness. I thank my Savior for his forethought, his love, his revelation.

But where did this revelation come from in the first place? Where was its first spring? Where did it out-bubble in its beginning? What is its virgin home? Far away back in God it first dwelt. God is the source of all things. He is the head. This knowledge first belonged to Deity. Deep in the Eternal heart it ran. It was self-existent with him. He derived it from none. It was natural for him to know. It was his inherent attribute to comprehend all things within himself. Certainly, creation and the creature, and all the events of time, his creature, must be known to him. The creature cannot be greater than God. Men may talk of intuition when they talk of God. And no fear of erring here. God knew all the machinery he could make; tood its capabilities; he knew, too, just how it would work; for the way in which he speaks shows that he knew just what was coming. The failure, as we say, speaking after the manner of men, of certain schemes and beings, are not failures. He knew it would be so; for he knoweth the end from the beginning. Truly it is "mystery all" how he should bring beings into existence, and allow influences, knowing how each should act. And yet who shall question God's wisdom? Probably the failure is only seeming. Probably it was permitted for the greater good of the race, as it will prove in the case of a "remnant." But leaving this, it is certain if revelation is good for anything that God is not ignorant concerning facts. He knows all things. His knowledge is of himself. It is unrevealed by another. No one has ever told or shown him the truth. Who hath been his counselor? Who has been his teacher? Who has enlightened him? None. The truth is, he is light itself, and in him there is no darkness at all. That was where this "Revelation" first out-beamed. It is a ray from God. It is the manifestation and proof of an attribute which he possesses. All hail this glory streak! which turns our inability to divine or unravel the future into a possibility. God most High! Jehovah! We trace back the "Revelation" to him. Through John, through the angel, through Jesus Christ, to the jasper throne—to the enshrined, hidden, and yet revealed God that tenants the seat of highest royalty.

"God gave unto him." This brings us on to delicate ground. It confronts us face to face with many "doxys." Herein is contained a doctrine that will make some creed-imprisoned form strangely unnatural with pious horror. Reverent liberty, approach. God gave this Revelation to Jesus. Trinitarian, what say you to this? "God gave it to his body? God gave it to his shell? God gave it to his immortal soul? God gave it to his manhood?" But if Christ was not merely double-natured, but God and man, how comes it that "God the Son" did not teach the "Son of man"? Don't stand and shudder, and put your fingers in your ears, and cry "Blasphemy!" Say, answer, Why did God the Son leave it to God the Father to make him wiser? The truth is—own it, believe it, acknowledge it; it is safe and salutary, it won't hurt you or rob Christ—Christ was one, and not two beings. The truth is, whether it is acknowledged or rejected, Christ "can speak nothing of himself." His knowledge is derived. It was given to him. He got it from another. It was put into him. He obtained it of the eternal God, his Father. "God gave unto him" this revelation, because he needed it. All honor to Jesus! It does not degrade him, disgrace him, or wound the Spirit he gives. "God gave unto him"—did God ever give anything that was not needed? He gave what a man has, or wants—which? Every sensible man will reply, "He gives needful good." Certainly he will not give what a person is possessed of already; but what he stands in need of to complete him.

Now "the Father loveth the Son." How could he help? He was the "only begotten" of Deity. God had not another such a son in all the world. The whole race never saw such a miracle as Jesus, born by the power of the Highest overshadowing Mary. One saw him, and cried, "Truly this was the Son of God." O how God loved him! When he gave birth to him, such a pleasure filled the heart of the infinitely-happy Jehovah, he called heaven to see. And he said to the angels, so self-satisfied was he, "Let all the angels of God worship him"! Ah! truly, though

Low lies his head with the beasts of the stall," yet

"Angels adore him in slumber reclining, Maker, and Monarch, and Savior of all!"

Here was a miracle! "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?" Not one. Not a man. Not a single soul of all Adam's progeny. But here, in some unknown, inscrutable manner, God puts his power to the work, takes hold of the seed of Abraham, and a "holy thing" is born of Mary. Fathom it who can. Declare it, ye gods. Ye wisest of the wise, here is a problem for you. Truly, with an apostle may we say, "Great is the mystery of godliness manifested in the flesh; believed on in the world, received up into glory." And even this is not against reason, but "it is high, I cannot attain unto it," any more than the tiny, outstretched arm of the infant can reach the starry planets. It is according to reason to believe it; for it is according to reason's idea of God—lofty, unsearchable, unknowable, except as he reveals himself.

Now, then, comes the Son of the Father into the world. He is like his Father in abhorrence of sin, in love of righteousness. He is tempted with sin, but his inclinations tend to righteousness. He loves the law of his God. It is on his lips and in his heart. His lips drop honey from their precious formation. O blessed He whose life never was marred by a malformation of the lips! The Father loves him and feeds him. The Father makes him wise. At twelve years old he was wiser than all the teachers of the nation. The aged fathers and doctors of the law are astonished at his questions and answers. The white head of the sage feels a strange and delighted sensation as he listens to the wondrous sayings of the Son of God. And "Jesus increased in wisdom" as he increased in stature. The law of his God was in his heart. He made it his companion. He dived far under the surface; sunk into that sea of wisdom. He applied his heart unto wisdom. And as he did so, God poured on him the Spirit without measure. Do you want to see a Spirit-baptized one? Do you want to know what such a person would be? Look at Christ—look, and be like him. O to be changed into the same image! to have similar moral perfections! And still he increased his study; he gave double and treble diligence; he devoted whole nights to devotion and God-talking, and his heart grew richer.

In him all gifts, as well as all graces, centred. He had the spirit of discernment. He could see a man through. He could look on a man and read him. Hear how he disposed of them. Here comes Nathaniel. Look, disciples. "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile." He has no cunning, no craftiness about him. Here are men reasoning in their hearts. He drags their doubting out to their eyes, because he perceived their thoughts. Truly, as it is written, "he knew what was in man." He knew what his own life would be. He knew he would have to suffer. He even prophesied of going "up to Jerusalem, and suffering many things of the Gentiles." And when the band of soldiers were going on, hunting for him, he knew whom they wanted, and detained them with the words—"I am he." He knew he would rise again. How does the hypocritical reader relish the thought of standing before such a heart-discerning Judge for examination? The gifts of miracles, of prophecy, yea, most or all gifts, lived in him, with his sweet graces.

He knew his Father. He speaks of being in his Father's bosom. I doubt not his nearness to God's affections. No man beside him ever saw the Father; but he has been permitted a sight of God; and, knowing him, he said, "My Father is greater than I." I have the impression that the nocturnal visits of Jesus far up the mountain side were the blessed seasons when the revelations of the Father came. But be that as it may, Christ knew him, and manifested him, so that I can rejoice in a knowledge of him too, and many a godly reader will respond, "And I." Jesus knew God; his knowledge extended to the Supreme. No one else ever knew God like Christ.

He knew the general outlines of the world's history, for he told them. He portrayed many a coming event. He cast a mould with features most perfect—it was an impression from the mould of futurity—and then handed it to man. He knew his own destiny. He was acquainted with his Messiahship, and every office he sustained. Tell me, "Whom think ye that he is?" And oh, to go on enumerating all he knew—how great a book it would fill. Time, strength, space, patience, will not permit. But all these things he knew from another. He obtained this wisdom from God. He ascribes it himself to God; therefore "we speak the things we do know." Who shall convict Christ of lying? Who will be the first one? Who will dare? Who will be so stereotyped, so creed-bound, as to dare call his testimony into question? We will give his own words a hearing, and see if he claims originality for what he says; or, if he gives to God the honor of revealing to him what he knew.

In John 8: 26, Jesus says,—"I have many things to say and to judge of you; but he that sent me is true; and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him." Here Jesus asserts that what he spake was revealed from the Father to his ear—whether he meant physically or mentally it matters not. Said he again in John 15: 15—"Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." Here again Jesus indirectly disclaims the doctrine he taught, as his own. He attributes its origin to God; he said he had heard it from the Father, and he spoke the words of God. But why should I multiply proofs from his own teaching? It is unnecessary. I am only preaching the faith of the messenger of Jesus, who ran before him to prepare his way. Said John the Baptist, "What he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth, and no man receiveth his testimony." John 3: 32. Thus John believed that the knowledge of Christ, which he conveyed to men, had its emanation from God.

Christ's knowledge is derived. He increased in wisdom when on earth. He did not know all things at once, from his birth; but the Father shed brighter and more extensive light into the receptive spirit of Christ continually. How true John's words, "He must increase."

Let us recapitulate. Christ was much wiser than men, even than the wisest of his predecessors—Solomon. More profound in his knowledge. But Christ was inferior in his knowledge to God. He knew much; the Father, his own destiny, what was in man, and the outlines of prophecy, with many other things. But there were some things Christ did not know when he lived with men. He did not know the particulars of the events that should transpire between his departure from earth to heaven and his own second advent to the world. He did not even know the date of his own return. The Father had put these secrets in his own power. He had not then acquainted even his darling Son with them. In short, Jesus Christ was as ignorant of them as men generally. Hear his own words. "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Mark 13: 32. Here, in this passage, Jesus speaks of the Father as having more knowledge than himself; and it is my impression that it was from the same belief in the superior, because intuitive knowledge of God, that the apostle called God the "only wise." Says he, "To God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen." Rom. 16: 27. And again, "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory for ever and ever. Amen." 1 Tim. 1: 2. In the sense of knowing without a teacher, or revealer, God is the only wise. He is the only untaught.

It is probable that Jesus passed on to death, to his cross and passion, to the mortal pain he endured for us, without knowing the minutiæ signified in the Revelation. It is probable that even up to the time of his resurrection he was not cognizant of the "time" of his own second entry into the world. But now the scene is changed.

Jesus knows all things to-day. He is "made perfect" in knowledge. Since the gates of the heaven of heavens have let in the "Lord strong and mighty," a further revelation has been made him. That which the Father kept to himself, and reserved from the Son, it has now pleased him to withhold no longer. And this book of the Revelation is "the revelation" made to Christ. There the eagle eyes may perceive the deep things of God. O God, for sight! O for hearing! O for the spirit of prophecy, to make plain the word of prophecy! O for a larger measure of the spirit of Jesus, to understand "the testimony of Jesus"!

Rejoice! ye believers. This "man Christ Jesus" is "the man whom the King delighteth to honor." On earth he was constantly filling, filling, filling him. But now Christ is filled with all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He can hold no more. He knows every event of time. "The mystery of God" to him "is finished." He knows when he is coming; and he is waiting for the hour, the final hour, that compels his absence, to collapse. He is waiting adown the skies to lead his armies in glory with shouts of triumph. He is waiting for his "appointed time" to come, that he may do his appointed work. This last revelation is the crowning one of all—it completes our Lord Christ. Christ has pre-eminence over all that ever came out of the Father. We read, "It pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." O, it pleases the christian well to have it so. O saint! "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power," etc. Read it all—Col. 2. And now Christ has perfect knowledge. He can never be ignorant of anything. He needs no further light. He has all, and abounds. And so abundantly filled is Christ that he has shed forth the same excellency of knowledge, and spirit of wisdom. He brims, he runs over with holy truth. God can now say in truth, "I have found a man mine equal." He can look upon Christ, and love his image there. "O Christ, he is the fountain" for us, and out of his fulness may all we receive. Some, many of us have drunk our fill at the secret spring; but yet there is enough for others. Now, then, is Jesus exalted. Now in person he contains the attributes of uncreated and unbegotten Deity. Christ is "Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." All the graces of the Spirit ornament him. All the gifts of the Spirit are within his grasp. What a Savior we have.

But Christ said, when with man, "Freely ye have received, freely give." And he acts out his own precepts. He has received out of the Father's treasury, all unbought, "the revelation" we hold in our keeping. He freely received, and he has freely given. The revelation given him he sends us. He calls an angel and delivers to him a commission to come earthward, alight on the isle of Patmos, and through the beloved John convey to us the same "news."

"The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass." That was the ultimate purpose of the Father when he gave Christ the vision—it was that he might reveal it to us. And is this true? And can any one close his eyes, and say he will not look into this scroll? Can any professed disciple of Christ insult Jesus his Master by refusing to look into the mystery? Do you grieve his Spirit in this way? Art thou the man that says, "It is non-essential"? O, then, walk in darkness, stagger, and creep through the world, fearfully, and beset by a thousand dangers. You deserve to fall into many a quagmire, and may God avert your falling into perdition at last. But ye who love Christ, study the book. Blessed are ye who, shunning the ways of the wicked, find your delight in the law of the Lord, and meditate therein day and night. You shall not walk in darkness. You shall see the journey through. Your path, as that of the just, shall grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. You shall be able to recognize the tokens. You shall know what the events mean which transpire around you.

The words of this revelation are to show us things which are taking place. Nay, verily. But "things which must shortly come to pass." But some man will say the promise is broken. Some will object that eighteen hundred years have passed, and therefore the book has proved itself an imposition. Indeed! who says so? What, think you, are eighteen hundred years to the life of Him who is, and who was, and who is to come? What are eighteen hundred years beside the existence of the eternal life? Nothing. No more than a speck beside the whole earth—not as much. But if it was "shortly to come to pass" in the apostle's day, to how few years or months must this "shortly" be dwindled down to now? How near are we to the fulfillment of the last symbol? The signs we see around us say, with emphatic force and nearer meaning, The time is at hand when it shall not more be "shortly," but "it is done." Who among us are ready to hear the angel say, "the revelation has been filled?" Solemn question! Important consideration!

What mistakes have been made by those who have not noticed the future tense of the text. Some tell us that beyond the whirl of the heavenly spheres the redeemed live, and there praise God like the 144,000 of the 5th chapter of this book. They tell us these things are now transpiring. But away, fancy, delusion, untruth! Begone, fables! Says the angel to John, not "I will show thee things which are now taking place;" but "I will show thee things which shall be hereafter." A time hastes greatly when the song of salvation shall burst from a countless throng, as they rise shouting "victory" over death, leading that foe all bleeding and captive at their chariot wheels; but believe me, believe John, believe the angel, believe Christ whom you call "the truth," believe God; the facts of the revelation were not things which were taking place, but soon to come to pass.

And just a thought in conclusion. "The Revelation" is a deep book. It is advanced truth. As I have shown you, Jesus knew all but this prophecy when on earth, and these were the last things revealed to him. It was farthest on in the book. These are the higher lessons of the school of Christ. Fathers, mothers, do you not desire to "go on to perfection," not only in building a godly character, but also in understanding the truth of God? "Grow," I beseech you, not only "in grace," but in knowledge also. I know it takes a good swimmer to launch into this sea; but God makes lowly the foolish wise. So, if any of you lack wisdom, only ask of God; and you shall receive liberally. Search, dig, study the word. In humility, in faith, in prayer, in hope, "read, work, learn, and godly digest" what is here. O, happy the man thus occupied. A special blessing is pronounced on the man who reads, hears, and keeps the prophecy of this book. Will you be the blessed man? God help the heretofore negligent to say, "By the help of God, I will!" Go on to the "stature of the fulness of Christ." You may know much here, if only your ear be kept open to divine revelation. And, dear godly souls, like Jesus you shall know all things hereafter. May God speed the time of perfect knowledge. Amen.

THE CHICAGO FIRE.

F. BURR.

I supposed that the story of the Chicago fire of Oct. 8th and 9th, 1871, had been read by all readers of the Crisis ere this, as it has been published in most secular papers throughout the land. But as I am receiving frequent letters from the east inquiring about it even at this late date, permit me to say a few words about it in the Crisis.

The fire began about ten o'clock Sunday night, and closed its work of devastation on Tuesday morning just before daylight. From the place of commencement on the southwest corner of the burnt district, to the north line of fire is about three and one half miles. The width is from three quarters to one mile. The lake is the eastern boundary, and the north and south branches of the Chicago river its western boundary, except one hundred and ninety-four acres at the south-west corner of the burnt district. The estimate of acres burned over is two thousand one hundred and twenty-four. In this area were seventy-three miles of streets, seventeen thousand four hundred and fifty buildings, the residences of 98,500 people. The fire made a clean sweep of all this space, leaving but one building intact in all its career. This building was a wooden residence on the north side, occupying the centre of a square, the rest of which was shrubbery, lawns, and borders. A picket fence enclosed it, which was only slightly burned. Why this house was not burned has been thought a mystery by many, and every one from abroad, who views the ruins, inquires for the Ogden house.

Mr. Ogden kept his house wet during the day of the fire, by covering it with carpets, etc., and keeping them wet from his cistern. When the fire reached his premises, the wind died down somewhat for a short time, and so his premises escaped utter destruction.

Thousands of buildings of brick, stone, and iron, were utterly demolished. Iron melted, stone calcined, and brick crumbled, before the fiery element. The air was like that of a blast furnace. Hundreds of people were cut off from escape, and driven into the lake to preserve their lives. This they did by sitting or standing in the water and showering themselves. Multitudes rushed on board the ships and craft as they were being towed out into the lake to keep them from burning. About a hundred dead bodies have been found among the ruins. The ruins of the grain elevators are smoking still, as I write (Dec. 28th), and a week ago fires were still burning in various parts of the ruins, being coal that was stowed away for winter use, and which was covered deep by crumbled brick walls. Much furniture and goods were removed to the lake shore for safety, only to be burned up after all. The watchman at the crib two miles out in the lake, the place from whence the water comes in a tunnel to supply the city, only saved the building from being burned by the firebrands which fell upon it like hail, by keeping wet coverings upon it.

Many papers were carried into La Salle St. Tunnel for safety, but the fire found and consumed them, and flaked off pieces of the stone wall of the tunnel far down from the entrance where there was nothing to burn. The only thing that saved the whole city from burning was the providential fact of the wind continuing in one direction towards the lake, and the river assisting to form a line to stop the fire creeping backwards. The supply of water was early cut off by the Water-works burning, and so fire engines could only work along the river. Water was sold on Monday for fifty cents a bucket, brought from artesian wells at the city limits. The city organized relief for the sufferers immediately, and considering all things, I am satisfied the relief committees have done their work as well as any one would.

For two weeks the confusion and disorder in the city were very great, but gradually order and quietness prevailed; but the city is very much overcrowded, and rents are high. Thousands of buildings have been erected since the fire, and the work of laying stone and brick still goes on, even with the thermometer down nearly to zero, the masons beating their trowels and laying their brick in hot mortar.

The story of the fire cannot be told in the short space of a single article. Neither is there any description of the feelings of an eye-witness of its fearful work. The fires of the judgment day alone can surpass it.

To those who would like to obtain a concise, reliable, and cheap account of the Chicago fire, I would say that the January number of the Lakeside Monthly will furnish them what they wish. This number of one hundred pages is wholly devoted to Chicago and the fire, and I consider it fully equal in its value to many higher priced works on the same subject, its articles being interesting, and containing much valuable information. Its price is thirty cents, and can be procured at most all bookstores. If any wish to obtain it, and cannot buy it near by, I will send it to them for the price, and four cents extra for postage. I would also like to say that the Lakeside Monthly is a high-toned, literary magazine, almost, if not quite, unexceptionable to the strictest taste, being free from caricatures, and containing valuable articles on themes interesting to all readers; and if any want a magazine for household reading, this one is as good and profitable a one as I know of. If any wish it, I will hand their names to the publishers, who will furnish it for $3 a year, or sample numbers for 30 cts., and postage four cents. Subscriptions payable in advance. Eld. H. V. Reed, formerly of Harvard, Ill., known by reputation to many of the readers of the Crisis, is connected with the magazine. All communications to me should be addressed to 230 West Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

CAMPMEETING TRAFFIC.

This has come to be one of the great annoyances of these religious feasts, amounting even to a nuisance that ought to be abated. State enactments protect us against huckstering; but local associations and local committees have "discovered that there is money" in it, and have taken it into their own hands to run or rent it, not for the interests of the meetings, but for gain.

What a reproach and detriment to these gatherings of the saints for purely spiritual purposes, to be beset by those greedy of gain, and worse still, for the professed friends of the institution to rent the privilege of erecting tents and stands for the sale of fruits and confectioneries, and soda-water, and mineral water, and ice-cream, even including, in some cases, tobacco and cigars; and thus brand this eminently religious gathering with such an aspect of business, and traffic, and gain, as almost to lead a stranger to the belief that a campmeeting is gotten up in the interests of epicures and pleasure-seekers within, or a profane horde of eager, grasping, money-lovers without.

With just as much propriety may our trustees rent this privilege in the vestibule of our churches during a revival, and for a certain stipulated sum let the stands be erected there and all around the sanctuary, and let the sales go on without, while the revival goes on within; and thus enable the trustees to meet their current expenses.

No, no, we say in the name of common propriety and consistency, as well as religion, away with the whole business; overturn these tables and stands; drive out these money-changers; simple board is enough. Let everything else be excluded; and let these money-lovers, who resort to a campmeeting only to make pecuniary gain of religion, be taught to satisfy their money-lust (if satisfied it must be) elsewhere than at the sanctuary of God. And let the world know that God's saints resort to a campmeeting for higher and nobler purposes than to eat and drink, and feast on luxuries.—Communicated by A. Ross.—Advocate of Holiness.

CHARLIE'S LADDER.

Charlie Drummond was writing a copy, so the letters were big round ones that anybody could read without spectacles. Charlie was not at school. He was only seven years old, but he had left school some time before, because his father and mother were so poor that they could not afford to pay for his schooling, and they thought that Charlie was old enough to earn a shilling or two towards his own food.

But there was a very long name that Charlie was not a little afraid of. It was ignoramus. He quite understood what it meant, and he felt as if it would grieve him very much if it should ever be used on him. And that was one of the reasons why, when he came home in the evening, as soon as he had his tea, he always read to his mother for a bit out of some book, while she told him how to pronounce the difficult words, and then wrote a copy. He took immense pains with his writing; it was very seldom, indeed, that a blot could be seen in his book; and yet this evening he was thinking very much less of the right way to form the letters than of the words which were composed of them.

"Where there's a will there's a way."

Charlie laid down his pen and looked at his mother, who was sitting by the fireside sewing. Then he said the words over again.

"It isn't true, mother, I suppose," said he presently.

"What isn't true, Charlie?"

"Where there's a will there's a way."

"Oh, yes, I think that is quite true."

"But if it were true, so many things might happen that never happen now."

"Yes, of course."

"No boy would be obliged to be always poor because he happened to be born so?"

"No."

"If a boy was determined to be clever, he might be clever although he could not go to school?"

"Oh, yes."

Charlie was very quiet for a few minutes, looking very thoughtful.

Then he spoke.

"Then I will just try for myself whether it is or not. If it be true, I will be a master some day and have a factory of my own, and employ hundreds of men."

Charlie's mother laughed at that.

"That is such a high ladder to try to climb, Charlie," she said. "There would be more chance of your succeeding if you were not quite so ambitious. You might aspire to be one of the best workmen with good wages, or even foreman; but to want to be a master is such a great thing."

"Of course it is a great thing, mother, and that is why I want to gain it. I should think if the way is difficult, the will must be stronger, that is all."

Charlie made up his mind that very night, and he did not unmake it again. He knew that if he should tell any body that he meant to be a mill-owner, he would only be laughed at; for at present he was the lowest in the factory in which he worked, and could do nothing but sweep up the place and wait upon the foreman, and do any odd jobs that wanted doing, but he meant it all the same.

It happened that this copy was the last in the book; so that night he wrote under "Where there's a will there's a way," "I mean to be a mill-owner—Charles Drummond," and then he locked it up.

But many times in his after life he took it out and looked at it; and he never forgot the evening when he sat in the kitchen with his mother and wrote it.

Charlie knew very well if he only wished to have a mill of his own and men in his employ, he was not likely to get them. To will, means more than to wish. A boy may sit in front of the fire with his arms folded, lazily wishing that his lessons were learned; but that is of no use at all, unless he bestirs himself and sets to work, he cannot complete his task. If, however, he wills to learn them perfectly, he gets his books and slate, and works heartily until he has done what he intended.

Charlie wished, but he did not stop at that, he determined.

A week after he had written his copy, his mother said to him, "Well, Charlie, have you done anything towards being a master this week?"

"Yes, mother," said Charlie, promptly. "I got one of the men to show me how one part of the work was done. I learned at home the way to do sums in a new rule. And I have saved up sixpence toward making a fortune. They are not bad beginnings, are they mother?"

His mother smiled, but as Charlie was so very much in earnest, she would not say much to discourage him.

"No, my boy; they are not bad beginnings, but very good ones. If you go on week after week, great results may follow from these small beginnings."

"Now I can do the work, mother, I mean to try and do it so well that the foreman shall notice it, and make me something better than odd boy."

"That's right, Charlie. I hope you will be successful."

In a week or two Charlie came home with a very bright face.

"I have got on the first step of the ladder, mother," he said. "I am to do regular work and have five shillings a week."

His mother congratulated him, and told him to keep on as he had begun.

"Don't forget, Charlie, that 'where there's a will there's a way.'"

"I am not very likely ever to forget that, mother," said Charlie.

A few months passed away, and Charlie came home again in great glee.

"I have got another step, mother. The foreman says that as I do my work better than any of the other boys, he shall put me on better work and higher wages."

"My boy," said his mother, "let us thank God for his goodness."

"I do mother," said Charlie. "I know I should not have got on so well as I have done if God had not blessed me."

"You have ascended two steps of the ladder very quickly," said Charlie's mother, "but it is yet a very long way to the top."

"Oh, I know it is mother; but I mean to go on steadily until the very top is reached. I don't expect it to be easy, and I suppose it will take me a long time; but I shall not get tired of trying, however long it takes."

They were brave words, though if they had been only words they would have been worth very little; but Charlie meant what he said.

"I am on the third step now, mother," he said some time after this. "I have the most particular work given me to do, and I am to have as much money as I can earn."

That was a good thing. Charlie's savings increased rapidly after that, every week adding to the store.

The next step was the foreman's place, which had become vacant.

Years passed by, and then Charles Drummond had saved enough money to purchase a mill. He did not at first employ hundreds of people; he began with a few, and went on increasing until long before he was an old man he had not only hundreds but thousands in his employ, who loved and respected him, and thought him the best master in the world.

"And it's all owing to God's blessing, mother, and the copy I wrote in the book that night."

His mother was no longer at work in the kitchen, but resting in the comfortable parlor her son had provided for her.

"It is all owing to God's blessing upon my son's determination and perseverance," she said. "I am glad you have had put upon your new factory the old motto, 'Where there's a will there's a way.'"—The Christian World.

SOUR WORDS.

1. They indicate a sour origin. They show that the heart is in an acid state. The hearer of such words cannot but have its own, and not very complimentary opinion of the speaker.

2. They make the speaker himself more sour. Words react upon those who utter them. They add fuel to the fire and augment the heat.

3. Sour words dangerously tend to make the hearer sour. They create an atmosphere which he breathes, and the virus is likely to penetrate his soul and make him sour too. Vinegar gives its own character to anything it can reach. So it is not the fault of the sour in heart and speech that they do not spoil all the sweetness there is about them.

4. Sour words are all but certain to give sourness to the countenance. The face is a tell-tale of the heart, and the heart's sourness, rising to the lips in bitter words, has wonderful power over all the features. Look on the countenance as the owner is using sharp and bitter words. Do you see a smiling June, or a scowling November?

5. Sour words are not soon forgotten. Sharp and piercing, they enter, like iron, into the soul. As with hooks of steel, they hang on to memory. All that you can recollect of some people is the sour words you have heard them use.

Now, my young friends, if sour words indicate a sour heart, and make the speaker more sour, and make hearers sour, and give a sour countenance, and make one's sourness long and painfully remembered—there are five reasons why such words should never be found upon your lips. Let the last ones you have used be the last!—Simon, in N. Y. Observer.

KIND ACTIONS.—How sweet is the remembrance of a kind act. As you rest on your pillows, or rise in the morning, it gives you delight. Who will not be kind? Who will not do good? Who will not visit those who are afflicted in body and mind? There is luxury in remembering a kind act.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

ADVANTAGES OF TEMPERANCE IN EATING.

The ancient physicians of Egypt ascribed all diseases to the overloading of the stomach, and their Materia Medica was limited to emetics and cathartics; and abstinence from food was their chief advice.

Cheyn said that if we would keep our stomachs clean, we should find our heads clear. The lamentable prevalence of brain diseases is more attributable to the overloading of the stomach, than to overworking of the brain. The brain is weakened by the general prostration of the whole system, and first proclaims the misuse of its powers.

The ancient philosophers, from Pythagoras, all agreed that it was needful to relieve the stomach by a careful abstemiousness, when they desired to make demands upon the imagination or reason for the exercise of all their forces.

Mr. Pitt, when he intended delivering an oration before the House of Commons, dined on cold mutton.

Newton confined himself to a slight diet while he was composing his dissertation upon colors.

Boerhaave remarked that the oppression of food on the stomach almost extinguishes the active powers of the mind.

A mathematician can resolve a problem before dinner, while after a full repast his mind would be too dull and inactive either to study or demonstrate. A blind man who had learned to distinguish colors by the touch, could do it only when fasting.

Law, the founder of paper credit, and a financier of much ability, was remarkable for his abstemiousness, and ate the smallest possible amount to support life when engaged in subjects of deep calculation.

The newspapers of the day are filled with notices of sudden deaths, attributed to heart disease, when often the verdict should be, "died from over-eating."

Habitual over-eating produces dyspepsia, nausea, headaches, colics, and many of the other ills so common to mankind.

The quality of our food and its preparation, are often of as much importance as its quantity.

Temperance and simplicity in food will contribute more to our health and vigor than all the medicines or tonics in the druggists' shops.

Sir James Eyre, one of the physicians to Queen Victoria, says perhaps we might lay it down as a rule that the majority of men eat twice as much as is really required for the support of health and strength, but in most cases the error is to be referred to ignorance of the laws of health, rather than to the mere pleasure of over-indulgence. It is a common mistake among all classes that the more we eat the stronger we shall be, and nothing is more fully believed than that our vigor depends upon the quantity as well as the quality of our food.—S. O. J., in Pure Gold.

TAKE ENOUGH SLEEP.

Said one of the oldest and most successful farmers in this State: "I do not care to have my men get up before five or half-past five in the morning, and if they go to bed early and can sleep soundly, they will do more work than if they got up at four or half-past four." We do not believe in the eight-hour law, but nevertheless, are inclined to think that, as a general rule, we work too many hours on the farm. The best man we ever had to dig ditches seldom worked when digging by the rod, more than nine hours a day. And it is so in chopping wood by the cord; the men who accomplish the most, work the fewest hours. They bring all their brain and muscle into exercise and make every blow tell. A slow, plodding Dutchman may turn a grindstone or a fanning mill better than an energetic Yankee, but this kind of work is now mostly done by horse-power, and the farmer needs above all else, a clear head, with all his faculties of mind and muscle light and active, and under complete control. Much, of course, depends on temperament, but as a rule, such men need sound sleep and plenty of it. When a boy on the farm, we were told that Napoleon needed only four hours sleep, and the old nonsense of "five hours for a man, six hours for a woman, and seven hours for a fool," was often quoted. But the truth is that Napoleon was enabled, in a great measure, to accomplish what he did from the faculty of sleeping soundly—of sleeping when he slept and working when he worked. We have sat in one of his favorite traveling carriages, and it was so arranged that he could lie down at full length, and when dashing through the country as fast as eight horses, frequently changed, could carry him, he slept soundly, and when he arrived at his destination was as fresh as if he had risen from a bed of down. Let farmers, and especially farmers' boys, have plenty to eat, nothing to "drink," and all the sleep they can take.—N. Y. Agriculturist.

A USEFUL HINT FOR COLD WEATHER.—The reason a room takes so long to get warm after a fire has been kindled is that the air goes up in a steady column from the mouth of the register, sides of the stove, or front of the grate, to the ceiling of the room, and then distributes itself downwards, which of course is a slow process. To expedite this take a palm leaf fan, a shawl, a large towel, or something similar, fan violently or swing the shawl vigorously, thus compelling the upper and lower strata of air to unite, the hot upper to mix with the cold lower. In this way the upper portion, where the thermometer would indicate eighty, and the lower, where it would stand at forty, will be compelled to mix, and one would be surprised to witness how much sooner the apartment becomes comfortable.

A STRANGER HERE.

W. B. H.

Wealth, and fame, and worldly pleasure—
Yes! I I cast you all away;
Heaven-bound pilgrims find no leisure
Here, to heap up worthless treasure
Which will soon in flames decay.

A stranger here, O, what should charm me
From my hope in Him above?
Satan's wiles alone alarm me,
Lord, O let them ne'er disarm me
Of my blessed Savior's love.

To the world O crucify me—
Savior, I'll obey thy voice;
"Fool," "Fanatic," scoffers style me,—
"Blest are ye when men revile ye
For my sake,"—Rejoice! rejoice!

Rise, my soul, with exultation,
Rise, and reap thy rich reward;
Guided by His revelation,
Hope thou soon to see salvation,
And be forever with the Lord.

THOSE TWO YEARS.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

There appears to be much opposition by a considerable number of Adventists to the termination of the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14, some two years subsequent to the 1335 days of chapter 12: 12. Aside from the impossibility of furnishing any reliable data from which those periods can be terminated simultaneously; the prophecy itself (in the eighth of Daniel), speaking of the events that were to be fulfilled in the interval of 2300 years, refers us specially to the "last end of the indignation," within the limits of the 2300 years. As the last end of the indignation here referred to must be reached before the period of time referred to can end, it follows as an absolute necessity that the Lord must come before the days can terminate. For, first in the prophecy, the question is—"How long the vision, the daily, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" The anti-christian powers, termed "the daily, and the transgression of desolation," were to tread under foot the sanctuary and the host for a period of 2300 years. Whatever is meant or embraced in the term "sanctuary," whether Jerusalem, Palestine, or the entire earth, it is to be occupied by these powers till they are removed after the coming of Christ.

At the coming of Christ, the first work to be done is, the resurrection of the holy dead and translation of the living saints to meet him in the air, followed by "the marriage of the Lamb"; after this appears Christ on a white horse, amid opened heaven, the "Faithful and True," in righteousness to judge and make war; "His eyes as a flame of fire, and on his head many crowns; and he had a name written that no man knew, but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; and his name is called the Word of God. And the armies in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen white and clean. And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings, and Lord of lords. And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God; that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great. And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army." Rev. 19: 11–20. Compare with Ezek. 38: 18–23, and 39: 17–21.

This scene is laid after the marriage of the Lamb is celebrated, and in it is represented the kings of the earth, and the beast, with their armies, contesting for the dominion of the earth with the Lord Jesus Christ. Till these powers yield the sovereignty of the earth to Christ, the 2300 years have not ended; for these powers are to tread under foot, first, the sanctuary and the host. As the host (or the saints) after the resurrection are engaged with Christ against the beast and the kings of the earth, it follows as a necessity that they cannot be trodden under foot an equal period with the sanctuary. But after the agents of destruction which Christ will use in removing the wicked nations from his sanctuary have done their work, then shall the sanctuary be "justified." Justified is the proper rendering of the Hebrew word (tsah-dak), which occurs forty-one times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and in no other instance is it translated "cleansed," except in the text of Dan. 8: 14, and there in the margin it is rendered "justified."

Since God's sanctuary has been defiled and trodden under foot by the wicked powers of earth, this defilement must be removed by some process of cleansing, as the antecedent of justification. The antecedent of man's justification is repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ as our justifier; in him only can man be brought into favor with God. Jerusalem is certainly embraced in the term sanctuary (Dan. 8: 14), and Christ says that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke 21: 24. We read in the fourteenth chapter of Zech., when the day of the Lord cometh all nations will have been gathered against Jerusalem to battle. Then the Lord shall go forth and "fight against those nations. . . . And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east [this Scripture presents a personal conflict between Christ and the nations of the earth, resulting in their utter discomfiture]; and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley, and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north and half of it toward the south. . . And the Lord shall be king over all the earth; in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name one. All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem; and it shall be lifted up and inhabited" (or abide—margin.)

In connection with this work, the nations will experience Christ's indignation, as Gabriel with great emphasis had revealed to the prophet Daniel. "And he said, Behold, I make thee to know what shall be in the last end of the indignation; for at the time appointed the end shall be." The last end of the indignation is not reached till the close of the 2300 years, according to Dan. 8: 19. But Michael stands up (one like God) to reign, and then commences a "time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." Dan. 12: 1. This synchronizes with the sounding of the seventh angel, or last trump, which wakes the holy dead to life, and introduces the third woe upon the wicked nations (Rev. 11: 14, 15); then they will feel the direful effects of Christ's indignation. This strikingly agrees with the last three verses of Isa. 26—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain."

Here, also, at the epoch of the resurrection, commences the work of indignation on the inhabitants of the earth. If the work of indignation commences at this point, the 2300 years do not end here, because they reach to the last end of it. The prophet Jeremiah also testifies to this same period of indignation (10: 10)—"But the Lord is the true God; he is the living God, and an everlasting king. At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation." Again (Zeph. 3: 8)—"Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy." The foregoing scriptures may be compared with Isa. 10, especially verses 12, 23–27. The twenty-fifth verse is very expressive—"For yet a very little while, and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction." After the remnant of Jacob has returned unto the mighty God, then "the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined, in the midst of all the land"; and the scourge that he shall stir up against his enemies shall be "according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb," where "the Lord set every man's sword against his fellow, even throughout all the host." Then will be witnessed a scene of woe without a parallel in the history of the world, in the visitation of God's indignation upon those that have trodden under foot the sanctuary and the host.

The word "indignation" in all the above quotations is from the Hebrew word sah-gam, and refers to God's special wrath reserved and to be visited upon the wicked nations of the earth. There are many more Scripture references bearing directly on the point set forth above, that might have been presented, but we think enough has now been given to establish the point that the 2300 days of Dan. 8: 14 do not end till the anti-christian powers that have trodden down the sanctuary and the host shall have been removed from the territory they now occupy. For it is not till this work is accomplished, that the sanctuary can be said to be justified. Therefore the 2300 days cannot end simultaneously with the 1335.

Traditionary ideas and notions have strong power and influence over Adventists, as well as over other people. According to the premises, in arranging the dates connected with these prophetic periods by Bro. Miller, they were made to end simultaneously; and thus this traditionary notion has almost become an article of faith among us; and the minds of many are still wandering in confusion; but (to the praise of God be it spoken) some are getting disenthralled from the power and influence of tradition; "for the Spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2: 10), and it is the prerogative of the Spirit to guide the church into all truth, and to show them "things to come" (John 16: 13); and we are confident that no legitimate interpretation of those prophetic periods will end them at the same time. The scope of the prophecy in the eighth of Daniel forbids such an application.

AN EXHORTATION.

C. H. BARNES.

"And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."—1 John 2: 28.

John had written his account of Jesus' life, death, and resurrection, that its readers might believe that he was the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing they might have life through his name. But this life is to be given only to them that continue faithful to the end, hence the need of patient endurance. To them that seek for glory, honor, and immortality by a patient continuance in well doing, eternal life will be given in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, whom he hath ordained to be the Judge of quick and dead. Knowing the many influences that would tend to lead them astray from the great Shepherd of the sheep, John encourages his brethren to steadfastness—"And now, little children, abide in him, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

That we may more fully appreciate his counsel, notice

1. The event to which he cites them, viz., the appearing of Jesus. Here he alludes not to the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost; that was in the past; not to the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus; not to the day of death; not to any of these events, but to the appearing of Jesus. He refers to the fulfillment of the angels' promise—"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11. He went up personally, visibly, gloriously; even so will he return.

When they that had heard him preach, "and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth"; when they that had seen him dead and buried, and afterward eaten with him; when they that had been instructed by him during forty days after his resurrection, and seen him ascend bodily into heaven; when such as these heard the return of Jesus mentioned, they knew what it meant. They knew that he had been exalted to the right hand of the Father, to act as Mediator between God and man, until the time of probation should expire, when he would come to earth again in judgment; and had they been pointed to the transactions of the day of Pentecost for the fulfilment of his promise to return, undoubtedly they would have replied, "No, this is not the fulfillment of his promise to come again, but 'is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel.'" Acts 2: 16.

Had there been any Universalists to point to the siege and overthrow of Jerusalem, as being the accomplishment of his promise, they would probably have referred them to the words of Jesus when mentioning its overthrow, in which he said, "All these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. . . . All these things are the beginning of sorrows." Matt. 24: 6, 8.

Had our Orthodox friends, who think "death is the gate to endless joys," been there to tell them that death ushers them into the presence of their Lord, and that was what was meant when Jesus said he would come again, these early christians would probably have said, "Not so; instead of that we believe 'the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so [i. e., in this manner] shall we ever be with the Lord.'" 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.

Had there been any there that said his coming was to be by a gradual dispelling of moral darkness, and the unfolding of spiritual truth until all the world should become enlightened, these early believers would probably have quoted our Savior's words, in which he says, in opposition to this theory of a gradual appearing—"As the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24: 27.

From the New Testament stand-point, the time "when he shall appear" will be the gladdest, most glorious, and awfully grand day that has ever dawned upon this earth. It will be the day of eternal redemption, when the ransomed millions will join in singing the "new song," which none but they can sing: "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 9, 10. By his appearing, John means his personal appearing in glory at the end of this age.

Notice

2. His counsel—"abide in him." He evidently has in his mind the figure that Jesus had used formerly, when he said—"I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. . . . Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing." John 15: 1, 4, 5. Herein lies one cause, if not the cause, of success. He who is daily growing up into Christ; who is deriving strength and nourishment from him, can but exert a saving influence wherever he may be. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Ps. 90: 1.

To successfully resist temptation, and endure trials, and overcome obstacles, it is needful to have succor from that mighty One on whom help has been laid. And if supported by his arm, we shall learn the lesson Paul learned: that we can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us. By abiding in Christ, we have him abide in us, so that Christ identifies himself, as it were, with the christian, thus enabling him to be more than a conqueror in the warfare he is waging. Whatever the burden may be that he is called upon to bear, he is not permitted to sink beneath its weight. The power which sustains the universe is exercised also in strengthening the children of men, so that if they fall, they shall not be utterly cast down; for the Lord upholdeth them with his hand.

The branch partaketh of the root and fatness of the tree; hence if the root be holy, so are the branches. If we be abiding in Christ, we shall partake of his nature; we shall be transformed by the renewing of our minds, and so closely allied to Christ, and he to us, that each one can say with Paul—"I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." Gal. 2: 20. Abiding in Christ we bear fruit; severed from him we become barren and unfruitful. Abiding in him we have a refuge from every stormy wind: a relief from all the burdens which weigh us down; a source of joy even in sadness; a blessed comfort and consolation even in the midst of sorrow and distress.

Blessed truth; blessed privilege; christian pilgrim, ever prize it. Let nothing cause thee to neglect it, but ever abiding in Christ, receive daily "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," and then indeed thou shalt be called a tree of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, and he will be glorified.

Abiding in Christ we not only have help in the present, but in the day, when, before the assembled universe, the children of God shall be manifested, we shall "have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." If this, then, be the result of abiding in Christ, who then can knowingly live severed from him? Let us who have been grafted into the true vine thus continue, and in the "sweet bye and bye," which is so soon to be be enjoyed by the faithful children of God,

"We shall sing on that beautiful shore,
The melodious song of the blest,
And our spirits shall sorrow no more—
Not a sigh for the blessing of rest."

Salem, Mass.

THE PROPHETIC PERIODS.—No. 4.

DANIEL 8th AND 9th CONSIDERED.

B. GLOW.

But what I regard as paramount to all else, is the fact that Gabriel left Daniel in total ignorance of the vision, with the significant charge to "shut it up for many days"—about fifteen years—plainly implying that after many days he would return and unfold the whole matter. There is no rule of criticism that can weaken this view of the case. The whole thing would be a dead letter to-day, and God dishonored,—for he commanded Gabriel to make "the man understand the vision,—had he not returned to explain the vision more fully.

As it regards the exact epoch of the said vision, we have got to rely upon human testimony partly. God did not give us the chronology of events. He has indeed shown us very nearly where the 2300 days commenced, in pointing to an event in the midst of the Medo-Persian empire, upon which we can rely with great assurance. It was that dreadful decree granted to Haman, the Amalekite chieftain, to slaughter the whole Jewish race on the thirteenth day of Adar, the twelfth month of the year; which decree was extorted from the king by misrepresentation and fraud, as subsequent events showed; and the perpetrators of the dreadful crime suffered to the full extent the vengeance of their own hatred and spite. But the heralds of death were sent "pushing" through the land, westward, and northward, and southward, with the death-warrant of all the Jews, both young and old, little children and women in one day. It was the most horrid act that mortal man ever devised, and it sent a thrill of distress through the land that made the heathen themselves tremble. God's ancient people, a mighty nation, were to be slaughtered like wild beasts. There was no arm to save, nor eye to pity, as viewed from the ranks of men. It was a political earthquake, that shook the moral sensibilities of the heathen, and invoked the intervention of God himself to stay it in its course; an event more dreadful than the deluge, as it fell within the comprehension of all men, and sent a thrill of wild despair into all the earth.

Upon a former occasion, the Red Sea divided her waters, and this same people escaped the sword that was drawn in anger to destroy them. But now a broad sea of blood lies before them, their enemies are encamped all around them, and the heralds of death are "pushing" westward, and northward, and southward, with positive orders to all the subordinate princes of the vast empire to prepare for the general slaughter. A wailing is heard in the land, and mournful prayers are uttered with tongues that never prayed before. God is moved to pity. The tide of blood is checked in its course; and now the camp of Israel sends forth a shout of victory that rends the heavens and fills their enemy's camp with fear and trembling. But they venture on, and, like the Egyptians, are overtaken with the returning tide, and seventy-five thousand eight hundred of the Amalekites perished in their own blood. In this I see a literal fulfilment of the bear raising himself up on one side, having three ribs in his mouth—the remnant of the Amalekites—who said, "Arise, devour much flesh"—meaning the Jews; but God overruled the decree, and turned it upon their own heads. So we see that there were two sides to this question, for there were two decrees; one against the Jews, and the other against their enemies. See Esther 8, 3 and 8. The devouring of much flesh was all on one side, and fulfilled to the letter; as seventy-five thousand eight hundred Amalekites were devoured, and not a single Jew fell in the conflict. See Esther 7: 7—"And the king arising from the banquet of wine in his wrath went into the garden." The bear "raised up itself on one side"; and his indignation against the Amalekites arose to the highest pitch of vengeance. The bear literally "devoured much flesh." But all on one side. "It raised itself up on one side," i. e., in behalf of the Jews, and against the Amalekites.

Mordecai enjoined the Jews to "celebrate that day yearly, throughout their generations," and they do celebrate it to this day. It was a new era in the history of their race, and well fitting the epoch of the said vision. The ram standing before the river Ulai in Shushan, the capital of the Persian empire, was the first thing that Daniel saw in the vision.

Then it follows that it was the beginning of the vision. And what we now desire is, to know where the said empire lies, upon the best chronological charts. We are told that upon the fall of Babylon the Medes and Persians took the kingdom, B. C. 491. Upon the fall of the Medes and Persians, B. C. 332, the Grecians came into power, and held dominion over the whole oriental world, as the Medes and Persians had before them. Then it follows that the Medes and Persians reigned one hundred and fifty-nine years, between the fall of Babylon and the rise of the Grecian empire. And it is within the limits of this narrow circle we must search for the definite epoch of the vision. It is clear that we cannot locate it anywhere within sixty-two years next succeeding the fall of Babylon, else the sanctuary would have been cleansed, and the Lord of hosts would be reigning now in "Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Remember this! What king sat upon the throne immediately succeeding sixty-two years from the commencement of the Medo-Persian reign? The aggregate of all the kings that reigned previous to the sole reign of Artaxerxes the Great was about fifty-two years. Then it follows that the said sixty-two years reach ten years into the reign of Artaxerxes; and the vision could not therefore have commenced previous to this, else (as we have remarked) the "sanctuary" would have been cleansed ere this. The tenth year of Artaxerxes synchronizes with B. C. 428. Then we may begin to search for some monument that will designate the year of the vision, and I shall expect to find it when and where the said ram had attained his full growth, and the said horns their highest altitude. I shall also expect to find the ram "pushing," not in a military sense (as I hope to show from sound and logical reasoning), but politically, and with the view of exterminating a nation that would not bow down to the dumb idols of the land, nor worship at the shrine of an Amalekite prince.

"The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia." And "I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward, so that no beast might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand, but he did according to his will, and became great." This ram was standing quietly before the river Ulai in Shushan, the capital of the Medo-Persian empire; and it is said that his horns were "high"—margin, "great." This implies that the political power and military strength of the empire had attained its highest point of greatness and glory, when first discovered; that its former history had been one of progress, from comparative weakness, and that here lies the epoch of the vision. Let us see if there is anything on record that will sustain this view of the case.

Setting aside the concurrent testimony of profane historians, and relying wholly upon the Bible, we feel assured that we can satisfy the most skeptical minds upon this question. "Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia, and the fourth shall be far richer than they all, and by his strength, through his riches, he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia." Dan. 11: 2. Now this was uttered in the reign of Cyrus the First, king of Persia, and with the view of giving us a clew to the epoch of the vision, or the commencement of the 2300 days. Then it follows that the fourth king from Cyrus had all the elements of greatness, riches and strength, and stood higher upon the stage of national fame than all his predecessors. This was Xerxes, the representative head of the horn that came up last; and Artaxerxes, his son and successor, inherited his father's vast estate, from India even unto Ethiopia, and carried it forward with great pomp and pride to the close of his successful reign. Here, the final restoration of the Jews was accomplished, and a new era dawned upon them.

Then it follows that the vision originated somewhere within the reign of these two kings. That it did not originate in the reign of Xerxes, is plainly implied in the declaration—"There shall stand up yet three kings in Persia." Dan. 11: 2. This was uttered in the third year of Cyrus, the first king of Persia—mark that—(Dan. 10: 1), in connection with the declaration—"Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days; for yet the vision is for many days." Uttered, too, with the view of pointing more distinctly to the commencement of the vision, or of the 2300 days. Query. Why tell us of three kings that were yet to stand up in Persia, as if these were the last and only kings to stand up yet in that empire? Did he not know that some nine or ten kings would yet stand up in Persia? Most assuredly he did, but he knew likewise that only three would precede the vision. No criticism can weaken this view of the case.

About seventeen years previous to this last interview with Daniel, Gabriel had told him that the "vision of the evening and the morning [2300 days] was true," wherefore "shut thou up the vision," for it shall be for "many days"; signifying plainly that he did not intend to give him a full "understanding" of it then, but would subsequently return and unfold the whole matter. Hence he addresses Daniel (upon the last visit) with the perfectly natural and significant language—"Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days; for yet the vision shall be for many days"; and in the very next breath adds—"There shall stand up yet three kings in Persia." All this plainly implies that the vision, in its primary sense and meaning, relates to and concerns Daniel's people. Let us bear this in mind, as we shall have something more to say upon this matter hereafter.

It is manifest upon the very face of the foregoing facts, that the epoch of the vision lies in the reign of Artaxerxes. It could not be any later, from the fact that the empire began to decline immediately after his death. Then it follows that it lies somewhere here, and we may find it in the "pushing" of the ram. The ram was pushing westward, and northward, and southward, so that no beast might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great. We admit that this seems to imply, at first view, that the said empire would, at the time designated in the vision, i. e., when the horns were high, be carrying on an aggressive war against foreign nations, in the west, and in the north, and in the south, all at one and the same time; and that no nation upon earth would be able to stand before them. But upon mature reflection, and a thorough investigation of all the historic facts in relation to the Persian wars, we find that it is an unwarranted assumption, and tending to impeach the sacred oracles of truth; as the facts are all, and in the most positive sense, too, opposed to this view of the case. There is no record upon earth that warrants such a conclusion; nor can it be shown that even the Romans, the exceeding and terrible beast, were ever engaged in a foreign war of such magnitude as the said "pushing" seems to imply.

Janesville, Wis.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

JOHN WESLEY.

Q. What is Christian perfection?

A. The loving God with all our heart, mind, soul, and strength. This implies that no wrong temper, none contrary to love remains in the soul; and that all thoughts, words, and actions are governed by pure love.

Q. Do you affirm that this perfection excludes all infirmities, ignorance, and mistake?

A. I continually affirm quite the contrary, and always have done so.

Q. But how can every thought, word, and work be governed by pure love, and the man be subject at the same time to ignorance and mistake?

A. I see no contradiction here. A man may be filled with pure love, and still be liable to mistake. Indeed I do not expect to be freed from actual mistake, till this mortal puts on immortality. . . . For we cannot now think at all, but by the mediation of these bodily organs, which have suffered equally with the rest of our frame. And hence we cannot avoid sometimes thinking wrong, till this corruptible shall have put on incorruption.

But we may carry this thought farther yet. A mistake in judgment may possibly occasion a mistake in practice. For instance, Mr. De Renty's mistake touching the nature of mortification, arising from prejudice of education, occasioned that practical mistake, his wearing an iron girdle. And a thousand such instances there may be, even in those who are in the highest state of grace. Yet where every word and action springs from love, such a mistake is not properly a sin. However, it cannot bear the rigor of God's justice, but needs the atoning blood.

Q. What was the judgment of all our brethren who met at Bristol in August, 1758, on this head?

A. It was expressed in these words: 1. Every one may mistake as long as he lives: 2. A mistake in opinion may occasion a mistake in practice: 3. Every such mistake is a transgression of the perfect law. Therefore, 4. Every such mistake, were it not for the blood of atonement, would expose to eternal damnation. 5. It follows that the most perfect have continual need of the merits of Christ, even for their actual transgressions, and may say for themselves, as well as for their brethren, "Forgive us our trespasses."

This easily accounts for what might otherwise seem to be utterly unaccountable, namely: that those who are not offended when we speak of the highest degree of love, yet will not hear of living without sin. The reason is, they know all men are liable to mistake, and that in practice as well as in judgment. But they do not know, or do not observe, that this is not sin if love is the sole principle of action.

Q. But still, if they live without sin, does not this exclude the necessity of a mediator? At least, is it not plain that they stand no longer in need of Christ in his priestly office?

A. Far from it. None feel their need of Christ like these; none so entirely depend upon him. For Christ does not give life to the soul separate from, but in and with himself. Hence his words are equally true of all men, in whatsoever state of grace they are: "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me; without" or separate from "me, ye can do nothing."

In every state we need Christ in the following respects: 1. Whatever grace we receive, it is a free gift from him: 2. We receive it as his purchase, merely in consideration of the price he paid: 3. We have this grace not only from Christ, but in him. For our perfection is not like that of a tree, which flourishes by the sap derived from its own root, but, as was said before, like that of a branch, which, united to the vine, bears fruit, but severed from it, is dried up and withered: 4. All our blessings, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, depend on his intercession for us, which is one branch of his priestly office, whereof, therefore, we have always equal need; 5. The best of men still need Christ in his priestly office to atone for their omissions, their shortcomings, (as some not improperly speak,) their mistakes in judgment and practice, and their defects of various kinds. For these are all deviations from the perfect law, and consequently need an atonement. Yet that they are not properly sins we apprehend may appear from the words of St. Paul: "He that loveth another hath fulfilled the law, for love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. 13: 8–10. Now mistakes, and whatever infirmities necessarily flow from the corruptible state of the body, are no way contrary to love, nor therefore in the Scripture sense sin.

To explain myself a little further on this head. 1. Not only sin properly so called, that is, a voluntary transgression of a known law, but sin improperly so called, that is, an involuntary transgression of a divine law, known or unknown, needs the atoning blood. 2. I believe there is no such perfection in this life as excludes these involuntary transgressions, which I apprehend to be naturally conquent on the ignorance and mistakes inseparable from mortality. 3. Therefore sinless perfection is a phrase I never use, lest I should seem to contradict myself. 4. I believe a person filled with the love of God is still liable to these involuntary transgressions. 5. Such transgressions you may call sins, if you please; I do not, for the reasons above mentioned.

Q. What advice would you give to those that do, and those that do not call them so?

A. Let those that do not call them sins never think that themselves or any other persons are in such a state as that they can stand before infinite justice without a mediator. This must argue either the deepest ignorance, or the highest arrogance and presumption.

Let those who do call them so beware how they confound these defects with sins properly so called. But how will they avoid it? How will these be distinguished from those, if they are all promiscuously called sins? I am much afraid, if we should allow any sins to be consistent with Christian perfection, few would confine the idea to those defects concerning which only the assertion could be true.

Q. But how can a liableness to mistake consist with perfect love? 2. Is it not a person who is perfected in love every moment under its influence? And can any mistake flow from pure love?

A. I answer, 1. Many mistakes may consist with pure love: 2. Some may accidentally flow from it. I mean love itself may incline us to mistake. The pure love of our neighbor springing from the love of God, "thinketh no evil," "believeth and hopeth all things." Now this very temper, unsuspicious, ready to believe and hope the best of all men, may occasion our thinking some men better than they really are. Here there is a manifest mistake, accidentally flowing from pure love.

Q. How then shall we avoid setting Christian perfection too high or to low?

A. By keeping to the Bible, and setting it just as high as the Scripture does. It is nothing higher and nothing lower than this: the pure love of God and man; the loving God with all our heart and soul, and our neighbor as ourselves: it is love governing the heart and life, running through all our tempers, words, and actions.

Q. Suppose one had attained to this, would you advise him to speak of it?

A. At first, perhaps, he would scarce be able to refrain, the fire would be so hot within him; his desire to declare the loving kindness of the Lord carrying him away like a torrent. But afterward he might; and then it would be advisable not to speak of it to them that know not God. It is most likely it would only provoke them to contradict and blaspheme; nor to others without some particular reason, without some good in view. And then he should have especial care to avoid all appearance of boasting; to speak with the deepest humility and reverence, giving all the glory to God.

Q. But would it not be better to be entirely silent: not to speak of it at all?

A. By silence he might avoid many crosses, which will naturally and necessarily ensue if he simply declare, even among believers, what God has wrought in his soul. If, therefore, such a one were to confer with flesh and blood, he would be entirely silent. But this could not be done with a clear conscience, for undoubtedly he ought to speak. Men do not light a candle to put it under a bushel: much less does the all-wise God. He does not raise such a monument of his power and love to hide it from all mankind. Rather he intends it as a general blessing to those who are simple of heart. He designs thereby not barely the happiness of that individual person, but the animating and encouraging others to follow after the same blessing. His will is that many shall see it, and rejoice, and put their trust in the Lord. Nor does any thing under heaven more quicken the desires of those who are justified, than to converse with those whom they believe to have experienced a still higher salvation. This places that salvation full in their view, and increases their hunger and thirst after it; an advantage which must have been entirely lost had the person so saved buried himself in silence.

Q. But is there no way to prevent those crosses which usually fall on those who speak of being thus saved?

A. It seems they cannot be prevented altogether, while so much of nature remains even in believers. But something might be done, if the preacher in every place would, 1. Talk freely with all who speak thus: and, 2. Labor to prevent the unjust or unkind treatment of those in favor of whom there is reasonable proof.

Little by Little.—If we want to do a great deal of good in the world, we must be willing to do it in little things. Drops make the ocean. Dr. Johnson wisely observed—"He who waits to do a great deal of good at once, will never do any thing." When John Wesley was once asked by what magic he had rendered his followers so efficient, he is said to have replied that the great secret consisted in this, that they were "all at it, and always at it." Without this unceasing activity, this perpetual advancement, there can never be the attainment of the victor's crown. Are you prepared to persevere; to go on, step by step, until the race is run, and the laurel wreath encircles your brow? Do not give up because your labor hitherto seems fruitless. Persevere to the end.

Brevity the Soul of Mercy.—The following remarks of the Rev. Dr. Hastings made to the students of Union Theological Seminary, are strongly commended to those who would gain the sympathy of and extend help to the sick:

"I have time to offer only one suggestion on pastoral work. Be brief in your visits at the sick-bed. Condense what you have to say into the shortest compass, if possible—a verse of Scripture. Make your prayer very short, and do not tarry. I am firmly convinced that too much time is often spent at the sick-bed, especially in cases of great weakness and prostration. Be to the point, and be brief."

We come now to consider in the second place the data furnished us in the providence of God, both in his word and in reliable history, to be applied to these two prophetic periods under examination; and first, as to that which relates to the period recorded in Dan. 12; namely, the 1335 days. We shall confine our points to the data furnished in the language of the Scriptures, and in history. The last three verses of Dan. 12 read—"And from the time the daily shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way [Daniel] till the end be; for thou shalt rest and stand in [or up for] thy lot at the end of the days." We shall state, without arguing the point, what is to be understood by the terms "daily," and "the abomination that maketh desolate." By the "daily" is to be understood the pagan abomination under the Assyrian (or Babylonian) rule, through Persian, Grecian, and pagan Rome; and from A. D. 508 paganism had lost its controling influence over the governments of the empire, and then the way was being prepared rapidly for that which was to succeed it. The papacy was the abomination that maketh desolate, which succeeded paganism, and was established in A. D. 538, and had or exercised a controling power over the states into which the empire had been divided, for 1260 years. It also agrees with the character of the little horn of Dan. 7, and the leopard beast of Rev. 13.

We think the taking away of the daily and the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate are not simultaneous events; that there are thirty years interval between them. That a space of time should intervene seems to be required by the fact that the rise of the papacy was gradual; also the taking away of paganism. But there must be a point where paganism lost its power, which we think was in A. D. 508. Also where the papacy was established, which must have been as early as A. D. 538. If the papacy was established simultaneously with the taking away of paganism, and both events took place in A. D. 538, it would carry the end of the 1290 years to 1828, in which year no event took place in harmony with the evident meaning of the language contained in the prophecy. The setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate, is the last event referred to by the angel to Daniel; and we should expect at the conclusion of the period specified some event in the history of the papacy to mark the close of that period.

The events of the French revolution culminating in the humiliation of the papacy in 1798, are of a character of sufficient magnitude to mark the close of the 1290 years; as also of the 1260, or the "time and times and dividing of time" of Dan. 7. While these two periods end together, the former commences thirty years previous. This to our mind is the most natural interpretation and application of this prophecy, and is most in harmony with the facts of history.

The period of the reign of Justinian, emperor of the East, is where all Catholic and Protestant writers of any note place the supremacy of the papacy. And the only years that were specially marked in the reign of that emperor for the supremacy of popery, were from A. D. 533 to A. D. 538. We can see no event after A. D. 538, in the grants of power that were to mark the supremacy of that system, that was equal to that within the periods already specified. The saints were to be given into the hands of the little horn, or the papacy; and the grants of power from Justinian to the pope agree exactly with the conditions of the prophecy; and the taking of Rome out of the hands of the Goths in A. D. 538 by Justinian, and giving it into the hands of the papacy as its seat or throne, from whence to exercise jurisdiction over the saints in its long career of infamy, in drinking the blood of the saints of the Most High, and wearing them out, is an event that may well mark the commencement of the 1260 years.

The pouring out of the first vial upon those that "had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshiped his image," evidently corresponds with the events of the French Revolution, which prepared the way for the humiliation of the papacy in 1798, when the pope was taken prisoner by Berthier, the French general, and carried into France, where he died in exile in A. D. 1799; when also the papal government was destroyed, and a republican government established in its stead. The first five vials in Rev. 16, are evidently a series of judgments on the Catholic nations that had supported the papacy through its long, dark history of blood. The effects of the first vial were seen in the calamities visited on the French nation in the French Revolution, from A. D. 1789 to its close. Then after this the various wars by the emperor Napoleon, and others, which drenched Europe with blood, and with other calamities, to A. D. 1820; all may be regarded, directly or indirectly, as the judgments of God visited on the papacy; and all the wars and changes in the march of events onward to the present time have conduced to the overthrow of the dominion of that power. Now we see it in a position exactly corresponding with the prophecy, just before it goes to the burning flame. As we have seen, A. D. 1798 is the only year in which an event was visited upon Rome, the seat of the beast, answering to the conditions of the prophecy; and seventy-five years from this date carry us to the resurrection of the holy dead, or to the end of the 1335 prophetical days, or years. Amen.

Having briefly pointed out the only reliable data for the ending of the 1335 years of Dan. 12: 12; namely, A. D. 538—1873, we come in the second place to consider briefly the data corresponding with the Bible and historical facts, relating to the 2300 prophetical days of Dan. 8: 14. First, we ask, Is it reasonable, or consistent, to suppose that God, in giving an outline of the great events that were to close the history of this world, has thrown in a measurement of time covering that portion of history, without giving any clew by which to determine its commencement or end? We believe, and will attempt to prove, that he has done no such thing, but has given us means whereby we may understand this very important period of time.

First. Daniel tells us what he saw in a vision (Dan. 8: 3-13); then a voice was heard—"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint [Heb., palmoni, or the wonderful numberer—margin], which spake, How long the vision? . . . And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed [or justified]. And it came to pass when I, even I, Daniel, had seen the vision and sought for the meaning, then, behold, there stood before me as the appearance of a man. And I heard a man's voice between the banks of Ulai which called and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision."

We see from this scripture that a holy angel asked the question as to "how long the vision." (And, the apostle Peter tells us the angels desire to look into the time. 1 Pet. 1: 12.) After Daniel had listened to this heavenly inquiry, and heard the answer, he sought to know the meaning. While in this condition of keep solicitude, he hears a voice from between the banks of the river—"Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." Now we see that Gabriel has received an important commission. Did he obey? We shall see. Read from the 19th verse to the close of chapter eight. Here we find Gabriel explains all the symbols in the chapter except the 2300 days. As there was a seal to be put upon the vision for a period of time, we hear Gabriel saying to the prophet—"Wherefore shut thou up the vision, for it shall be for many days." This is the reason he assigns for the seal being placed upon it, on account of the long period that was to intervene. We think if Gabriel had at the time of this visit to the prophet given him the instruction that he gave him at a subsequent visit (chap. 9: 21), there would have been no seal upon the book. The last verse of chapter 8 shows that the prophet had not as yet received the understanding that Gabriel was commanded to give him. But he leaves him for a season; yet the solicitude and anxiety created in the heart of the prophet do not leave him. After revolving the subject over in his mind for a season, he betakes him to the prophetical books, and to fasting and prayer for further understanding. Read the ninth chapter. (A most excellent method to obtain divine counsel and instruction.) The Lord does not leave him long in suspense. Gabriel was caused to "fly swiftly," to finish his commission in giving the prophet the understanding of the time, namely, the 2300 days; therefore he turns the attention of the prophet immediately to the vision of the eighth chapter—"Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision. Seventy weeks are determined [or cut off] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish [or restrain] the transgression." Here are seventy prophetic weeks, equal to four hundred and ninety years, declared cut off from the 2300, the length of the vision of the eighth chapter, and assigned to the Jews and to their holy city Jerusalem, as the period of their national probation.

Throughout this period the (daily) transgression was to be restrained from destroying that people. In no case, excepting in the text (Dan. 9: 24), is this Hebrew word kahlah rendered finish, in the eighteen instances of its occurrence. The marginal reading of Dan. 9: 24 is, therefore, the true reading, as may be seen by consulting the Eng. Hebrew Concordance. We understand by the term "daily" (or continual) transgression of Dan. 8: 13, as embracing Persia, Grecia, and Pagan Rome. Gabriel, in explaining to the prophet the 2300 days, refers him to the restraint the first power presented to him, i. e., Persia, would be under in attempting the destruction of the Jews. The period of time through which the transgression was to be restrained, was limited to 490 years. Therefore it must commence at some definite epoch, and with some important event. This important event was the "pushing" of the ram, that no life or living might stand before him (Dan. 8: 4); agreeing to the letters of notification sent by posts into all the provinces of Persia, of the death-warrant for the destruction of the entire Jewish nation, signed by Ahasuerus the fifth king of Persia, in the month Nisan (the first month), in the twelfth year of his reign; to be carried into execution on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month of the same year. The history of this decree, and the overruling providence of God in preventing its execution, may be learned from the book of Esther, and Josephus' History of the Jews. Daniel saw the power of Persia pushing for the destruction of his people; and Gabriel informs him that the transgression would be restrained for four hundred and ninety years. This restraining work must commence before the execution of that awful decree instigated by Haman, an Agagite, the Jews' enemy. God signally frustrated the machinations of the devil in Haman on this occasion, and this was in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus the king; synchronizing with B. C. 426. This is the date from which to commence the seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety years, the first part of the 2300 years. Therefore the seventy weeks ended in A. D. 65, where the war began that destroyed Jerusalem. The work of restraint was to continue until the work of their desolation should commence. Josephus says the war began in the twelfth year of Nero, and the seventeenth of the reign of Agrippa. Dion Cassius says Nero began to reign A. D. 53, bringing his twelfth year to A. D. 65. This is the only authentic date for the commencement of the Jewish war. Here ends the famous prophecy of the "seventy weeks" at the beginning of the Jewish war, and not (as some have supposed) at its close. (These "seventy weeks" have no connection with the "sixty-nine" nor the "sixty-two weeks." Neither do they commence at the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. The sixty-nine weeks commence at this epoch, and end at the birth of Christ. Those four periods in the ninth of Daniel refer to distinct and separate events, neither of which commence or end together. These assertions we are prepared to prove in the plain language of Scripture.) These seventy weeks were to be "cut off" from the 2300 prophetic days, and, as we have proved, ended in A. D. 65. There are eighteen hundred and ten more left to be fulfilled in eighteen hundred and ten years from A. D. 65, which carries us to A. D. 1875.

In the light of the foregoing argument, we have at least a two-fold cord, composed of material, we think, that cannot be easily broken. First, in the Scripture statements of the character of the judgments to be visited upon the nations, after the Lord comes; in the battle of the great day of God Almighty, to which the kings of the earth and the whole world are gathered, when the wine of the earth shall be cast into the great wine-press of the wrath of God, and trodden till blood comes up to the horse bridles by the space of two hundred miles; the fall of the cities of the nations; the avenging of the blood of his servants at the hand of Babylon the Great; the King of kings and the Lord of lords smiting the nations with the sword that cometh out of his mouth; when he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God; when all the fowls of heaven are filled with the flesh of kings, and captains and mighty men, and of all, both free and bond, both small and great;—all this to be accomplished after the Lord comes, before the "sanctuary can be justified."

Second, the argument on the only reliable data for ending the two periods; first, the 1365 days in A. D. 1873; and second, the 2300 days in A. D. 1875. We see from the above facts a harmony in ending the 2300 days some two years subsequent to the 1335.

My brethren, it is time to awake to the merits of this question, and thus be led to understand God's counsel and word, so that day may not overtake us unawares. Amen.

BILLS! BILLS!!

ELDER I. I. LESLIE, Editor of the Young Pilgrim, has gone to Maine for a few days, and will call upon subscribers of the Crisis and the Pilgrim who are in arrears, with bills of their indebtedness; and we hope the friends will do their duty,—pay up, or, if they cannot, make such statements as the case may require, so that we may know how it is, and do what appears for the good of the cause.

ELDER J. T. DIXON has gone to parts of New York and Pennsylvania, and also Bro. E. WYMAN to New Hampshire, for the same purpose. Brethren and sisters, do the best you can in this matter, and the Lord will bless. AG'T.

OUR WESTERN TRIP.

Monday morning, Dec. 25th, we bade adieu to our friends in Chicago, and at 10.45 took the fast Pacific Express on the Chicago and Northwestern R. R. for Omaha. This road is well managed, by the gentlemanly superintendent, Mr. J. Gault. Pullman palace and hotel cars are attached to the train, affording the comforts and luxuries of the home parlors of the wealthy. These cars are truly portable palaces. We felt very contented in other cars, so well adapted to the comfort of the passengers, leaving those who could afford it to enjoy the luxuries of Pullman's Palace.

After crossing the fine iron bridge over the Mississippi, connecting Ill. and Iowa, we met Bro. and Sr. Wilson and their niece at Clinton, who took the cars with us for California. He has been conducting with much success, a very large seed farm, of some two hundred and sixty acres, on which he raised this year some nineteen and one quarter tons of beet seed, besides large quantities of other seeds. He has now closed up all his business and consecrated himself wholly to the Lord to preach his word. We believe he is in the path of duty, and will see rich fruit from his labors. Our journeying together is very pleasant. While we are now writing in the cars, he is engaged in a very interesting conversation with several gentlemen, in relation to the reasons of our hope. He is conducting the conversation with much skill, and in a very sweet spirit, well calculated to convince the opposer, and instruct the inquirer. Would that all could learn to instruct opposers in meekness, as the Scriptures teach. The results would be blessed.

After leaving Clinton, about four P. M., we went on nicely to Omaha, Neb., where we arrived at about 9.30 P. M., Tuesday, Dec. 25th. On our arrival we learned that no train would leave that day, on account of the heavy snow storms in the west. We took quarters at a hotel, and made the best of our situation. Omaha is a smart, thriving city, of some sixteen or seventeen thousand inhabitants. It is situated on the western bank of the Missouri river, at the eastern terminus of the Union Pacific R. R., and is nine hundred and sixty-six feet above tide water. The state capital was first located there, but in 1868 was removed to Lincoln. An expensive iron railroad bridge is being built across the Missouri river at Omaha, which is now about half done. It will probably take another year to finish it. When done it will be a great convenience to the traveling public; though we crossed the river very pleasantly in cars, running on a temporary support. Sometimes it is very difficult to get across.

Wednesday at 11.30 A. M., we took our departure from Omaha, to battle with snow storms, and heaps of snow, without a parallel in western railroad experience. We got as far as Grand Island, a distance of one hundred and fifty-four miles, where we had to stay all night. Thursday, we got on our way thirty-seven miles the first six hours. Then we went on nicely to Cheyenne, two hundred and twenty-five miles, arriving Friday morning, Dec. 28th, where we are now, at 5 P. M., just starting onward again. We learn there has been no train through from the west for about ten days. Our prospects for travel are not very encouraging.

Saturday, one P. M.. Last night we went from Cheyenne to Laramie, a distance of fifty-seven miles, where we tarried till eight o'clock this morning. When at Sherman, we were 8242 feet above the level of the sea. At this point, we encountered another sharp storm, during which we could not see but a few feet from the cars. With frequent stoppings, we succeeded in reaching Laramie, and waited for the morning. Before starting this morning, we made some oatmeal mush for our journey. This we did also at Omaha, which, with what we took from Chicago, has kept our supply good. We used the last of our oatmeal this morning. When that fails, we hope to have left unleavened bread and sweet apples, supplied by our Chicago friends.

We have now been on the road to-day over five hours, and have only passed over about thirty miles. We passed two engines that were disabled, and thrown off the track, while being used to clear the snow from the road. The further we go, the worse our difficulties. We expected to have been in California at 6 o'clock to-night, but instead of that, we are 1308 miles from San Francisco, and but 606 from Omaha. We are contented and happy in Jesus. All is well. Our peace is deep and sweet.

LATER.

When we left Chicago, the 25th of Dec., we expected to have been in California on the evening of the 30th. At the time of our present writing (10 A. M., Jan. 1st., 1872), we are at Rawlings, seven hundred and nine miles west of Omaha. During the last fifty hours, we have advanced but two hundred and thirty-six miles. We left Laramie at 8 A. M., Saturday, and in over thirty hours, we only progressed thirty-one miles, with the aid of eighty-five men employed in digging snow from the track. During this time, we were among the Rocky mountains, about one mile and a quarter above the level of the sea, where the wind had full sweep. It blew wildly, constantly, tempestuously, terribly, making the cars rock like cradles. This powerful wind kept the snow on a hasty run for every hollow place and cut in the R. R. track, and there packed it in very closely, so that it could not be removed by snow plows. Mr. Sickles, the efficient and gentlemanly superintendent, has between two and three hundred men employed night and day in digging the snow from the track. We passed through snow drifts where the top corner of the cars would rub against the snow.

On our way from Laramie to Lookout (thirty-one miles), we passed three disabled engines thrown aside while engaged in clearing the track. It is very expensive running the trains this winter. While detained in the snow and kept from the eating stations, the passengers were supplied at the expense of the R. R. Co., with biscuit, crackers, sandwiches, tea and coffee, etc., much to their comfort. When we arrived at Lookout, we found some ten engines ready to move soon as the opportunity should offer. While there eleven trains passed us going east; four of which were passenger. One of these had been detained in one place three days, and had been thirteen days in getting to Lookout. The usual running time from San Francisco to Chicago is five and a half days. When at Lookout, at the end of thirteen days, they were over one thousand miles from Chicago, with a prospect of being detained several extra days.

During Sabbath, the last day of the year, Bro. Wilson and others had very interesting conversations on Bible subjects, and we sang some of the sweet songs of Zion. It was our purpose to have had a meeting in one of the cars, but there was so much excitement about traveling incidents, connected with the passing trains and other matters, it was thought to be impracticable. Personally we passed the day pleasantly, enjoying sweet communion with our heavenly Friend. When looking back upon the past year, we could say with emphasis, that it has been the best of our life. Jesus has been exceedingly precious to us; especially for the last five months. He is a satisfying portion. Let every thing that hath breath praise his name. He is worthy of our supreme affections.

While at Lookout, we met Mr. Geo. Q. Canon, editor of the Deseret News, Brigham Young's official organ, at Salt Lake. He is an intelligent, candid gentleman, who stands in high estimation among the Mormons. Should Mr. Young die, it is thought Mr. Canon would be chosen as his successor. We had some conversation with him concerning the present state of things in Utah. The Mormons are much troubled about the position taken by the United States government in relation to polygamy. They appear to be resolved on taking a peace course. This, we think, is wise on their part. The national government appears to be decided to put an end to polygamy. Instead of waiting to be forced to do it, we think the best way would be for President Young to issue a proclamation abolishing the system of polygamy, and then take measures to have Utah incorporated as a state. We understand the court is to set Jan. 9th, when Mr. Young and others are to be tried on the charges of polygamy and murder. The latest news informs us that he has not yet arrived home from his southern trip, but is expected to be present at the trial. The Mormons evidently feel that they are truly and unjustly a persecuted people. They blame the national government for disturbing them now, after waiting till they have such nice homes at Salt Lake, and other places in Utah, prepared at so great expense and sacrifice, enjoying so much of prosperity and quietude, in connection with much wealth. If they go away, they must leave the fruits of their labors for others to enjoy. If they stay they must give up polygamy, which is a prominent doctrine of their religious system. We believe they will wisely choose to abandon the system, and enjoy the protecting favor of the nation.

We return to incidents of travel. At 2.15 P. M., Dec. 31st, we took our departure from Lookout, where we found neither food for man or beast. It has about half a dozen shanties, clustering around the lonely, bleak station. Yet it is a place that will be long remembered by the passengers, who spent the the most of the last day of 1871 near and at Rocky mountain station. When they meet hereafter, they will only need to use the watchword—"Lookout," to be recognized as sharers in a scene of no ordinary interest in a traveler's experience.

After leaving Lookout, we passed along very finely for ninety miles over the road just traveled by the eastern bound trains, when at dark we again came to snow drifts, where we were again detained about eight hours. One of our engines was thrown off the track in its efforts to pass through the piles of snow. In consequence of these many long and unexpected delays, we got short of fuel, light and water; yet we felt quite cheerful.

Towards morning we got through the snow banks, and arrived at Rawlings about daylight, seven hundred and nine miles from Omaha, and twelve hundred and five from San Francisco. There remained till ten A. M. While there we learned there were two trains just ahead of us which were snow-bound. The forward one had eleven cars, and the passengers of three Omaha trains, which had been brought together by their delays. The other train had six cars and the passengers of two trains; while our own had nine cars and the passengers of two trains.

Some of these passengers on the trains ahead of us, which we have overtaken, left Omaha six days before we did. Hence passengers who started eight days apart are all here together, blocked in by the snow. Others may overtake us before we get to Ogden, which is some three hundred and twenty-three miles from Rawlings. The like of this has not happened before on this route, and we trust it may not again. Ahead of us are some two hundred men engaged in digging for our special benefit.

We are now (3.30 P. M.) within a few miles of the summit of the great Rocky mountain ranges. All the trains have been standing still most of the time for hours, while the men are digging in the snow banks. There is a strong prospect of an immediate snow storm, and more difficulties ahead. We know not when we shall get to the "summer land" on the Pacific coast, but we are not at all uneasy. There are two sick ladies on our train, one of whom has been so sick it is feared she will not reach California alive.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.—From time to time we shall give our readers extracts from John Wesley's "Plain account of Christian Perfection." He had a rare and deep experience in divine things. We have good reason to believe that he was specially called of the Lord to proclaim the doctrine of holiness, which had been almost rejected by the church at that time. Cold formalism ruled in the religious services, and the spirit of the world had taken possession of the great body of the professed followers of Christ. A man was needed to raise the standard of holiness, and Wesley was the willing instrument. He was led on step by step from the lowlands of formalism to the mountain heights of perfect love and peace in Christ. The teaching and experience of such a man are valuable to those who are seeking to be complete in Christ.

The doctrine of holiness is as old as the Bible, and should ever be made prominent by all those who love Jesus, and wish to be ready for his coming. The gates of the New Jerusalem will be wide open for the entrance of every holy being; but "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." Heb. 12: 14. Brn. and Srs., let this subject receive your special attention. Jesus may be expected soon. We must be at the grand coronation of the King of kings. Let us give up all to our dear Savior.

"WHOLE CREATION GROANETH."

It is sometimes claimed that Paul alludes to the groaning of the inanimate creation, or brute creation, or both combined, in the following statement—"For we know that the whole creation groaneth." Rom. 8: 22. We think reference is made simply to the human creation. The marginal reading is, "every creature," and the original Greek employed by Paul is the same as used by Christ when he said, "Preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16: 15); that is, to every human creature. Paul and Christ used the same original in the same sense. Paul represents every human creature, or the whole human creation, as groaning in consequence of the fall into "the bondage of corruption," or mortality, good and bad together; and also represents the righteous as groaning for redemption—all groaning in consequence of the fall, and a part groaning for redemption therefrom.

He introduces the subject by saying—"For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature [ktiseos] waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature [ktisis] was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope, because the creature [ktisis] itself also shall shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation [pasa he ktisis—every creature] groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."

Thus it will be seen that the ktisis is something that "waiteth," and that can "be delivered from the bondage of corruption," which, whether moral or physical, must refer to human beings. They can wait with "expectation," while the inanimate and brute creation cannot; and they also can be "delivered from the bondage of corruption," or mortality. The ktisis, or human creation, fell into this dilemma, not willingly, but as the result of disobedience; and there is a way provided to get out of this dilemma (the way of obedience) "into the glorious liberty of the children of God," or, into immortality. While in this dilemma, the whole human creation groan, with pain, sorrow, and sickness. And not only do we all groan, as a result of the fall, but we which have the first fruits of the Spirit are groaning for "the redemption of our body." Every human creature groans in consequence of the fall, while saints only are groaning for redemption therefrom. "Shall be delivered," not compulsorily, but by complying with God's terms. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 4.

Dec. 25th, at half past ten o'clock, I went about three miles from where I am now preaching, to attend a meeting appointed by Bro. Davis, to give his farewell address to the Brn., preparatory to leaving for S. C. This was followed by over thirty testimonies. Since the little church was organized here, opposition has been severe. When we get the people to hear, they are impressed with the truth, but as soon as they get away the outside pressure is almost incredible. We are persistently held up as northerners, and many are impressed with the thought that we are only paving the way for some political scheme.

On the evening of the same day (Dec. 25), I preached my last discourse at the Cumberland Presbyterian meeting-house, where I had been preaching. Had a good congregation, and much solemnity prevaded the meeting, despite the outside pressure. At the close of my sermon twelve requested prayers, and some seem deeply in earnest, while others are affected by outside influences when they leave the meeting.

Dec. 26th, in order to accommodate some old people who could not come so far, the meeting was held three or four miles in another direction. After sermon our hearts were cheered with several warm testimonies. We also held meeting at the same place the next night (Dec. 27); had a full house, and at the close of the sermon six souls arose for prayers, and several earnest petitions were offered in their behalf. The hearing interest was excellent. We are now amid the Christmas holidays which are largely taking up the attention of the people. They have a curious way of celebrating Christmas in this country—the firing of cannons and guns, and the use of fire crackers by the boys, after the northern style of celebrating the Fourth of July, which has become of no account here since the war.

Last night (three nights after Christmas eve), a Christmas tree was arranged in a meeting-house in this town—the first that many ever heard of—and after the minister made a prayer, the church window was hoisted, at which a long ladder was arranged, on which a man personating Santa Klaus, crawled into the house, wearing a false face, with sheepskin whiskers on, to make sport for the people. During Christmas days (about a week) the young men improve the night in going around to serenade the people, as they call it, by ringing cow-bells, blowing horns, firing guns, and making all kinds of noises, giving special preference to those they may hold a little spite against, keeping up nearly all night. This keeps all broken of rest. Amid this state of things I moved my meeting to the Cumberland Presbyterian meeting-house in the village of Ooltewah (Dec. 28th), about seven miles from the meeting-house I had previously occupied. The congregation was small, but attentive. Two ministers present.

Have just received a pressing call for a meeting in Ala., near where I held my first meeting, from a Baptist Bro. who has come into the truth. He speaks of a Methodist Bro. who heard me, who says I "knocked the rebel out of him, and that he shall join if I organize a church." Dec. 29th was a rainy day, and about meeting time at night it poured down in torrents, making it seem impossible for any one to get out; but about twenty-five came, one preacher among them, to whom I preached the word. Dec. 30th the rain and mud kept many people away, but I preached to all that came out, including one clergyman.

Dec 31st (Sunday), despite the bad weather, and the excessively muddy roads, we had a fair congregation in the morning, and a larger one in the evening, who gave the best attention to the word spoken. There are a goodly number stirred up to investigate. This carries me to the end of the year. For three successive nights I have been drenched with rain on my return from meeting, a distance of three miles over rough roads, by which I have taken cold, got hoarse, and must rest a little. Up to this point I have preached every day since I have been in the south, except one, and several times twice a day on week days.

The new year now presents its claims on us for gospel labor. As the holidays of the south are now past (reaching from Christmas to New Year), we hope the people will more generally give attention to our message, especially if the weather and roads improve. W. S.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.

O. R. FASSETT.

The long looked for and desired rains have set in on this coast, and another extreme from a severe and protracted drouth is now experienced. The country is now flooded in every direction, and immense destruction of property is the consequence. Yet the inhabitants are cheerful and hopeful amid it all, for the immense good the rains are doing the state in insuring rich and abundant harvests in the future. Railroads in the different parts of the state are inundated, and destroyed in places, so that trains are delayed, irregular, or obstructed altogether. The eastern mail, overland, is very irregular, and several days behind, owing to the snows on the mountains, and beyond, and the condition of the roads on the western slope by the flood.

This winter is very bad for the holding of religious meetings, as the rains are so constant, and doing such damage to the highways and railroads. It is useless and in fact impossible to go into the country to hold meetings; and in the cities the congregations are very irregular and uncertain from the frequent severe showers, and condition of the streets, sidewalks, and crossings. The winter months in the east and west and northwest is the time for the holding of protracted meetings with the prospect of the greatest success, and often it is the case on this coast; but it is not so this season. It is hoped, after a kind Providence has watered the earth with abundant showers, that he will as kindly remember the spiritual need of the people, and give us the refreshing showers of his grace.

Eld. Grant was to have been on this coast Dec. 31st, at Vallejo, according to appointment and expectation; but he is no doubt hindered on the way. A telegram informs the public that over five hundred western-bound passengers are snow blockaded beyond the mountains. It may be that he is detained among them, in the providence of God, in order to preach the word to them. We hope that he will reach this coast in safety, and that the season may be propitious after his arrival for the holding of meetings. The church at San Francisco have deferred their contemplated protracted effort until his coming, for several reasons, and have high hopes that a gracious revival will follow his labors as last year.

NEW YEAR'S DAY, 1872.

I am to-day in Vallejo, having come to meet Eld. Grant, or fill his place should he be absent, yesterday. The rain set in with increased violence toward Sunday morning (Dec. 31st), and continued all day, making it impossible for a congregation of any considerable numbers to assemble. We held a conference meeting in the morning, and had a most blessed season, which will be long remembered by those present; and I preached in the evening to a few more than were convened in the morning. The church here is in earnest, and the members are faithful workers. The young converts are alive to confess their faith on all occasions, and give a reason of their hope to every man. There is more Bible reading and study in Vallejo than has been since the foundation of the town; and religion, and religious doctrine, are the themes conversed upon everywhere. Bro. A. T. Young held conversation with several of the intelligent and respectful citizens of the city, at the corner of the street one day last week, for three hours! The rain must have ceased for the occasion. The Vallejo Chronicle gets off the following anecdote, which will show that religion is a theme of conversation in even some of the liquor saloons. As to an "Adventist" being found in a saloon and "drinking —— water," we doubt, save it may be one of the townsmen who has been convinced that we have the truth, and is yet unconverted. There is hope of his reformation and conversion, as others have been.

"Last evening, in 'Our Corner' saloon, quite an amusing discussion took place between half a dozen men congregated round the stove. The subject was 'Religion,' and the various denominations and their creeds talked over. Finally, a man took a new position; he said he considered religion the same the world over; the Chinese were rather 'ritualistic,' but still he honestly believed that Christ and 'Josh' were the same; that Josh translated into English meant Jesus. This was too much for a Second Adventist who was present, and after taking a drink of —— water he left, apparently very much disgusted."

WATCH MEETING.

The Methodist clergyman gave the several churches in this city, together with their pastors, an invitation to enjoy a fraternal "Watch Meeting" together in the Methodist chapel the last night of the year, and included the Advent church in the invitation, together with myself. The evening was wet, and streets almost impassable, but a considerable congregation assembled in the chapel, being occupied for the first time during the day. There were present the Presbyterian, Baptist, and Methodist clergymen, with a representation of their several congregations; and the Advent minister, and a larger representation of his congregation than of the others, and a small promiscuous assembly. The order of exercises was as follows: 1. Singing. 2. Introductory remarks by Eld. Rich, the pastor of the Methodist E. church. 3. Reading of the Scriptures and prayer by Eld. Fassett. 4. Singing. 5. Sermon by the Presbyterian clergyman. 6. Communion of the Lord's supper. 7. Singing. 8. Sermon by the Baptist minister. 9. Singing. 10. Reading the Apostles' creed by the Methodist minister, then its repetition by the congregation. 11. A general conference, in which all were invited to take part, when the occasion found the Advent brethren at their post during duty in the name of the Lord. 12. A new general consecration of all to God—prayer—and silent prayer at the passing away of the last moments of the old and incoming of the new year. 13. Dismissal and congratulations.

The occasion was one of interest and profit, and calculated to do good. There had been considerable bitter feeling and hostility toward the Adventists, and some hard sayings all around. It is hoped that all aspersions and recriminations were buried there in oblivion. Around the communion-table of our common Lord three ministers of us kneeled together, and partook of the consecrated elements; and I know the heart of one had not a ripple of hate, and nought but love toward all the disciples of Jesus. Afterward came forward around the altar the representatives of three congregations, kneeling together to receive the sacred emblems, with a colored Advent brother at the head! The bread was administered by the pastor of the Methodist church, and the wine by myself with remarks appropriate for the occasion as I passed the cup to each.

REFLECTIONS.

Thus auspiciously the New Year of 1872 has opened upon us and our cause in this State. As we left the church at the very dawn of the New Year, the stars from a clear sky looked down smilingly upon us; and today (Jan. 1st) the sun is shining in unclouded splendor, while the atmosphere is so charming that I write before an open window overlooking the beautiful Bay, and the green hills beyond. All is calm and quiet in my breast, "trusting in Jesus." Thank God that he lets me behold a new year. Thank the Lord Jesus Christ, that he permits me to consecrate my being anew to him and his service for another year. I feel as did David, that I will serve my Lord and Master "while I have any being." All my mortal days shall be, by the grace of God, devoted to Jesus who died for me, and who lives again to justify, save, and redeem his people. I long to see the Lord, and to behold "the King in his beauty." I sigh for the land of rest, and by faith see the city of our God. Immortality and eternal life in the kingdom of God with all the saints of the Most High, is the height of my ambition. The world recedes from my view. I "look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." Oh, when will our Lord appear? When will our hope be realized? When will the new earth, radiant under the glories of the restitution, and the New Jerusalem, resplendent with the bright beams of our immortal King, and peopled by "the ransomed of the Lord" shining as the sun in the kingdom of their Father, be revealed before our longing, expectant vision? Oh, when will Emmanuel dwell with us, that we may behold his person, and fall at his feet in the rapture of one rescued and saved beyond sin, death, and the grave, and the power of Satan, and the fear of falling, forevermore, world without end? When shall we see God? When shall we see "all his mighty and holy angels"? Shall mortal man, fallen in nature, sinful in practice, and corrupt in heart, be "washed," "cleansed," "justified," "renewed," made "pure in heart," and changed to immortality, to enjoy such privileges of eternal redemption through the abundance of God's grace? Yes! Praise God and the Lamb for redeeming love. We will praise him now. We will praise him then,

"On the evergreen shore."

And the time is "at hand," and with the swift passing years comes the consummation of all our hopes. May be this year will end time, and bring the year of Jubilee. It is possible our Lord will be revealed from heaven this year. It cannot be long. The last years of this world are passing away. The last hours of time are speeding their flight, and we are not sad at their departure, nor will we drape ourselves in weeds of mourning at the death of "Old Time." With Time's departure tears cease to fall; sorrows are forever hushed in silence; sin and the curse are removed; pain and death are at an end. Eternity now begins, with its endless joys and blessings untold, bringing with it "all things" made "new," to be untarnished, and fade not away; restores to us kindred, and the loved ones of whom we have been bereaved, and "laid them away in great sadness."

"We shall greet them at home, we shall greet them,
When the sorrows of earth shall be o'er;
Our loved ones we hope soon to meet them
On Eden's fair, beautiful shore."

FATHER MILLER'S GRAVE.

BRO. GRANT:—During the protracted meeting in this place (Low Hampton, N. Y.), in which Bro. C. Pike and myself are now engaged, I visited Father Miller's grave. There were solemnities experienced by me in this visit, such as I never before had. When I thought that before me was lying and sweetly sleeping in Jesus the sainted form that first sounded out the note of warning from American pulpits—"Behold, the Bridegroom cometh!" and the numerous changes that had taken place since his day, both in the moral, political, religious and physical world; I could but say—O come! Lord Jesus, and come quickly, and bring from the dark dominion of death those who now are so quietly sleeping. Ransom them from the power of the grave, and redeem them from death forever.

We also visited the old place on which Bro. Miller resided, and spent the day in the room in which he studied. Am now seated in the very chair in which Bro. M. used to sit at his desk, this day, Dec. 16th, 1871.

Perhaps it might be interesting to some to know about Bro. Miller's family. He has one brother, six sons, and two daughters, now living. Solomon P. Miller is the only living brother of the late William Miller, and resides now in Low Hampton, N. Y. There are also two sons living in Low Hampton—William S. and John H. Miller. John H. lives on the old home farm, and keeps a good home for those who are proclaiming the glad tidings of the coming kingdom. William S. is the eldest son of Bro. Miller, and is strong in the faith of soon seeing Jesus and being made like him. Robbins and Geo. W. Miller are living in Millersburg, Minn. Millersburg is so called because of the Miller brothers settling there. Geo. W. Miller is an acceptable preacher of the gospel of the kingdom. Saterlee Miller lives in Poultney, Vt. Langdon Miller now lives in Batavia, Ill. There are also two daughters living—Belona and Lucy A. May these children so live that they may meet their father in the world to come.

Yours truly, A. W. SIBLEY.

SOME INQUIRIES.

BRO. GRANT:—I have a few inquiries to make in connection with Bro. White's exposition of the "daily sacrifice" in Dan. 11: 31, published in the last number of the Crisis.

Will Bro. White inform us if the "daily sacrifice" in Dan. 12: 11, is the same as in 8: 11, and 11: 31; and if so, was the "abomination" set up at the same time the daily sacrifice was taken away; viz., at the destruction of Jerusalem? And did the 1290 days commence there? If so, what event marked the ending of those days?

Lowell, Mass. DANIEL CHURCHILL.

PERPLEXITY.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Most of the perplexity of our times is owing to unprincipled, heedless, or ambitious men. This spirit is getting to be an epidemic in all associations, more or less. We as a people ought to keep clear of one fashionable wrong which is so perplexing; i. e., tardiness in keeping our promises. I find there are $10,000 due the Crisis Office within seven years, besides what is given to the poor. I was astonished when I saw names on the books I knew represented men able to pay for the paper, who ought to, or send it back, and save the office perplexity. If there is no evil designed, it is a heedless neglect that causes much trouble in the business arrangements of the Office. It is unmanly, at least, to allow a paper to be sent to us month after month, without our responding in any way, either by sending back the paper, with the back pay, or saying we are poor and cannot pay, and prove it, by giving good reference, which will secure the paper free to the really worthy poor as long as they remain so; and no honest person would receive it any longer.

The brethren at large have but little idea of the perplexities caused by neglecting to do their duty in this respect. Cannot something be done to bear a part of the burden? Suppose the honest and thorough in each church investigate this subject in the society, and make it a christian duty, as it certainly should be, and in so doing find out the tardy and dishonest ones, if any, and the worthy poor, and report to the Business Agent, George T. Adams, 160 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass. You would thus do a great favor, and save the Office much perplexity, and injure no one. I am satisfied if a person is too proud to own his poverty, the paper will not be likely to do him much good. A person negligent, but able to pay, ought to be stirred up, and if his mind is "pure," he will stand it; if not, you know he ought to be exposed, as much as if he were dishonestly getting the paper without pay.

I write this without the knowledge of Brn. Grant or Adams. I see there is something wrong in falling short ten to fifteen hundred dollars a year, besides sending the paper to seven hundred of the Lord's poor, which would be as much more. I write this because there is a wrong, and it ought to be righted. All interested can do something in this direction, and many will when they know these facts. The cause of God requires something to be done in reducing this perplexity.

GAMBLING CHURCH MEMBERS.

I. C. WELLCOME.

The long winter nights afford those wandering and wayward church members and ministers, who love pious fun, much opportunity to get up and practice church gambling, and other sports, plays, dances and tricks, in levees and sociables, by which they bring reproach and disgrace upon the christian religion, increase immorality, and lead sinners further from Christ. "Church Spectacles" are well calculated to open the eyes of such to see their sins, and show doubting ones the abominations of these practices. It has done noble work in some churches, entirely breaking up these corrupting practices. Now is the time to scatter them. Price $2 per hundred, $1 for forty, 20 cts. per dozen by mail. For sale at this office.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. S. S. CHAMBERLAIN writes:—"The christian needs a great amount of patience while contending with foes without and foes within. We must look to Jesus, and pray for the Holy Spirit to guide us, for without this we cannot find the right path, or walk in it. There is no true pleasure in any way but the way of righteousness. There is no pleasant path, but the path of the true christian. This way is full of joy and peace. When we are filled with true and pure and perfect love, then we can rejoice in the Lord, though deprived of all outward earthly joys. Jesus is near when all other friends are far away. When we are deprived of christian intercourse and society, we can be happy in him. It is better to be without all things else, and have him, rather than have all other things and be without Jesus. I feel strengthened and encouraged by reading in the Crisis what the Lord is doing for his servants. May the good work continue, and many more yet be brought out of darkness into the light and liberty of the gospel. What might be done if all christians (or all who have made a profession) were filled with love for God and each other. Lord, help us to be perfect in love. Pray for me, that I may run with patience the race that is set before me."

SR. E. S. WILLARD writes:—"If you wish to know our feelings toward you all in this opening New Year, please read at your leisure Col. 2, and accept a hearty New Year's greeting.

We have just had a refreshing from the presence of the Lord in the coming of Bro. J. T. Dixon, of Rocky Brook, R. I. In Philadelphia and Camden, and also in the church in our own house, he has given us words of comfort and warning, bringing out things new and old from the Book of God. The Lord was good when he gave this man to the church in these last days. May he keep him faithful unto the coming and kingdom of his Son."

WHITNEY—CLOUDMAN. In Poland, Me., June 23d, 1871, by Eld. J. C. Wheeler, Mr. COLUMBUS A. WHITNEY and Miss FANNY J. CLOUDMAN, both of Poland.

Obituaries.

MCNULTY. Fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 2nd, 1872, Frances S., wife of Charles McNulty, aged forty-six years, eleven months, and eight days.

For many months this dear sister suffered with dropsy in its most malignant form, but amid all her suffering her faith was strong in God, and in his power to raise the sleeping dead, and clothe them with immortality at the appearing of her Lord. Words of comfort were spoken by Rev. Robert Brewster. P. H. PALMER.

WILSON. Died at Richmond, P. Q., Dec. 28th, 1871, of disease of the heart, Sr. Rebecca, wife of Bro. John Wilson, aged forty years.

Sr. W. was a devoted christian, of exemplary walk and conversation, and very much esteemed and respected by all who knew her. She sleeps in Jesus. The hope of immortality and eternal life at the resurrection morn, was long cherished by this sainted christian. She has left behind a kind husband to bewail his loss, to whom consolation was imparted by the writer from these words—"In all this, Job sinned not, nor charged God with folly. J. PORTER.

MITCHELL. Died in Bowdoin, Me., Dec. 8th, 1871, my mother, Catharine Mitchell, aged sixty-nine years, one month, and twenty-six days.

My mother was born in Durham, Me., and was converted there through the instrumentality of Rev. R. J. Ayer, of the M. E. church. She remained a consistent christian till death. In 1854 she heard the Lord was coming, and embraced it. Some three years ago, she with my father (not being satisfied with sprinkling) was baptized by Eld. H. D. Reed. She now sleeps, but not forever; she will awake to everlasting life. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. C. Goud, from Rev. 14: 13. H. S. MITCHELL.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Jan. 11. [Special to New York Herald.] Avices from St. Petersburg state that Prince Gortschakoff's note to Minister Curtin was published in the Official Messenger, an unusual course. It says that Catacazy was ordered to come to Russia as soon as the Grand Duke had departed from the United States, and was informed that he would not be returned to his post. The Prince regrets that the painful affair did not terminate with this acquiescence by Russia in the request of Mr. Fish, who ought then, by the rule of courtesy between friendly nations, to have considered it finally settled.

The subsequent correspondence shows that neither sufficient attention nor respect was shown to the Russian Ambassador performing his duties. Mr. Fish's letters present complaints against Catacazy and thus invite the Imperial Cabinet to judge his conduct. Many of these complaints Catacazy has satisfactorily refuted, and on the others judgment will be passed when Catacazy has full liberty to present his case. The Prince hopes the justice of this will be sufficiently understood. The United States cannot expect judgment to be passed on Catacazy before he renders his version of the unpleasant affair. The tone of the whole note is that of studied insolence. It is certain that Gortschakoff has lost his temper and is excessively annoyed. Notwithstanding the expressions of continued amity there is a decided coolness in the relations of the two nations.

BERLIN, Jan. 10. The Provincial Correspondens in its issue to-day says the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with France proves that the German Government wishes to restore the former friendly relations between the two nations.

ROME, Jan. 10. It is announced that the Pope will shortly send an ultimatum to the Roman Catholic Bishops who have not accepted the dogma of infallibility.

LONDON, Jan. 11. The Times' financial article announces that a combination of telegraphites agreed yesterday to establish a direct cable communication between England and New York.

PARIS, Jan. 11. Le Lier Public announces that Gen Leflo, formerly French Embassador to the Court of St. Petersburg, will shortly visit Versailles, having been given a commission by the Czar Alexander for presentation to President Thiers of the affectionate greeting of the Emperor of Russia.

AN OUTBREAK ANTICIPATED.

PARIS, Jan. 15. The Reds are becoming active in Lyons, and the authorities are exercising more than usual vigilance to prevent an outbreak. Mitrailleuse have been seized in the house of a carpenter at Bordeaux.

LONDON, Jan. 15. A monster cannon, made in an American foundry for the Turkish Government, has arrived at Constantinople.

LONG PASSAGES OF THE EUROPEAN STEAMERS.—The steamers from Europe which have been buffeting the winds and waves of the Atlantic for the last month, are beginning to reach our shores. The English steamer Tiber, of Warren's line, from Liverpool, which had been at sea thirty-three days, entered this harbor Friday and reports having encountered fearful weather, with high seas and continual northwest gales. For several days in succession she was compelled to lay to and made no progress whatever, barely holding her own against the terrific winds which swept over the seas. The waves frequently broke over the vessel, staving the boats to pieces and doing other damage. She, however, sustained no serious injury to her hull or cargo.

The Cunard steamship Algeria, which left Liverpool on the 23d of December, arrived at New York Friday, making the passage in nineteen days. She is a fast vessel and her long passage fully attests to the extraordinary weather which has lately prevailed at sea. She got short of coal on the voyage and was obliged to put into St. Johns, N. F., for a supply. Two German steamers from Europe for New York also put into Halifax a few days ago for coal after being out a long time.

The steamship Concordia, Capt. Hedge, which sailed from Liverpool in company with the Tiber, has not yet arrived here, having put into Sydney, C. B., short of coal. She has been detained by the same causes which have kept the other vessels so long behind their usual time.—Journal.

DOMESTIC.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

New York, Jan. 15. A Salt Lake dispatch of yesterday states that after a long conference with John Taylor and George Q. Cannon, leading Mormon apostles, Attorney Bates left for Washington. It is believed that he is fully informed of the concessions which the Mormons are willing to make in order that Utah shall be admitted as a State, but polygamy will not be given up. It is thought the Council will on Monday pass an act authorizing a convention to form a State constitution.

In Brief.

—— The Emperor Napoleon will soon publish a historical work, in which startling revelations will be made in regard to the French military system during the late war.——The letter carriers delivered in the city of Boston, by actual count, on Monday, the first day of this year, 29,371 letters; the largest number ever delivered in one day.——There was recently at Manchester, England, a soiree of ministers of all denominations, including Baptists, Presbyterians, Independents, Swedenborgians, Unitarians, Free Methodists and Bible Christians. A proposal to hold a united communion once a year was generally approved.——Protestantism is rapidly advancing in Spain. Everywhere the gospel is desired. One of the Missionaries writes: "The people are clamorous for the stated preaching of salvation by grace."——An extraordinary work of grace has been going on in Mexico for some months, and as the result, some fifty Christian churches have been organized in different parts of the country. This work has awakened a violent opposition, especially in the vicinity of the City of Mexico.——Two hundred colored men have offered their services to the American Missionary Society for missionary work among their kindred in Africa.——In Dr. Ewer's new church of St. Ignatius, communion is celebrated every morning, the service is read in Latin, and a regular confessional has been established.——It is expected that a thousand Indians will join Gen. Sheridan and the Grand Duke in their Buffalo hunt on Republican river.——A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette states that an American missionary, sent to convert the Hindoos, has become a disciple of Keshub Chunder Sen., and been formerly received into the Brahm-Somaj Church.

Notices.

TO THE SISTERS.—Sr. Herron needs a strong, capable, kind, Christian girl to help her; and while relieving her of care and responsibility, give her little girls a chance to rest and recover strength and health lost by the labors they have already been obliged to perform. The eldest is seriously threatened with spinal complaint, and has a chance to go into the country to recruit, whenever her place can be filled by any one else. The labor is not severe, and any reasonable person will be able to please and be pleased. If services can be given, they will be thankfully received; if not, compensation will be given. This I say on my own responsibility. Will some sister in Christ communicate with me immediately, giving particulars, and oblige all concerned.

Maplewood, Mass. E. P. WOODWARD.

A SPECIAL CONFERENCE will be held in the Second Advent Chapel on Central St., Worcester, Mass., to commence on Tuesday, Feb. 6th, at two o'clock P. M., and to continue every day and evening through the week and over the following Sunday. The special object of this conference will be to examine the evidences relating to the time of the Lord's coming; to get more fully prepared for that event, and to lead sinners to Christ before he comes to close up the scenes of probation. A cordial invitation is extended to all, and especially to all the preaching brethren.

"The more that come with free good will,
Will make the banquet sweeter still."

By unanimous vote of the church.

DR. H. W. BUXTON, } W. F. COLLIER, } Committee. E. G. HIGGINS, }

THE FIRST Anniversary of the organization of the Advent Christian Church at Arena, will be celebrated by a general meeting of days, Jan. 26th, 1872. We cordially invite our brethren to meet with us and work for the Lord. Eld. Adrian and other preaching brethren will be present to assist. Come with hearts full of love for Jesus and poor sinners. GEO. THOMSON.

THE SECOND quarterly meeting of the western district of Wisconsin will be held with the church in the town of Brunswick, Eau Claire Co., commencing Feb. 1st, 1872, and hold over Lord's day. Let us have a grand rally of warm hearts and sweet words for each other, and noble testimonies for Jesus. Come the first day. F. W. HOUGH.

☞ NOTICE is hereby given that the Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee have made arrangements with J. D. Swain to build tents for all who wish to hire them built the coming year. We recommend him as a good practical carpenter, who can be trusted with the business. All who wish his services, correspond with him immediately, as he can procure lumber at this season to better advantage. Address J. D. Swain, Portsmouth, N. H., Box 1445. J. COUCH.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING of the "Woman's Christian Association" will, by invitation, be held at Charlestown, Mass., to commence on the evening of Jan. 17th, 1872, and continue over the following Sabbath. A cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of Christ and his cause. We hope to see a goodly number from abroad. Directions to strangers will be duly given.

E. S. JENNINGS, Pres.

THOSE WHO attend the meeting of the Association at Charlestown, will take any of the Main street cars at Scollay's Square, Boston, and stop at Monument Avenue, Charlestown. The hall is directly opposite the end of the Avenue at No. 70 Main Street. Cars named "Charlestown and Boston," "Medford and Winter Hill," "Malden and South Malden," Somerville," "Union Square and Somerville," are all Main Street cars, and all pass through Scollay's Square, and by the Boston and Maine depot. Should any arrive at an unseasonable hour for open doors at the hall, they will find the residence of Bro. Jasper Stone, at 249 Bunker Hill Street. E. S. JENNINGS.

RESOLVED, That the Bible teaches that the Jews, or Judah in Israel, according to the flesh, have returned from their captivities to the land of their fathers, as predicted by the prophets.

T. M. PREBLE, Affirms.
J. M. MUHLIG, Negative.

In accordance with the above resolution, we have engaged Minot Hall, corner of Washington and Springfield Streets, Boston, when we shall discuss the above question, commencing Jan. 23d, at seven P. M., and hold over four evenings. All are cordially invited.

T. M. PREBLE.
J. M. MUHLIG.

THE CONFERENCE at Machiasport, Me., will commence Jan. 25th, instead of the 11th, and hold over the Sabbath. Brn. J. M. Tozier, M. W. Corliss, J. R. Hall, and Bro. Snow, are expected to preach the word. All are invited who can labor together with God to save the lost.

For the Brn., A. J. DOW.

THE FIRST QUARTERLY SESSION of the Hoosick Valley A. C. Conference will be held at Hebron, N. Y., commencing Wednesday evening, Jan. 17th, 1872, and hold over the following Sunday. The church in Hebron extends a hearty invitation to all the friends of Jesus in the surrounding country to come and labor for God and the salvation of men, and share in the comforts of their homes during this quarterly session. Let the churches of the Hoosick Valley be largely represented by delegates. Do not fail to attend to this matter. Those churches who do not represent themselves by delegates, may by letter, directed to the President. We wish to know what churches are members now, and what churches wish to become members, so that we may arrange for meetings within the bounds of this conference, where there is a demand for quarterly and protracted efforts. Those coming by railroad will stop at Rupert station, where teams will be in readiness to transport passengers to and from the meeting, free of charge.

A. W. SIBLEY, President.
A. P. BUMP, Secretary.

THE MAINE north westerly quarterly conference will be held at Webb's Mills, Casco, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Jan. 18th, and hold over the following Sabbath. Come, brethren and sisters, make an effort to attend this meeting. The coming of the Lord is at hand, and what is done to save men must be done soon. Preaching brethren are especially invited.

JESSE GAY, President.
A. W. TAYLOR, Secretary.

THE CONN. A. C. QUARTERLY CONFERENCE will meet in New Britain (instead of Southington, as before advertised), Wednesday, Jan. 17th, 1872.

B. HITCHCOCK, Pres.
L. S. LUDINGTON, Sec.

THE brethren and sisters worshiping at Northville, Newport, N. H., would say to those desiring to preach in that place, that they would confer a favor upon the church if (before sending their appointments) they would correspond with the clerk of the church, whose address is Claremont, N. H.

For the church, H. F. DENNING, Clerk.
P. S. Preaching supplied for the present.

☞ BRETHREN wishing the German instrument or oil, will please direct their orders to Munger & Weaver, Springfield, Mass., Drawer 81, as that is the office where they are kept. You will thus get them quicker, as I am gone so much. H. MUNGER.

BOOKS IN CALIFORNIA.

We have opened a Depository for books, tracts, and papers, at White & Bauer's, 413 Washington Street, opposite the Post Office, San Francisco, Cal. Those on the Pacific Coast, who wish to obtain the publications sold at our office, will find it for their convenience to get them at WHITE & BAUER'S.

NEW TRACTS.

Just published by the A. C. P. Society, Symbolization of the World's Eventful Crisis, by O. R. FASSETT.

An excellent tract of 16 pages, showing that we are living amid the events occurring under the opening of the "sixth seal"; that "we are witnessing them, and are far down in their history, and close upon the end of this world and the solemn judgment scenes."

Price, single, 2 cts.; postage, 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred, by mail.

"THE END AT HAND."

A TRACT OF 24 PAGES.

Showing that the "Gospel of the kingdom" has been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations"; and that the end of this dispensation is at hand, and the Lord about to appear in his glory. By Eld. John Couch. Just the thing to scatter by the thousands. Let it have a wide circulation. Price single, 3 cents; postage 2 cts.; 25 cts. per dozen; $2.00 per hundred by mail. AG'T.

Just Published, GOOD TIDINGS,

PERTAINING TO THE EARTH AND THE RACE.

This valuable work of 425 pages, is now ready. Price per dozen, by express, in paper, $4.00; cloth, $8.00. Single copy in paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1.00. Sent by mail on the receipt of the same. For sale at this office. AG'T.

JUST PUBLISHED.

By the Advent Christian Publication Society, a new Tract, entitled, "The Judgment Impending: Prophecy and Chronology converging to one Grand Culmination." By Bro. L. T. Cunningham. 52 pp. Price, 8 cents per copy. Postage, 2 cts. 75 cts. per dozen. $5.00 per one hundred. AG'T.

SHELDON'S FOUR NEW TRACTS.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

1. LIFE AND DEATH THEOLOGY: or, The Scriptural Doctrine of Eternal Damnation and Everlasting Punishment. Price 8 cts. single, postage 2 cts.; 75 cts. per dozen, postpaid; $5.00 per hundred by express.

This work of forty-eight pages is the clearest and strongest document yet produced by Bro. Sheldon on this topic. It is just the thing to scatter among all classes.

2. IMMATERIALISM: or, The Doctrine of Soul-Immortality Refuted. Price 5 cts. single, postage 2 cts.; 40 cts. per dozen, postpaid; $3.00 per hundred by express.

A tract of thirty-two pages, showing that fifteen cardinal errors spring out of the doctrine of the soul's immortality, and that those errors could not exist independent of that doctrine, thus showing it to be the main root of error. Let it be scattered widely.

3. DEATH AND THE DEAD, 16 pages. Price 3 cts. single, postage 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen, postpaid; $1.50 per hundred by express.

Just the thing to scatter everywhere.

4. THE COMING JUDGMENT: Its Necessity and Result. Eight pages. 10 cts. per dozen, postpaid, or 75 cts. per hundred by express.

It will do much good.

NEW TRACTS BY S. S. BREWER.

WHAT IS MY WORK TO-DAY?

To search for truth and wisdom,
To live for Christ alone;
To run my race unburdened,
The goal my Savior's throne;
To view by faith the promise,
While earthly hopes decay;
To serve the Lord with gladness—
This is my work to-day.

To shun the world's allurements,
To bear my cross therein,
To turn from all temptation,
To conquer every sin;
To linger, calm and patient,
Where duty bids me stay,
To go where God may lead me—
This is my work to-day.

To keep my troth unshaken,
Though others may deceive;
To give with willing pleasure,
Or still with joy receive;
To bring the mourner comfort,
To wipe sad tears away;
To help the timid doubter—
This is my work to-day.

To bear another's weakness,
To soothe another's pain;
To cheer the heart repentant,
And to forgive again;
To commune with the thoughtful,
To guide the young and gay;
To profit all in season—
This is my work to-day.

I think not of to-morrow,
Its trial or its task;
But still, with childlike spirit,
For present mercies ask.
With each returning morning,
I cast old things away;
Life's journey lies before me—
My prayer is for to day. —Ex.

THE HARMONY OF SCRIPTURE ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

(From the Rainbow, Eng.)

The truths contained in the views of Origen and Augustine reconciled by the earlier doctrine of conditional immortality.

BY THE REV. SAMUEL MINTON, M. A.

Our subject is the ultimate destiny of those who receive in vain the grace of God manifested in the gift of his Son. I use this definition in order to exclude any question as to the future prospects of those who have either never heard the gospel, or never had sufficient light to bring them under the deadly condemnation of unbelief.

THE CONFLICTING VIEWS.

Now, there have long prevailed in the church two very opposite opinions, with which the names of Augustine and Origen are usually connected. The first is, that they who leave this world impenitent will continue so forever, and consequently live forever in misery; the second is, that they will ultimately be brought to repentance, and live forever in blessedness. The ideas of different persons as to the proportion of misery or of happiness that will enter into the lot of those who are not saved in this life may vary so indefinitely as sometimes to make the opposing principles practically coalesce. But theoretically they are distinct, and form two distinct schools of opinion.

THE COMMON POSTULATE.

On examining these positions we find them, somewhat remarkably, resting on one and the same fundamental postulate; namely, that all men must live forever in some condition or other—that this mortal will put on immortality in all cases. And it is just that postulate which subsequently leads them into such diametrical opposition. Each side, as Mr. Constable has well shown, lays hold of a revealed truth, and connects it with their common postulate. The Augustinian sees that some sinners will incur a doom which involves utter and irremediable ruin; that their end is destruction—of some kind. If, therefore, they are to live forever, their doom must be an everlasting life of misery. The Origenist sees that sin and suffering are to be banished from the universe, that all things are to be reconciled by Christ, and that God is to be all in all. If, therefore, every man is to live forever, every man must ultimately be brought into a moral condition which will fit him to share in that universal blessedness.

EACH POSITION UNASSAILABLE FROM THE OTHER.

In this controversy, from their common standing point of necessary human immortality, each side is utterly unable to answer the other.

If any one wishes to see how hopeless is the attempt to evade the force of the texts which threaten destruction to the wicked by explaining it to mean the destruction of the evil that is in them, and not of their persons, let him read Mr. Constable's reply, in the Rainbow to Mr. Birks and Mr. Jukes—the former of whom maintains a partial, the latter a complete, moral renovation of all men. My present limits will allow me to notice only two texts in this connection.

The first is our Lord's declaration concerning Judas, "Good were it for that man if he had never been born." If Judas is to enjoy an everlasting life of even such partial blessedness as will make existence to him "better than non-existence," how could it have been good for him never to have commenced that existence? Any preliminary suffering that he may have to endure for a limited time must be infinitely outweighed by the eternity of bliss which follows it.

The second is Matt. 10: 28.—"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but fear him, who is able to destroy both body and soul in gehenna." If it could be proved ever so conclusively that some future punishment will be remedial, here at least is something threatened which cannot possibly be so. Without insisting upon the contrast with man's power to kill the body, which is certainly not supposed to be for any remedial purpose, our Lord defines precisely what it is that will be destroyed—not man's sinfulness, but the component parts of his being, his body and his soul, the whole man; and the figure employed to illustrate this is utterly irreconcilable with the idea that the destruction is intended to have a beneficial tendency on the person so destroyed. Gehenna was not a reformatory; it was a place outside the walls of Jerusalem, where the refuse of the city was consumed. This burning had undoubtedly a beneficent purpose towards the inhabitants of the city, namely, to prevent them suffering from the accumulation of corrupt matter; but it had no restorative effect upon the things consumed—it simply put an end to them. The Augustinian holds that, as man cannot be put an end to, he must be for ever undergoing a process of destruction, without ever being actually destroyed. And to the Origenist, who admits his primary postulate of human immortality, his position is absolutely impregnable.

On the other hand, the Origenists can show, quite as conclusively, that the final extinction of all evil, moral and physical, by the Divine Redeemer, is the great revelation of Scripture; it is revealed there with a fulness and clearness that could scarcely be exceeded. Time again almost restricts me to the consideration of a single passage—the well-known words of St. Paul in Col. 1: 16-20—"For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell; and, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." "The all things"—which were created, and which will be reconciled by Christ, can mean nothing less than the universe of being,—and that regarded as a whole. The apostle, you will observe, takes the scriptural and philosophical view of creation; not as carried on in every fresh development of being, but as accomplished once for all when the germs of the several orders of beings were called into existence. "By Him were [not are] all things created." In each case, therefore, he speaks of the universe as a whole. And the reconciliation of all things is, not the restoration of every particular form of life that has ever been developed out of the original creation, but the restoration of perfect harmony to creation as a whole; so that, when it is accomplished, all shall again be "very good." We are told nothing of the changes that will have previously taken place in the various kinds of beings, how many creatures will have come into existence, lived their little life, and passed away for ever; but we are assured that whatever forms of existence are found throughout the universe "in the dispensation of the fulness of times" will be gathered together in one" (literally, "headed up in Christ"); and, according to their several capabilities, made eternally at one with their Creator.

The truth thus carefully elaborated by St. Paul is in full accord with the general teaching of Scripture, that Christ was manifested to destroy the works of the devil, and that God will, through him, make all things new; so that there shall be no more curse, neither sorrow nor sighing, but he himself shall be all in all. These statements bar the possibility of any single creature remaining forever in a state of sin or suffering. And when the Augustinian concedes the fundamental postulate, that all men must live for ever, his strongest arguments will fail to shake the Origenist's position, that they must all, sooner or later, be brought to holiness and happiness.

CAN THE POSTULATE, THEN, BE TRUE?

He, therefore, who has any faith whatever in Holy Writ, is compelled to ask, whether this theory, which puts Scripture in such direct opposition to itself, can really be as certain as both sides take for granted. If it be not—if man be not absolutely indestructible, or if God has not declared that he never will destroy him, the difficulty is at once removed. For everlasting, that is, irremediable, destruction would satisfy the declarations of Scripture as to the impenitent sinner's final doom; and at the same time be quite consistent with its equally plain declarations as to the universal blessedness which is to follow that destruction.

MORTAL MAN.

We need not stay to discuss the metaphysical speculations which Socrates, Plato, and others have drawn from our own inner consciousness. Those great men themselves felt the insecurity of their foundation. And surely nothing could be more precarious than to argue that because some men are conscious of craving for an immortality of happiness, all men must obtain it; or, according to Augustinianism, must possess the immortality whether they obtain the happiness or not. Well would it have been for the Church if she had attended to St. Paul's warnings against philosophy and vain deceit, instead of accepting as revelations from heaven the necessarily defective, though, with the light they possessed, noble endeavors of some of the Greek philosophers to "feel after" the truth.

Our appeal is to the Scriptures. And the first thing which strikes us is the entire absence of any single word which attributes immortality to the immaterial part of man's being. It is spoken of under the name either of soul or of spirit, more than sixteen hundred times, and not once is it called immortal, deathless, never-dying, or anything of the kind. Scripture abounds in warnings and entreaties, urging us to save our souls; but it never pleads with us, as popular preaching so constantly does, to save our immortal souls, to have pity on our never dying souls, or to consider where we shall spend eternity. Nay, by beseeching us to save our souls alive, it implies that they will not remain alive for ever, unless we save them from death. For instance, to make Ezekiel's warnings agree with the Augustinian theory, they would have to be expressed thus:—"The soul that sinneth, it shall live miserably for ever. . . . He shall surely live happily for ever. . . . Shall he then live happily? He shall not live happily. He hath done all these abominations; he shall surely live miserably for ever; his blood shall never be shed. . . . He shall live for ever in his iniquity. . . . He shall surely enjoy endless happiness, he shall not suffer endless misery. . . . Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should live miserably for ever? saith the Lord God, and not that he should return from his ways and live happily for ever? . . . In his trespass, that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he live forever. . . . He shall save his never dying soul, that cannot but remain alive for ever, from endless woe. . . . For I have no pleasure in the everlasting misery of an immortal being who can never die; wherefore turn yourselves and be happy."

It is alleged, however, that the fact of man having been made in the image of God rendered him indestructible. If so, it must of course have conferred indefeasible immortality on his whole being, and not merely on one part of it; so that there could be no need for him to eat of the tree of life in order that he might live for ever, that being already secured by his having been made in the image of God; and the appeal of Eliphaz, "Shall mortal man be more just than God," should have been, "Shall man, though as immortal as God, be more just than he?" But how did his likeness to God confer upon him Divine immortality, any more than Divine omnipotence, omniscience, or omnipresence? Was he made like God in everything? If not, to adduce this fact as proving his immortality, is palpably begging the question. St. Paul evidently regarded the moral image of God as that in which we were created, when he spoke of our being renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created us, and of our being created after God in righteousness and true holiness.

The text is also adduced, which says, that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. But the beasts are also said to be "living souls" (Gen. 1: 30, mar.); and even inanimate things are said to have been created by Jehovah's breath, "All the host of them by the breath of his mouth." And if the breath of life having been breathed into his nostrils be insisted on, it will be well to remember that an inspired prophet makes a somewhat different use of that fact,—"Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Isa. 2: 22. There is nothing here from which we may infer that God will never terminate man's existence. . . .

Scripture lends no countenance whatever to the philosophic fiction of an immortal soul in a mortal body. St. Paul closes his great argument on the resurrection with the words, "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor shall not be in vain in the Lord." If there were any security for human immortality, apart from resurrection, his "therefore" would be needless; for our labor in the Lord might be abundantly recompensed in the eternal happiness of our disembodied spirits.

"MOTHER SHIPTON'S PROPHECY."

BRO. GRANT:—The following is taken from the Boston Journal. If, as it purports to be, it is a production of the fifteenth century, it is truly a very remarkable production. If worthy, please give it to the readers of the Crisis.

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY.—The following, which is known as "Mother Shipton's Prophecy," was first published in 1488, and republished in 1641. It will be noticed that all the events predicted in it, except that mentioned in the last two lines—which is still in the future—have already come to pass.

"Carriages without horses shall go,
And accidents fill the world with wo.
Around the world thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye.
Waters shall yet more wonders do;
Now strange, yet shall be true.
The world upside down shall be,
And gold be found at root of tree.
Through hills men shall ride,
And no horse or ass be at his side.
Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk.
In the air men shall be seen,
In white, in black, in green.
Iron in the water shall float
As easy as a wooden boat.
Gold shall be found and found
In a land that's not now known.
Fire and water shall wonders do;
England shall admit a Jew.
The world to an end shall come
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one."

RESPONSE TO THE ABOVE.

S. S. BREWER.

We are living now in a wondrous day,
When things have transpired as the seer did say;
Now cars on iron rail without horses do go,
And collisions are filling the world with wo.
Swift through the wires now thoughts do fly,
As quick as the twinkling of an eye.
See! through the hills the steam cars glide,
Neither beasts of burden are near their side.
Through tunnels 'neath water now men do walk,
In cars they in comfort now ride, sleep and walk.
Up in the air, in balloons, men now are seen,*
In colors of white, black, and green.
Out on the deep like a thing of life floats,
Laden with treasure steam the iron boats.
Millions of gold of late hath been shown
Now found in lands that then were not known.
The wonders that fire and water should do
With the power of steam, we have lived to see true.
Amid all the wonders—and 'tis something new—
For Premier, old England admits D'Israeli, a Jew.
But dates seem to say, old Time's race must be run,
Ere the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

* The first balloon was constructed in France in 1783, by M. M. Montgolpier.

WILL THEY ATTEMPT IT?

S. HALL.

There is some evidence that the Romish church seriously contemplate a crusade for the purpose of regaining the patrimony of St. Peter, which has by piecemeal been wrested from the pope, since it is becomimg manifest that all the "christian kings" have abandoned him to his fate. From various sources, such a project has been more or less plainly announced by Catholic editors and priests. Among others, the Rev. Dr. Preston (educated a Protestant here in New England, and ought to be found in different company), recently preached a sermon in St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York, before the "Catholic Union;" a society organized for prayer, vigilance, and defence of the church and her institutions—nine priests being present—from the text,—"Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves."

Now, if the Catholics are represented by sheep, and all outside of that church by wolves, the text would appear to have a novel and strange application. For who ever heard of sheep attacking wolves? Of making such havoc among them as Catholics have made among those who have dissented from them, according to the history of the past? But the Dr. says—"While the holy Father of the faithful is a captive around the tomb of the holy apostles; while he suffers an act of injustice such as this world has hardly ever before seen; you are not to be silent, you are not to acquiesce in that act of injustice; you cannot stand in your places quietly. Without violating any law of the land, you must stand firm with your strong hearts, and even with your hands, in defence of Christ and his vicar."

This would seem to be, according to his application of the text, a pretty clean intimation to the sheep (who were to be as harmless a doves), that a further onslaught upon wolves might be necessary. He continues—"In this nineteenth century, there is not a nation on the face of the globe that stands forth as the defender of the church of God. God gave the holy Father a principality more sacred than any other on earth; so small, that it would not excite the envy of his neighbors, yet large enough to assert his independence as pastor of Christ's flock. But in this age of revolution, an armed mob has robbed him of that principality, without a christian king rising to protest against the outrage. Why is it, that not even one Catholic king has raised his voice against it?"

But can the Dr. offer any reason why they should? Kings, like other people, are governed by motives, and though prophecy foretold of their sustaining this church for a long period, it also foretold the time when they would no longer sustain her, but rather forsake and destroy her. And if we have already come to that time, as now appears, alas for the papacy!

The question of course always recurs, what necessity is there that the "pastor of Christ's flock" should possess a principality and be vested with kingly power? In former times the popes not only considered it unnecessary, but inveighed against it. Gelasius, the fiftieth pope, who died in 496, in a published treatise concludes, that as the different powers of the royalty and priesthood were, since the coming of Christ, vested in different persons, "that neither ought to encroach on the other, but the temporal power should be left entire to the princes, and the spiritual to the priests, it being no less foreign to the institution of Christ for a priest to usurp the functions of sovereignty, than it is for a sovereign to usurp those of a priest." This certainly was taking a sensible view of the subject, but one which few popes since that time have taken.

How Dr. Preston gathers consolation from the statement which he makes looking to the future, it is not easy to see, which is—"Persecution continues against the church, and will continue until antichrist, the man of sin, shall come."

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 2.

E. S. WILLARD.

Reflections—Perils of the Young Woman—A Plea—A Mother's Care—A Snare—A Summary of Early Experience.

We reflect upon these scenes of our youth with a grateful remembrance of their many blessings. Peace be to the dead and peace to the living of those halcyon days. We leave their contemplation for that of the sterner scenes of life with regret. But much as we admire youth and its charms, we would not always remain children. We admire the green fields of the spring-time, yet we would see the ripened grain in its season. We sow to reap, and plant to gather into barns. Youth is the spring-time of life. We plant, sow, and cultivate in this season for a harvest in after life. As the rain, sunshine, and diligent hand of the husbandman all blend to insure the crop, so we must have the summer and the autumn of life; the long days, and the sun's vertical rays; the dews and the drouth must be passed through to meet the autumn frosts, to prepare for the garner of God.

Is there a critical period in the life of woman, it is to which we have now arrived. Said Dr. Lyman Beecher in a lecture on Education, "I tremble for a child at the age of eight years." Much more do we tremble for the young miss of twice that age. Here is a dangerous prominence, with few to lend a helping hand. Permit us here to bespeak for her a friend from every class of society to whom she may look for protection.

Young man, will you be a brother to her in the stage-coach, the cars, the steam-boat, the high-way, the by-way, or wherever you may chance to find her unprotected? Will you be true to her, true to your manhood, true to the image of your mother? In every time of need and danger, may she find in you a friend, a brother? Be it so; the blessing of heaven rest upon you. May your sister ever find such a friend. Middle-aged and aged gentlemen and ladies, too, permit us to ask of you to keep a friendly eye for these unprotected ones, that they may not feel alone—alone and unprotected, a shining mark for every sportsman. Who will not commiserate their case? Awake! ye fathers and mothers, the world, awake to the claims of young women! They are the light of the the household, the hope of the world. Who can properly estimate a failure here? Who will dare take the responsibility of laying a snare for her feet? Better were it for that man that a mill-stone were hanged about his neck and he were cast into the depths of the sea.

If I had escaped "Scylla," "Charybdis" was near. If the dangers of my school-days were passed in safety, the perils of the young woman were before me. Ardent and inexperienced, how great the danger! But that God whom I had learned to love did not forsake me now. And my beloved parents still lived; the sleepless eye of my mother was upon her daughters. Did we chance to go out in the evening, we knew that delicate mother would give no sleep to her eyes until we returned. No "sitting up" was allowed in her house. If a gentleman did not sufficiently appreciate the company of ladies to seek it at proper hours, she deemed him unworthy of their regard. All honor to her judgment.

Trained to habits of industry, I was saved from launching into the sea of fashion, while my close application to study pre-occupied my mind until conscience came to the rescue. But other dangers lurked for my unwary feet, among them novel-reading. Upon one occasion a young man was particularly urgent that I accept as a loan Bulwer's last work; at the same time extolling it very highly. I could but take it, but something whispered I must not read it. When at leisure I opened it, and, despite the faithful monitor within, began to read. I went on, feeling more and more condemned, until at about the twelfth line I paused, and asked myself this question, Will I yield myself to be duped by the author of this book, when I know, as he knows, that it is but a creature of the imagination? I replied with a will, No; and shut the book never to open it again. I ever look back upon this period of my life as one of great deliverance. To my covenant-keeping God be all the praise. Had I then, in the heat of youthful impulse, drank of this illusive stream, who shall say the consequences might not have been fatal to all spiritual life?

My first experience of the pardoning love of God was very joyful. It as far exceeded my pleasure in the acquisition of science, as the knowledge of the Creator is more exalted than the knowledge of the creature. The contemplation of the one, even that of the heavenly bodies, was but of his works; yea, parts of his works; but to be made acquainted with the Creator himself, as he is revealed in his Son Jesus Christ, was the beginning of true life and true joy; it could but bring happiness. But, as said the apostle—"If I must needs glory, I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities." If I had begun to know the Lord, I had not yet learned myself. If the knowledge of God gave me joy, to know myself gave me sorrow. I had not learned to fathom the grace of God with my own fallen nature, and to know that the one was a continual antidote for the other; that as I had received Christ Jesus by repentance and faith, so must I continue to walk in him by the recurrent exercise of the same; that in me, that is, in my flesh, there dwelt no good thing. All this I had yet to learn; and, also, that this knowledge should not cast me down, but that on every new discovery of this my destitution of good, and proneness to evil, I should only look to Jesus, "who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption" (1 Cor. 1: 30); that as the serpent of brass was the antidote for the bite of the fiery flying serpents of the wilderness, so is Jesus, in his offering of himself once for all, not only the antidote for sin's deadly sting, but he is the living High Priest over the house of God, consecrated forevermore to atone for the recurrence of sins in his people, to whom they may continually resort, and find mercy and grace to help in every time of need. This atoning priestly office of my Savior I did not yet understand; therefore could not exercise that faith in his willingness to forgive my constant proneness to sin against forgiving love, as I could his readiness to forgive me at the first. In short, I had received my Savior as my justification, but how to appropriate him day by day as my sanctification, I knew not. I had not fathomed the tender, loving heart of my High Priest. I knew not that he was tempted in all points like as myself, and therefore knew how to succor me in all my fierce temptations. I had not the boldness this knowledge gives, therefore could not come to a throne of grace in every time of need; but, like Adam in the garden, when I sinned would fain hide away from my God, instead of coming at once to him confessing my sin and bringing again my sacrifice, even the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." John 1: 29.

Let every trembling soul, then, be encouraged to come to Jesus. Stay not from him when you fall into sin; for it is written—"If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." 1 John 2: 1. And again—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1: 9. Nothing so much honors our High Priest as to come to him day by day, just as we are, acknowledging our own destitution, and accepting his fulness as ours by his grace. "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." 2 Cor. 5: 21.

Here, then, is the secret of peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ,—the key to the narrow way that leads to life, for the want of which I stumbled and fell so many times. Fain would I give it to every new-born soul. Yet am I persuaded that, portray as you may this pilgrim-way, no one can know it for himself until he walks therein. One child may tell another of his joy after having confessed his fault, and is forgiven; but this child will not know it for himself until he feels the remorse, confesses his fault, and is forgiven. Yet, to tell experience is one God-given way to glorify his name. Jesus said to the man whose name was "Legion," when he besought him that he might be with him—"Return to thine own house, and show how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him."

Paul and Peter told experience, and we read that experience over and over with delight and profit. Indeed, this is one of the happiest features of the Bible—its simple relation of experience. Well do I remember, when seeking the Lord, a friend procured for me the life of Isabella Graham, which I read with profit in this my early experience of the grace of God. One sentence there gave me lasting comfort; it was this—"Nothing that can contribute to our comfort is too minute for the care of our heavenly Father." This was just the key I then needed to the bosom of my God, and it let me right in, and I found solace unknown before. To help others, therefore, to breast the storm and gain the port is the end of Experience.

WHAT IS THE GOSPEL RULE?

H. P. SIKES.

"And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all: for all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God; but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had."—LUKE 21: 3, 4.

We learn here, by the high approbation bestowed upon this poor widow, the respect which our heavenly Father feels for the gifts of the poor. The doctrine here promulgated by Him who "taught as never man taught," is not that those only should give who can spare what they give about as well as not; but that all should give, even those who are in the lowest depths of poverty, and have to make the greatest sacrifice to do so; that they, too, should impart of the little they possess, and though poor, yet as faithful stewards of the Lord's money, should render back to him a portion of what he has first given them.

The greater the sacrifice which the servants of God make to do this, the more pleasing and acceptable to him; the more they need that which thus is given away, the greater the faith in his providential care to whom they give, and at whose disposal is all the gold and wealth of the world. The greater the privation voluntarily undergone for Christ's sake, the more do they show their love to the dear Redeemer, who has done so much for them. They may be wondered at, and even condemned by men, for thus giving away what is so much needed by themselves; but God approves, and he will take them under his especial care; and though they may lack for bread, yet they shall have what is far better—his presence and approbation.

That which is given in alms to God's poor children, is as really put into the treasury of the Lord, as though it had been employed to help sustain missionaries, or spread the gospel. Jesus declares (Matt. 25: 40), that in the great day that shall "try men's souls" he will recognize that which shall have been done to any of God's little ones, as done to himself. Nearly the same is taught in other parts of Revelation.

The gospel of Christ seems to have been designed, in some respects, as a perfect leveler. So says the apostle James (1: 9, 10)—"Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted; but the rich, in that he is made low; because as the flower of the grass, he shall pass away." The apostolic church, in its primitive simplicity and purity, recognized and carried out the same principle. Read the latter part of the second and fourth chapters of Acts.

A brother of my acquaintance, who, though quite poor, and very infirm, feels it to be his duty to give a portion of his scanty earnings (one tenth part), either to the extreme poor—those far worse off than himself, or to be used in some way in the cause of God. He has a family, consisting of himself, wife, and three children, and relies mainly, or at least partly, for the support of his family, on prayer and faith in the promises of God. I do positively know that he has at least ten times as much given him in answer to prayer, as that which he gives away. Now who can doubt that this brother pursues a scriptural course? He argues, in defence of the system of giving, notwithstanding his own poverty—"If I were callous, and indifferent towards the sufferings of others; if I were stingy, unfeeling, and illiberal, notwithstanding the intense miseries of some of those who suffer far more than myself or my family; I should thereby throw myself outside of the gospel plan, and could no longer claim as made to me such promises as the following—"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again." Luke 6: 38. "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth to the Lord; and that which he hath given, will he pay him again." Prov. 19: 17. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. 6: 33.

THE HEIGHT OF EL CAPITAN.

The great weather-stained scarred face of El Capitan was on our left, and though its base was almost half a mile away, it towered so high above and seemed so to hang over us, that we should almost have said we could throw a stone against it from the path. No picture by pen or brush can ever convey an idea of the vastness of this view; its magnitude baffles description; nor can the spectator begin to realize it except after seeing it from all points, and studying for days at a time its colossal features in detail. I know of no better way to convey even an inadequate idea of it than by taking some familiar object, as a church spire for instance, for comparison. Let the reader then take as the unit of measurement a church spire, say two hundred feet in height. Put yourself upon the curbstone opposite and run your eye along it to the top.

Fix that measure in your mind. Now go back a little way and double church and spire—fancy yourself looking upward to the top of two such spires, four hundred feet. Have you fixed your distance? Then go back still farther and double the height of your two spires—imagine yourself looking up to the top of the fourth spire piled one above another. There's a distance of eight hundred feet straight up. Take a little time to think it over. Then back still farther, to save something of the effect, and double up again—count them up from the bottom—eight spires high—one thousand six hundred feet. Rest a little, and, if you can, familiarize yourself with the thought and with the distance, for I have not yet done with the eye of your fancy. Now for the last leap in this perpendicular geometrical progression—double the whole eight—and at the top of your sixteenth spire—if I haven't lost you on the way in some of these tremendous upward leaps—reach just a hundred feet beyond—the height of half a spire—then draw a long breath—put your knife into a cloud—you are at the top of El Capitan, three thousand three hundred feet in air.

Keeping that point in mind, drop down from it and spread out under it, for half a mile, a granite curtain, seamed, and scarred, and discolored by the storms and tempests of uncounted ages—at its base pile up a scraggy slope of rocks and mountain debris—plant along the dizzy far-off edge a row of giant pines, that from its foot shall look like bushes—turn a river along its front, and set a grove beside it, and over it all throw the halo and witchery of a golden sunset deepening all its shadows, bringing into relief its outlines, and bathing in a tender light its hoary summit—and you have El Capitan as I saw it on that August afternoon, and seeing it wondered and worshiped.—Scribner's for January.

"This is for your Health."

WHY WOMEN ARE WEAK.

When we consider what an intricate system of defiance to all known physiological laws a woman's dress has become; the tender age at which this defiance begins, and the relentless pressure of it upon the formative and the recuperative energies of the constitution; the murderous thinness and scantiness of her under-dress; the effect of the absence of flannels, and the custom of baring the neck and arms, upon the sensitive tissues of the lungs and heart; the check to all even circulation of the blood and healthy condition of the skin inflicted by the imperfect and compressed covering of her feet and hands; the unhealthy heat of the head, consequent on the manner in which custom requires her to collect her hair into a wad of padding at the base of the brain; the clasp of a rack of steel and whalebone about all the vital organs of the body; the straight-jacket snap with which the seams of her dress meet about her shoulders, arms and chest; the results inevitable upon making the hips the pivot upon which her heavy clothing is hung, and the fulcrum upon which all the motion of her body must swing in walking—if, indeed, we apply that term to the infantine toddle with which women are driven to get about the world; above all, the unreasonable and cruel custom which compels her to drop heavy skirts about her lower limbs and feet, thus endangering her life on all occasions, her health on any but a dry summer day, and her self-reliance forever; when we consider the extent to which the common occupations of a woman deprive her of the open air, of exercise, of change of scene, of acquaintance with the world; of the extent to which they are adapted to produce all the varieties of sedentary disease; when we consider the unlimited influence of the mind upon body, of happiness upon health, and the brooding morbidness and acute suffering which the lives of woman so largely induce in them—shall we find it a matter of surprise that women as a race are diseased and feeble, and are bestowing upon the world a future legacy of diseased and feeble children? Shall we wrap this ruined creature away in a shawl to die, and say, with sorrowful assurance: Behold woman "as God made her?"

Woman as God made her! As man and the devil and her own cowardice made her! God never made such women as are cradling the next generation in this land to-day. Side by side with "female illiteracy," female feebleness is running a race among us. Neglected brains and tortured bodies are working their own way upon our actual and possible mothers. Thoughtful physicians are perplexed and alarmed. We are a beautiful, useful and elevated order of animals; the world has done the right thing by us; it has petted and praised us; who can complain?—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

TREATMENT OF SPRAINS.—Sprains are very painful, and are accompanied with a high degree of inflammation and soreness. The indications are to secure perfect rest of the injured part, and to reduce the inflammation. The inflammation may be reduced by cold wet compresses, renewed as often as they become warm. When the patient has a great deal of vitality, and there is a high degree of inflammation, the injured part may be immersed in cold water, or a stream of cold water may be poured over it until the pain and soreness have been partially removed, when the cold compresses should be applied. When there is much pain and tenderness, and but little heat, hot fomentations, followed by cold compresses, are preferable. When the inflammation and soreness have subsided, friction is useful to promote absorption and strengthen the part. Great care should be exercised about using the injured part until the strength is restored.

CURE FOR CANCERS.—I wish to tell you how I cured my cancer last summer without pain or money. Eight years ago a cancer came on my nose. It grew slowly for several years; the last two years it grew very fast. It became frightful. It commenced to eat out my left eye. I had expended hundreds of dollars, and tried doctors far and near, without finding relief. Last summer I drank Wild Tea, wetting the tea grounds on my cancer every night, as a poultice. In six weeks my cancer was cured. I am sixty-two years old. I have given this remedy to several that had cancer, and know two that have been cured since. I believe Wild Tea grows over the country generally; always on high land.—Charles Yardley, of Pittsburgh, Pa., in Rutland Herald.

LUCY'S VICTORY.

"I would like to go and play with Lizzie Warren to-night, mother," said Lucy, as she come from school with dinner-basket and satchel, and making so much noise that baby Arthur awoke with a cry.

"No, dear; not to-night. Baby has not been well to-day, so you must amuse him while I am busy."

"But, mother, do let me go: for the crane's-bill is in blossom; and Lizzie says we will go through that nice orchard, all covered with patches of innocence, that looks like a great bouquet. And, mother, you know I've never been in it: so do, please."

"No, Lucy: I cannot spare you—so try to feel and look cheerful about it."

"But, mother," persisted Lucy, "if you will let me go, I'll help you another time just as much."

"Well, child, run along then," said her mother, quietly. Lucy looked up eagerly for a moment; then she stood swinging her sun-bonnet by the strings irresolutely. Only the day before, her mother had explained to her the meaning of the passage, "Honor thy father and thy mother."

That kind but unseen friend, called conscience, that our heavenly Father has placed in each of our hearts, was trying to remind Lucy of her duty; so, at length she said, slowly, "Would it be honoring you, mother, if I went."

"No; it would not be honoring me, unless you obeyed quickly and cheerfully."

"Well, then, I won't tease any more, but take Arthur out on the lawn, where he can see the lambs frisk about; and that will be nicer than going when you think it isn't best." So she hung up her satchel, and put away her basket; and in trying to divert her little brother, she became happy herself, as people always do when they give up their own wishes to please and assist others. Then, when bedtime came, her mother's good-night kiss, with "You have honored me, and listened to the voice of conscience, Lucy," were of greater worth than any pleasure her mother would have disapproved.

NOT GOVERNED THAT WAY.

"Come along with us; we're going to have some fun," said a boy one day, when seeking to persuade another to go with him. "I can't," was the answer; "my father told me not."

"Pooh," said the tempter, "what of it? He wont know."

"I don't care, I'm not going."

"You're afraid!" sneered the young scapegrace; "You're afraid of your Pa!"

"Now look here," said the little hero, "I've heard all that sort of talk before, and you need'nt think that you are going to govern me that way;" and he started down the street for home.

About the meanest government we know of is when some little reptile, after coaxing and wheedling an honest boy in vain, changes his tone, and puckering up the corners of his nose into a sneer, says,

"Coward!" "you dassent!" "'Fraid of yer marm, aint you? Before I'd be tied to my mother's apron-strings!"

And many a poor cowardly boy fears this contemptible slang so much that he forgets God, and father, and mother, and is led into some disgraceful scene of sorrow, which gives him pain and shame as long as he lives.

Boys, do not be governed that way. Let scoffers sneer and scorners scorn, trust in the Lord, and you shall be kept in safety to the end.—Little Christian.

THE PROPHETIC PERIODS.—No. 5.
DANIEL 8th AND 9th CONSIDERED.

D. CLOW.

I pass to notice the only logical conclusion that remains. It must be remembered that the said ram was standing before the river in Shushan, the capital of the said empire, nor was he seen to stir out of his tracks; whereas in all foreign wars, the king always commanded his army in person. So we infer that the said "pushing" did not reach beyond the bounds of his own dominions; and if not, then it follows that it must relate to his own subjects, and must transpire within his own territory.

"Pushing" so that "no beast might stand before him," I understand to relate to that terrible political earthquake and civil war inaugurated in the reign of the "great king Artaxerxes" by that "wicked Haman" against the Jews." This was a war of extermination, boldly and deliberately planned, to blot out the only people upon the face of the earth that recognized the only true God. This was not, indeed, the first time that they had been threatened with death and a common grave; they had waded through rivers of blood before; but now the chances were all against them, and to all human appearance they must die en masse. They saw the king's heralds of death coursing through the land with their death warrant in their hands; and heard a voice, as the voice of a multitude rushing to battle. Their ancient enemies, the Amalekites, were exulting over them, and girding on the frightful instruments of death, while the heavens gathered blackness, and the gloom of despair settled around them. The wailings of their own kindred penetrated the clouds, and their prayers ascended to heaven, but no answer seemed to return, as in former days, when Moses and Aaron and Hur stood upon the mount, witnessing the battle in the plains below between the Jews and the Amalekites. Nothing but mournful echoes from the vaults of imprisoned souls saluted their ears, and nothing but the ghosts of slaughtered millions visited them in their distress.

But there was an undercurrent they had not discovered. The very same God who sent them into captivity was now opening a way for their complete restoration to their own land, and at the same moment to punish the proud and insolent Amalekites, as he had declared he would by his servants the prophets. "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Little Joseph was sent by a strange and mysterious way to the palace of the Egyptian king, to open the way of escape from a terrible famine; and Moses was found floating in the river, in a vessel of bulrushes, and taken also to the court of the king's palace, to open a way of escape from a long captivity, and to convince the world that the God of Abraham was the God of Israel, and the true God. In like manner Esther and Mordecai were sent to Shushan the capital, and the palace of the Persian king, to open the way of escape from a shorter but more eventful and perilous bondage. And as the wrath of the Egyptians turned upon their own heads and fell upon their own land, so the hatred and wrath of the Amalekites fell upon theirs.

Now the trembling Esther enters into the court of the king, and invites him, and the very man that had procured her death warrant, to her banquet. They came. Here the secret of the whole plot was fully developed, and Haman was hanged on the very gallows he had erected for Mordecai. Here again we see the wonderful manifestations of Infinite wisdom and power. A great event was at hand, and a wonderful work was to be accomplished. God's ancient people were in jeopardy. The sentence of death had been passed upon them, and no mortal upon earth, no, not even the king himself, dare interfere to arrest the sentence of the law; as the "law of the Medes and Persians changeth not." "There was none that could deliver out of his hand." But God was there, and he heard the bitter wailing of his people.

The king had discovered the fraud that had been practiced upon him, and his indignation against the Amalekites arose to the highest pitch of passion, and he ordered Haman to be hanged immediately. Nor did his ten sons escape the same horrid death. The bear "raised up itself on one side"—in behalf of the Jews—and did "devour much flesh" on the other side. A plan was suggested to the mind of the king, that served the double purpose of relief to the Jews, and punishment to their proud oppressors. He granted the Jews a decree—after the style of the first—to counteract the one that was given to the Amalekites. This inaugurated civil war, of course, between the two alien races, the Amalekites and the Jews, and all were numbered in the general slaughter, "so that no beast might stand before him; neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand." In the exercise of this, the only alternative, the king displayed marvelous wisdom, and a degree of justice that God approved of, and the nations of the earth have always admired. He "became great." The said decrees were both sent out from Shushan the palace, and no man ("beast"), tribe, or nation, dare stand up to oppose them.

Now Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in royal apparel, of blue and white, and with a great crown of gold, and with a garment of fine linen and purple, and the city of Shushan—native Persians—rejoiced, and was glad; the Jews had light and gladness, and joy and honor, and no man (beast) could withstand—stand before—them, "for the fear of them fell upon all people." And "all the [native] rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and officers of the king, helped the Jews, because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them." Esther 8. "For Mordecai was great in the king's house, and his fame went out throughout all the provinces; for this man Mordecai waxed greater and greater." "And the king Ahasuerus laid a tribute upon the land, and upon the isles of the sea; and all the acts of his power, and of his might, and the declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, wherewith the king advanced him, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Media and Persia?"

Now from this we learn that Mordecai, the Jew, became prime minister of state; that the administration and execution of the laws of the empire were committed to his care, and that by this he became identified with the ram, as was Haman before him, and every act of his mighty power was a simple pulsation of the power of the ram. It was not the man, but the regal vesture, the ensigns of royalty, and the great power with which he was clothed, that made all the subordinate "beasts"—governments—and all the kings of the vast empire tremble at his presence and fall at his feet. Literally, there was "no beast" that might—dare—"stand before him." "But he did according to his will and became great." Mordecai wrote in the king's name, and sealed it with the king's ring, and sent letters by post, on horse-back, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries. . . . and being hastened and pressed [literally "pushed"] on by the king's commandment"; and the decree "was given at Shushan the palace." The dreadful thirteenth day of Adar came, with all its terrors, B. C. 426 (Thurman), and with it a tornado of blood and carnage such as never was witnessed before upon earth, among the citizens of one commonwealth whose interests were identical. The death warrant was familiar to all, and the order mandatory to all the subordinate "beasts"—kings and governors—to help the Jews; and they dare not refuse. The battle commenced at the dawn of day, and when the darkness of the night had dispelled the light of the sun, seventy-five thousand of the Jews' enemies lay dead upon the ground; but not a single soul of the Jews was slain; because the "bear rose up" for the Jews against their enemies. And again, at the request of Esther, the ram "did according to his will," and granted the Jews the privilege of continuing the slaughter the next day, and eight hundred more of their enemies fell to rise no more.

Was this the last of the Amalekites? And all that fell, were they of this race? It is true, indeed, that we cannot say positively that they were; but I deem it a fair and logical conclusion to say, that whereas they were the ancient enemies of the Jews, and both had multiplied among the Persians, so much so as to aspire to high ranks of honor in the government; and envy and jealousies had increased among them; and whereas God had declared that he would "utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven," and in this last conflict, with a full license, to kill all, young and old; "little children and women"; and whereas they, on the second day of slaughter, could find only eight hundred more to kill; it is reasonable to infer that they cleaned out the Amalekites, root and branch (see note, page 383, Josephus), "so that no beast might stand before him." And what confirms this view of the case is, that there is no record of them from that day to this.

When I look over the broad field of this eventful prophecy, I am forced to the conclusion that whereas the restoration of the Jews was a long and progressive event, and was not fully accomplished till about the time the ram commenced "pushing" in the said war of extermination; and whereas a full restoration to their own land, religion, laws, and customs, coupled with the sentence of death, that was passed upon all, from which God only could and did save them, would open a new era in the history of that nation; therefore, the epoch of the vision was most justly, wisely, and properly made to synchronize with the said "pushing" on the thirteenth day of Adar, B. C. 426. Hence it is that Josephus says (B. 11, page 384), "that even now all the Jews that are in the habitable earth, keep these days festival, and send portions one to another." And so says Esther 9: 19.

Now the said "pushing," avowedly commenced for the total extermination of the Jews, was most wonderfully overruled,—by the same God that divided the waters of the Red Sea, and bade his people to pass over on dry ground,—and made to serve his purpose in the extermination of their enemies; the remnant of the Amalekites, in harmony with the prophecy of Balaam—"Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end shall be that he perish forever." And again, "The Lord said unto Moses, write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua: for I will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven." The finger of our God may be distinctly traced in all the outlines of this wonderful event, in carrying into execution their threatened destruction. The king himself saw and recognized this in his Epistle to the kings, governors and lieutenants of all his vast dominions, as follows—"Accordingly I have hanged up the man Haman, that contrived such things against them [the Jews] with his family, before the gates of Shushan [just where the ram commenced "pushing"], that punishment being sent upon him by God, who seeth all things"; and adds, "I give you charge . . . that you assist them . . . . on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is Adar; for God hath made that day of salvation, instead of a day of destruction to them. And may it be a good day to those that wish us well, and a day of punishment to the conspirators against us. And I will that you take notice that every city, and every nation ["beast"] that shall disobey any thing that is contained in this epistle, shall be destroyed by fire and sword." This was "pushing" with a vengeance, I think, that must satisfy any critic. So it is more than probable that every living soul of the Amalekites perished. "So that no beasts might stand before him."

We think we have shown from fair and logical reasoning, First, that the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel are reciprocal, and correlative in every essential feature. If not, then the eighth chapter, at least, is a dead letter upon the page of prophecy to-day; and no man upon earth can ever understand it; it is a total blank, and God is dishonored; for he commanded Gabriel to "make the man understand the vision." And Gabriel, too, must be charged with falsehood, for he said, "I will make thee understand what shall be in the last end of the indignation, for at the time appointed [i. e., the 2300 days] the end shall be." Daniel says—"I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it."

Second, we have shown that the "covenant" (Dan. 9: 27) must relate to the time specified, i. e., the 2300 days, and the seventy weeks, as this constitutes a great covenant, and covers the whole length of the vision. In this God stipulated to extend the time of the "daily sacrifice"—the ceremonial law, or the Jewish national religion—"seventy weeks," that then "the people of the Prince that shall come," shall destroy the city and the sanctuary, and "cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease," and spread desolation all through the land. And this was accomplished in the fullest sense by the Roman army, A. D. 65. To illustrate: you stipulate or covenant with your friend to lease him a certain tenement for seventy weeks, with a positive provision that at the end thereof you intend to destroy it, and remove it off the land. Now, the seventy weeks are fulfilled, and you send men to destroy the building. This is a confirmation of your covenant; and if you had previously made ten thousand covenants with your said friend, this could not relate to any of them with any degree of logical sense.

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS.

J. W. THOMAS.

"He is risen."—Mark 28: 6.

"He is risen." This presupposes that he was dead. That cannot have a resurrection which is not dead. If Jesus never died, then the statement concerning his resurrection is not true, for that can only relive which has been once alive and is now dead. Jesus was once alive and went about doing good. He was taken by wicked hands and nailed to the gory cross of Calvary. He was dead, for the Roman soldier with a spear pierced his side. Joseph begged his body, and laid it in his own new sepulchre. A great stone was rolled to the door and sealed, and the grave was guarded by a band of soldiers.

"He is risen." This is a fact established. Angels said so. Those holy beings can never tell that which is not true. On the morning of the third day an angel rolled away the stone and sat upon it. Hear what he said to the women who had come to embalm the Savior's body. Be not affrighted. Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him. The empty sepulchre declared that he was alive. O, hasten and tell the tidings, ye faithful women. Jesus is alive. We have heard the angels, and seen the empty tomb. "He is risen." The disciples saw him. He showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs. An ungodly world has never seen a risen Jesus. They beheld him for the last time when he hung upon the cross. But the disciples saw him, and mingled with him after his resurrection. He showed his hands and his feet. He ate and drank with them, and convinced them that he was the very same Jesus. He confirmed the faith of doubting Thomas, and renewed the commission of cursing Peter.

"He is risen." Then he is the "Son of God." All doubts vanish now. This settles the question of his divinity. God would not have raised him from the dead if he had not been his Son. Skeptics and infidels may ground the weapons of their rebellion now. Jesus is the true Messiah. He was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead. This demonstrates his divinity. "He is risen." Then the justification of believers is secured. "He was delivered for our offences." We had offended God. The law was against us. The awful condemnation of a guilty conscience was sinking us. The debt was more than we could pay. But Jesus takes our place. He meets the demands of the law. He dies the just for the unjust. "He was raised again for our justification." This settles the account. We are now in the hands of Christ. He has bought us, and we belong to him. "Being justified by faith we have peace with God through Jesus Christ." "He is risen." Then the Holy Spirit is given to his people. This was the promise of the Father. It could not come unless Jesus went away. "If I go not away the Comforter will not come, but if I go away I will send the Comforter. Precious promise; it has been fulfilled. We have received the Comforter and we know Jesus lives.

"He is risen." Then our resurrection is secured. He has conquered death and broken the fetters of the tomb. He is the "pledge," the "earnest," the "first fruits" of them that sleep. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." Blessed hope. Glorious truth. In due time our loved ones will live again. "He is risen." Then the kingdom is ours. If he has ascended on high, he will certainly come back and gather his saints. Thus it is written concerning him—"He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Are we risen to walk in newness of life? Set your affection on things above.

THE SEVENTY WEEKS OF DAN. 9 NOT FIGURATIVE TIME.

J. S. WHITE.

It is said that when time is connected with figurative prophecy, the time is figurative. This may be so. But when figurative prophecy is explained, it is literal; so the time connected with the prophecy is explained literally.

Jesus used figures in his parables, but not in his explanation of those parables. If figures are explained in figures, we can never know the meaning till we have the figure made literal.

The seventy weeks were given to the prophet by one who was told to make him understand the vision. A week of years was as literal with Daniel as a week of days. The first time the word "week" is used in the Bible it represents seven years. Gen. 29: 27, 28. Daniel had seen seven "times" pass over the king of Babylon (chap. 4: 25); this was a week of years. When he heard the angel say seventy weeks, or seventy sevens, he knew at once how much time was embraced. It was literally seventy sevens of times, or seventy sevens of years. The angel did not explain the vision figuratively, leaving Daniel without an understanding of it.

But is it true that time connected with figurative prophecy must be figurative? If so, what of Revelation 20th? It is claimed that the angel, heaven, key, bottomless pit, chain, dragon, serpent, devil, and satan, are all figurative. This figurative dragon was cast into a figurative bottomless pit, and, shut up for a thousand years. Can time be more closely connected with figures than it is in this place? Why then should not the thousand years be figurative time, making each year absurdly stand for three hundred and sixty years? I say, absurdly, for no nation or people ever called three hundred and sixty days a year. If, then, when time is connected with figurative prophecy, the time must be figurative; and if figurative time represents a year for a day, the thousand years must represent three hundred and sixty-five thousand years. Where shall we put this time, if it is applied to a figurative reign of the saints with Christ in the past?

If a day in prophecy represents a year, and that year is three hundred and sixty days, how is it that when it is fulfilled, it is three hundred and sixty-five days long? When God said to the prophet, "I have appointed thee each day for a year," did he mean what the prophet understood by a year, or did he suppose it meant five days short of a year? The Jews kept their year with the sun, as nearly as they could, and so has every other nation; making the year three hundred and sixty-five days.

If prophecy explained by a sacred writer is not to be taken literally, and so fulfilled, then I have yet to learn the meaning of all explanation given to us in the Bible.

FLESH AND BLOOD.

W. F. FAHNESTOCK.

Through the blindness in part that hath happened unto Israel, how often is the word of God perverted or misapprehended. Thus it is when speaking of the resurrection of the dead, as the first argument adduced is—"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." 1 Cor 15: 50. Many there are who stumble on this rock, contending that as the spirit returns to God who gave it, and the body returns to its orginal element, dust, therefore there is no necessity of the body being raised; forgetting—"For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen, ... then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 16, 18.

But with what body do they come? "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15: 44. Yes, our blessed Lord became flesh and blood, took upon himself our nature, tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin; suffered all the agony to which flesh is heir; poured out his blood as a sacrifice for our sins; was crucified, died, yes, his lifeless body was taken down and laid in the tomb of Joseph, a natural body; but after three days' repose in the bowels of the earth it was raised a spiritual body. Then he appeared unto his disciples and followers, but they were affrighted and supposed they had seen a spirit. He said unto them, "Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. And when he had thus spoken he showed them his hands and his feet. And while they believed not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave him a piece of broiled fish, and of a honey-comb, and he took it and did eat before them."—Luke. 24: 37, 43. Yes, blessed consolation! "It is I myself;" why are ye troubled? Well did they, when they fell down and clasped his feet and worshiped him.

And how truly consoling are the words of the two men in white apparel when he ascended, who stood by his disciples and said—"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts. 1: 10, 11. "For our conversation [citizenship] is in heaven; for whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile [natural] body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. 3: 20, 21. "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead [in Christ shall rise first, 2 Thess. 4: 16] shall be raised incorruptible, and we [then living] shall be changed; for this corruption must put on [not be unclothed] incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Cor. 15: 51, 57. This blessed hope was prominent in the hearts of patriarchs and prophets, as Job says—"For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." Job. 19: 25, 27. Again the prophet Ezekiel, speaking of the hope of Israel, says—"Son of man, can these bones live? O Lord God, thou knowest. O, ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord . . . . I will lay sinews upon you, and will bring up flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live." Ezk. 37: 3, 14.

There is no mention made in any place of blood being in any of the resurrected saints, but bones, sinews, flesh, skin, breath, and "I will put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live"; that seems to constitute the person raised; therefore the person raised will most certainly be recognized without blood, as was our blessed Lord. Flesh and blood will most certainly not inherit the kingdom of God; but every son of Adam who has the Spirit in him which dwelt in Jesus when he slept in the tomb of Joseph, will be a joint heir with Christ to that "inheritance which is undefiled, and which fadeth not away." "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He who is our life shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 John. 3: 2. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you." 1 Pet. 1: 3, 4.

SANCTIFICATION.
ITS BASIS, MEANS, AND MEASURE.

J. B. COOK.

The beloved disciple, exulting in his gracious apprehension of this grand subject, unfolds it beyond all other inspired men. He revels in the prospect of the overcomer's crown. His climax to each of the seven churches culminates in the brightest visions of glory "to him that overcometh." To his view, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." John 5: 4. The idea, and the language of the overcoming one abounds in his Gospel, in his Epistles, and in Revelation. "To as many as received Him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God; . . . to them that believe on his name." John 1: 11–13.

This apostle records Jesus' prayer—"Sanctify them [the disciples] through thy truth." 17: 17. Then the prayer expands and embraces "all who believe on Him, through their word." Verses 20–24.

Thus Jesus was prepared and sent into the world; and he sent the apostles to call and sanctify others to be saved, "till we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of [the body of] Christ." Eph. 4: 13. Those thus begotten by the word are to be baptized into the "one body" and drink into the "one Spirit." 1 Cor. 12: 12. Hence Jesus says—"Now ye [the disciples] are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." John 15: 3.

Let this suffice to set forth the basis, the means, and the measure of this great grace. Christ, the "Word," whom the written and preached word discloses to faith, is the "sure foundation" of it. The apostles, prophets, pastors and teachers are the agents to minister the word—the immortal seed—for the "perfecting of the saints," and the "edifying of the body of Christ," as the means of sanctification. Eph. 4: 12.

The measure is expressed by "victory"; "overcometh," and a full "reward." But this is the labor of the Christian life. And while we anticipate the crown and the kingdom, the inheritance and immortality, by faith, yet the good fight, and the christian race, are to end only in this blessed consummation at the resurrection of the just. Then the just will be made perfect, and be like Him—the Heavenly.

Thus we may attain a practicable and inspiring view of this profound subject of sanctification. Thus we may defy the devil, live above the world, and be enriched with the full river of God. Amen.

The proper English word is holiness, to indicate the leading idea of entire consecration to God. Its primary import may be wholeness, or entireness, as related to our devotion to the divine service. Holiness may thus be but another name for perfect christian healthfulness, heartiness, and strength for effective work and abounding joy in the Lord. It would embrace the idea of complete fullness—"filled with all the fullness of God." Eph. 3: 15–18. Such would be "perfect and entire, wanting nothing." It embraces the Divine anointing that knoweth all things. 1 John 2: 20–27.

"Holiness," from the Greek ho-los (whole), is the expression for moral health, as to the positive qualities of wisdom, strength, and integrity in the christian warfare. It is the contrast of weakness, ignorance and inefficiency, as to knowing and doing the Divine will among men. What health, strength, and intelligence are to the present life, such is holiness in relation to the cause of Christ and the life everlasting. "The just made perfect" will be "every whit whole"—healthful, joyful, venerable, and strong, like God's angels—"to do his will, hearkening to the voice of his word" forever." Amen.

QUESTIONS
For "Adventists" to Answer.

A. N. SEYMOUR.

1. Do the Holy Scriptures furnish the church of Christ with sufficient instruction to thoroughly qualify her for every good word and work?

2. If the Holy Scriptures are a perfect rule of faith and practice, and thoroughly furnish the church unto every good word and work, should any one add to or take from this most sacred arrangement or counsel?

3. Has God ever called, or claimed and authorized any man or woman to go and organize churches and call them "Advent churches"?

4. Did the apostle Paul, who preached the whole counsel of God and kept back nothing that was profitable unto the churches, ever name the doctrine he preached "Advent doctrine, "Adventism," and organize "Advent churches"?

5. Should any one be approbated in adding "ism" to any part of God's arrangement for the salvation of man, or in naming such as have become obedient to the faith—"Advent brethren," "Advent ministers," "Adventists"?

6. If it is the duty of ministers now to preach the gospel of God and call it "Adventism," and name churches "Advent churches," and christians "Adventists," why did the apostles overlook this necessity and neglect this duty? They preached the second coming of Christ and kindred doctrines, but minus isms, ites, and ists.

7. If it is right for one minister to concoct a name for the church and christians, have not all ministers precisely the same right? And then what becomes of the unity of the church of Christ? Is it not a misnomer?

8. Has any minister of Christ any right whatever to slice off from the body, or church of Christ, a section and call it an Advent, Methodist, Presbyterian or Mormon body, or church? Would not this materially defile the body of Christ?

9. Is there a man on earth who can give even one good scriptural reason for doing this work of supererogation? If so, let him give it. I am exceedingly anxious to cast my entire influence on the side of truth, righteousness, and union. If I am in error, do instruct me out of God's word; I will most willingly bow to its supremacy. I want to be right in everything.

10. When a bride and bridegroom are to be married, would it be judicious for the officiating minister or magistrate to interpose and insist on introducing his own name with the bridegroom's? Would not the sanctity of the marriage covenant be defiled at once? and would not the parties demur and sharply rebuke such an insult? Christ is jealous over his bride with a godly jealousy.

11. Do not the names Advent, Adventists, and all sectarian names, as well detract from the purity, beauty and simplicity of God's arrangement, scatter a demoralizing influence in society, and wake up the enemies of the cross of Christ to speak reproachfully of our holy religion?

12. Does not the introduction of unscriptural names multiply sects, creeds, divisions, schisms, contentions, strife, jealousies, and sectarian bigots, and a host of other evils?

13. Paul says—"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing." How can this be accomplished so long as some are determined to be Adventists, Methodists, Baptists, etc., etc., and utterly refuse to stand on a scriptural basis? Are the inspired words of the apostle to be credited and sustained by word and deed? or shall we override them and resist the Spirit's teaching and influence?

14. Do not those who are so tenacious of the names Advent and Adventists, violate their covenant obligation, when they covenant to take the "Holy Scriptures as their only rule of faith and practice"? Do they not say one thing and practice another?

15. Is it not a thousand times better, after all, to stand fairly and fully on the original scriptural platform, where the devil cannot rebuke us for our sins, than to be meddling with matters from which God excludes us, as he excluded Adam from the forbidden tree?

Says the Adventist, "Are you ashamed of your name and faith, and therefore ignore it?" By no means. Any name that my heavenly Father has seen fit to confer upon his dear children in his blessed word I cherish most ardently, and rejoice and glory in the midst of such endearing appellations. But I am most heartily ashamed of all sectarian names under heaven, because they divide my heavenly Father's family, and destroy the mutual love and friendship of its members. The history of the past demonstrates the truthfulness of this position. I am not ashamed of my faith, no part of it. I love to publish it better than I love to eat, drink, or sleep. Past labors justify this remark.

THE SCRIPTURAL FORM OF BAPTISM.

WM. HOBBS.

There may be some doubt in the minds of some whether baptism should be administered by immersion backwards or forward, and whether it should be by a single immersion, or by "trine immersion." The form in use in the apostolic age seems pretty clearly indicated by the apostle Paul (Rom. 6: 3–5)—"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." The phrase "buried with" is from the Greek word meaning "entombed with"; and Christ's entombment consisted in being laid in a sepulchre as a person is laid out in a coffin; that is, face upward. "Buried with him by baptism into death" indicates a similarity between the form of baptism and the sepulture of Christ in death. It cannot, therefore, refer to an imitation of his bowing his head forward in the death act on the cross, but to the form of his sepulture afterward. And so when Paul says, by way of explanation, "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death," he refers to the likeness of his sepulture while under death's dominion. To be buried with him by baptism in the likeness of his death, would be to be immersed backward, as he was laid out tenderly by loving hands in his death sepulchre. And then the rising face upward from the liquid grave would be in likeness of his resurrection from his prostrate position in the grave.

"If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." An immersion face downward, if it were in likeness of Christ's bowed head as he died on the cross, the rise from the water could not be in likeness of his resurrection; whereas the other form would, and so the only scriptural form. And since Christ was entombed but once, and rose therefrom but once, one single immersion would symbolize this, while "trine" immersion would spoil its significance.

There is quite an historical argument in favor of "trine" immersion. An author, in a recent argument on this form of baptism, says that Marcion "commenced in A. D. 150 to baptize the Gentiles 'in the name of the Lord Jesus'; but being a learned Greek scholar, he knew that the frequentative verb baptizo, which means 'to dip repeatedly,' could not be limited to one immersion; therefore he continued the apostolic mode of dipping three times, though he dropped the use of the three names." Baptizo, like baptizing, may have a frequentative sense by implying a repetition of the act on different individuals, but not on one individual; for otherwise the trine immersionists would have to repeat the act twice, certainly, in each of the three names used in their baptism, making six immersions. But Marcion did not repeat this, for the reason assigned; for "trine immersion" was held to denote the three days of Christ's burial. For Clement of Alexandria is quoted as addressing the churches planted by the apostles, and saying—"Ye were conducted to a bath just as Christ was carried to the grave, and were thrice immersed, to signify the three days of his burial. Weibing, p. 228."—Thurman.

If the three immersions were used to signify the three days of Christ's burial, they could not signify a baptism into each of the three names now used, without destroying the symbolizing of the three days. So the probability is that the trine immersion of Marcion was for the same purpose as that of Clement; to indicate the three days of Christ's burial, and not three persons. But afterward when the question was discussed whether "three persons," or only one of them, suffered on the cross, the advocates of the former view could have claimed trine immersion as indicating as much; which would have led to a change from the form used by Marcion to that used by the Greek church. The change from the form indicated by Paul in Rom. 6: 3–5, would therefore seem to have been gradual from the Marcion improvement to the Greek form of trine immersion; the improvement consisting in his trine baptism.

But Paul is not the only witness in favor of one immersion, for Peter testifies to the same effect. Speaking of the preparing of the ark in the days of Noah, he says—"Wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 3: 20–21. The preposition "by" here has the significance of through, as also the Greek preposition di. Those who were saved in the ark were saved through the watery baptism which deluged it for forty days and nights. The rain incessantly poured around it, and upon it, and the waters beneath submerged it in one watery baptism, of forty days' continuance. And this is made a figure of baptism; and since that of the ark was one, so also must the other be as a like figure.

Again, Paul compares the baptism in the red sea to Christian baptism, and thereby indicates that it consisted of one immersion. I would not that ye should be ignorant, brethren, he says in substance, "how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the cloud, and through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." They did not go down into the red sea but once, and this being contrasted with baptism unto Christ, indicates that one, and not trine, immersion, was in use in the apostle's time. Let us, then, be planted together in the likeness of his death once, and in rising from the liquid grave we shall then be in the likeness of his resurrection.

TRIP TO CALIFORNIA.

At the close of our last report, we were near the summit of the Rocky mountains, over a mile and a quarter above the level of the sea, about seven hundred and twenty-eight miles from Omaha, three hundred and four from Ogden, one thousand one hundred and eighty-six from California, and two thousand three hundred and fifty-three from Boston. We were then snow-bound with two other trains, the three containing the passengers that left Omaha on seven different days, eight days apart. Some two hundred men were digging snow drifts, and we were progressing some four or five miles an hour on an average, with a strong prospect of an immediate snow storm. Fortunately, we did not have much of a storm, but the snow drifts continued to blockade our way a good part of the night of Jan. 1st.

PREACHING.

New Year's evening, when on the summit of the Rocky mountains, it was proposed that we should preach to the passengers, while we were waiting for the clearing of the track. The conductor gave consent, and due preparations were made to commence the services at half-past seven o'clock. At the time appointed, the passengers were notified in the several cars, and more came than could be accommodated. In the audience we had rich and poor men, Catholics and Protestants, Infidels and leading Mormons, literary men and the unlearned. Some of them had rarely heard a sermon, and may never hear another; while others were religious people. Our exercises began by singing "Sweet by-and-by," led by Bro. and Sr. Wilson and their niece. Then followed an appropriate prayer by Bro. Wilson. Then we sung "Tis the very same Jesus." Before we began the sermon, we told the audience that in case the cars should start before we got through, we would wait till they came to another drift, and then continue our remarks. After we had talked ten minutes, the cars began to move. After waiting ten minutes, they stopped again, and remained still about thirty-five minutes, giving us just the time we desired to finish what we had to say. The Spirit of the Lord was upon us, and we had a blessed time. We felt much freedom in speaking. Tears were seen in the eyes of the hearer. It seemed as though some were convicted then and there, and if they could have had an opportunity, we think some would have requested prayers. In our talk we endeavored to show them how to become christians, and what Christ would do for those who followed him in faithfulness. We felt that the occasion was one of special interest and profit; and that the Lord truly smiled upon our exercises, and sent us a refreshing shower of blessings, adapted to the wants of those present. It was the sweetest and most delightful event during our journey. We shall ever remember it with pleasure. It paid well for our long and tedious stay among the snow banks of the Rocky mountains.

The next morning we went on our way rejoicing, and met with no more obstructions from the snow. During the day we passed through wild mountain scenery, presenting a great variety of lofty peaks, with ever-varying aspects, filling the eye of the beholder with rare sights, well worth the long journey endured. Large herds of antelope abound on either side of the Rocky mountains, and the snow is well covered with their tracks. We saw several prairie wolves by the way. After running a distance from the cars, they would invariably stop and look at the train, as if surprised at the sight.

At the stations on the road, most of the houses might well be called shanties, some of which are covered with cloth, such as we see at eastern campmeetings. We saw several on which the cloth was torn into strips by the high winds, and the pieces were flapping about as though they did not intend to stay much longer. It is not common to have so much snow as is seen this winter. We thought their houses must be rather cold for the season. Other houses are mostly under ground, and would be quite comfortable as to the temperature, but lack fresh air and ventilation. Most of the people whom we see at the stations are rough in their looks and manners. Liquor and tobacco are in very common use. Profanity and vulgarity are prominent traits of character in all those western settlements. Many of the men are daring, reckless, and lawless. For hundreds of miles, we saw but one meeting-house, and one very small school-house. This is good ground for faithful men of God.

There are several coal mines on the route, owned by the R. R. Co., which afford plenty of coal for the engines. At Carbon station, six hundred and fifty-six miles west of Ogden, the coal is drawn out of the mine and dumped into the cars while standing on the R. R. track. It requires a host of men to keep the road in repair. Once in six miles are stationed five men and a "boss," whose duty is to see that the track and all things connected with the road are kept in order. The "boss" receives seventy-five dollars per month, and the other men $1.80 day. This winter, thus far, the expenses have been very great, in consequence of the unparalleled severity of the storms. The road is said to be a very safe one, so far as accidents are concerned. The rails appear to be well laid, and the trains are run with much care. Some fifty miles additional snow fence is about to be erected, so as to be guarded against any more such drifts as we have encountered during this trip.

During the entire distance from Omaha to Ogden, one thousand and thirty-two miles, we saw scarcely any trees. About the only thing, except grass, is sage brush, a worthless shrub from one to three feet high. There is so much alkali in the soil, that it is unfit for cultivation. Some of the highest land on the mountains is quite level, affording an extended view of that wild country, occupied by Indians and wild animals. At the summit of the Rocky mountains, from whence a stream might flow westward to the Pacific, or eastward to the Atlantic ocean, is a flag-staff, planted by the wife of Captain Clayton, near the R. R. track. It is seven hundred and thirty-seven miles west of Omaha. About thirty-five miles further west, we pass Table Rock, which rises up some five hundred feet above the R. R. track, and is in shape like the top of an immense jug. It is composed of red sand-stone. Passing on, many strange looking rocks appear. Some are like huge, high towers in partial ruins, standing as monuments of other ages. Many of these present very rare appearances, unlike any thing we have seen elsewhere. These sand-stone hills on the mountain plains afford interesting sights for the traveler, and fine stereoscopic views for the artist. Their strange and peculiar shapes seem owing to the soft nature of a portion of the stone. Some part of it wears away by the action of wind, frosts and storms, while a harder portion remains, until grotesque figures are produced, and tall towers of rocks remain, while the surrounding portion has crumbled into dust, leaving the monument standing in the midst, to charm the eye of the beholder. This mountain scenery is on a grand scale. No American citizen should go to Europe to see natural wonders till after he has been to California, over the U. P. and C. P. R. R.

Passing "Pulpit Rock," at the foot of Echo Canon, and "Devil's Slide," near the "one thousand mile tree," we soon came to Ogden City, one thousand and thirty-two miles from Omaha, and eight hundred and eighty-two from San Francisco. We arrived about midnight Tuesday, five days and six hours behind time. The passengers were a hungry set, and made strange havoc among the edibles, leaving but little for their successors. The passengers of eight trains were there in a heap, which made some confusion among the various nations of foreign emigrants, who could not speak a word of English, and the various other parties going east and west. Ogden City is mostly occupied by Mormons, and is situated at the junction of the Union Pacific, Central Pacific, and Utah Central railroads. The latter runs thirty-six miles south to Salt Lake City. Brigham Young is President of the road. At Ogden we found but little snow—not enough for sleighing. Westward from there, for many miles, there was scarcely any, excepting what was on the surrounding mountains.

The Central Pacific R. R., extending from Ogden to Sacramento, is conducted with great energy under the superintendence of Mr. A. N. Town. It is very seldom that a train comes too late on that road. The track runs through the deepest snows on the route between Omaha and Sacramento; especially on the Sierra mountains, where, in Summit valley, the snow has been known to be sixteen feet deep on a level, and drifts from forty to sixty feet deep. With heavy snow plow, and from three to seven engines, they make the snow stand back and keep off the track, by keeping the snow train continually at work. We learn that the Union Pacific purpose to adopt the same method of keeping the track clear. The events of this winter have shown the necessity of adopting the same system pursued by the Central Pacific; then passengers will not be again subject to such inconvenient and unpleasant delays.

After leaving Ogden, for several miles we pass in sight of the great Salt Lake, in which no animal lives. The lake is one hundred and twenty-six miles long, and forty-five wide. The waters are so dense that a bather floats upon its bosom very easily. It has no visible outlet, though waters are continually pouring in from the Jordan, Weber and Bear rivers. The waters of the lake are said to be twelve feet higher than they were twenty years ago. Fences which formerly enclosed nice meadow land, are now nearly covered with water. The waters are still rising. The surrounding land is very barren, and is known as the "Great American Desert," which is some sixty miles square. It affords no support for man or beast. This desert may have been a part of Salt Lake in early times.

Our morning scenery was very fine at the next sunrise after leaving Ogden. The sun came up very smilingly and tinged the soft clouds with bright and varied hues, and then tipped the snow-capped mountains with its golden rays, and in connection with the lake view, presented a rare sight for the landscape painter. We gazed with admiration and delight, while watching the pleasing changes in this natural panorama in the valley among the mountains. Onward from there, our way was up, up, till we came where the ground was again white with snow, and every thing looked dreary and forsaken.

To-day, Jan. 3d, we are getting along finely. We have met with no obstructions since we left Ogden, at about one o'clock this morning. It is now three P. M., San Francisco time, which is three hours and thirty-five minutes slower than Boston time. We are in the Humboldt valley, among the Humboldt mountains. For many hundred miles, about all the vegetation we have seen has been sage brush, and a few small cedar shrubs on the mountains; but in the Humboldt valley is found nice grass for cattle, and the soil is good. The ground is covered with some three inches of snow, above which the grass rises about a foot. We have passed a large number of cattle, which were looking well. They are kept here all winter, without shelter, fences, or any feeding, excepting what they can gather of themselves. One man from California drove one thousand head of cattle here last spring. When fit for market, they are sent back to San Francisco on the cars. In New England, farmers would think their cattle could hardly live through the winter in such a place as this. The grass is said to be very nourishing, and well adapted to fatten cattle. In some parts of the west, it is said the cattle must die because the grass is covered up by the snow.

The Humboldt wells, in the midst of a pleasant valley, are objects of interest. There are about twenty of them. The emigrant formerly encamped about these wells. Their surface is undisturbed. It is some six or seven feet across their tops, which are nearly round, and their bottom has never been found. It is supposed they were once craters of extinct volcanoes, which threw up the vast amount of lava found in the soil of the surrounding country. There are also several hot springs in this section of country.

During the day we have passed several antelope and the wolf. Indians abound by the way, and come about the stations to look at the cars, and beg food from the passengers. Their faces are often painted a vermillion red, which makes them look more hideous than their naturally wild appearance. The women had their pappooses on their backs, strapped to boards, which the little fellows seemed to take very quietly. These Indians live in very poor huts, half under ground. They are very shiftless, lazy, and only live from hand to mouth. It may be truly said of them, they take no thought for the morrow. They are sad looking specimens of humanity. They are clothed in tattered garments, with a blanket wrapped about them, and their feet bound up in rags. The squaws do the work, and carry the burdens. The lives of these Indians are aimless and useless.

Thursday morning, Jan. 4th. At sunrise, we are at Reno, sixteen hundred and twenty miles from Omaha, one hundred and fifty-four from Sacramento, two hundred and seventy-one from San Francisco, where we hope to arrive to-night. During the past night we have traveled some of the time about forty-five miles an hour, through a country abounding in interesting scenery, and thrilling events during the past history of emigrant travel through this wild region. From Reno onward to Colfax we pass through the most interesting mountain scenery we ever beheld. It is wildness run wild; grandeur piled up, and topped off with sublimity. Our pen-picture can convey but a very faint idea of the wonders to be seen on this route. Language fails, as does the artist's brush, when he tries to paint the sunbeams. The sight is completely overwhelming, filling the mind with awe and deep amazement, as we gaze in shuddering silence at the towering peaks, and the terrible ravines that go down two thousand feet. At Truckee, where we stopped for breakfast, the snow was three and a half feet on a level. We never saw so lovely a snow-scene. It was a very bright morning, and the sun was just tipping the snow-capped hills with its golden beams; the tall pines were loaded so heavily with snow, that their branches hung down by their side; and on the mountain tops they looked like trees of white coral. For many miles before reaching Truckee, we kept by the side of the Truckee river, which winds among the mountains in a deep valley, hardly wide enough for the R. R., the river, and the old emigrant road. The mountains tower high on either side of the river. We saw no trees between Chicago and Truckee mountains. A few cedar bushes were seen beyond Ogden, on the hills skirting Salt Lake valley; aside from these the whole country is treeless. But after we get well among the Truckee mountains, we find an abundance of pitch pine trees, and further on, sugar pine, which grows very large and abundant. At Truckee we bought the nicest Hamburg grapes we ever tasted. O, they were so large, so sweet, so juicy and tender, that one might well think he had got hold of the ancient grapes that the spies obtained from Canaan, in the days of Moses. These grapes did not grow on the Truckee mountains, but in the "summer land"—California. Very delicious pears were also obtained at the same place, which grew with the grapes.

In the Summit valley, on the Truckee mountains, the snow is said to be fifteen feet on a level, and has been known to be sixteen feet. Drifts have been found sixty feet deep. The conductor informed us that he had seen fifteen large engines attached to one huge snow plow for the purpose of clearing the track over these mountains. This is a sample of the enterprise of the managers of the Central Pacific R. R. The track is like a groove cut in the mountain side, one thousand feet from the bottom. To prevent the track from being filled with snow-slides and avalanches, they have covered it with very stout snow sheds, at a cost of some ten thousand dollars per mile. While in them, it seems some like riding in a covered depot. One of these sheds is twenty-eight miles long. There are some forty miles in all. These sheds hide some grand sights among the mountains.

One of the most interesting sights on the road is Donner Lake, quietly nestling down in a deep valley, enclosed by the magnificent scenery of the surrounding mountains. It is two and a half miles northwest of Truckee; is three and a half miles long, averaging about one mile wide. It has been sounded seventeen hundred feet without finding bottom. It is believed to have once been the crater of a volcano, as the surrounding mountains give strong evidence of volcanic formation. The water is very clear, and pebbles fifty feet deep can be seen with much distinctness. It is surrounded on three sides by high mountains, covered by large fir, spruce, and pine trees. It is a favorite summer resort.

A very sad scene occurred at this spot in 1846. A party of emigrants left Illinois in the fall of that year to settle in California. Among them was Mr. Donner and family. They reached the Truckee mountains late in the season. Their guide urged them forward, lest they should be overtaken by the winter storms. But as Mr. Donner had a large number of cattle, he chose to give them rest before crossing the mountains. Part of the company hurried forward, but sixteen, including Mr. Donner, wife, and four children, encamped for a night by the side of Donner Lake. During the night a terrible snow-storm commenced. The party became alarmed at the amount of snow, and concluded to try to make their escape over the mountains. As Mr. Donner was unwell, he concluded to remain. Of course Mrs. Donner remained by his side, but thought best to send on her children. One Dutchman tarried with them. Those who went on finally succeeded in reaching the sunny plains of California. The storm continued most of the time for weeks, until it was impossible for them to get away from Donner Lake, or for others to reach them. The tops of stumps cut show that the snow was of immense depth. No one can tell of the sufferings they endured during that long and dreary winter. In early spring a party started for their rescue, and after a perilous journey reached the Donner hut. They entered, and, to their horror, there sat the Dutchman before the fire eating a piece of a roasted arm of Mrs. Donner. Mr. Donner had died, and been buried in the snow. But the rest of the horrid tale remains untold.

WHEN THE SOUL BECOMES IMMORTAL.

Said the Savior—"I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever." John 6:51. Theologians often insist that as faith in Christ does not render the body of the believer deathless, this statement must refer to the soul. If this claim is valid, the soul becomes deathless by accepting Christ, thus repudiating the theory of its natural immortality, and leaving all the wicked destitute of immortality. If by receiving Christ the soul is rendered deathless, then without receiving Christ it is not deathless. So this proof hurts our opposers more than it helps them. It involves the conclusion that the soul is mortal till conversion, and then becomes immortal.

This is about as reasonable as the solution given by the Catholic priest to one of his flock who had lost a child before getting it sprinkled, who inquired,

"What will become of its soul?"

"Soul?" said the priest; "it had no soul; the soul begins at baptism."

Whether the soul becomes immortal at conversion, or at baptism, all others are left destitute of immortality. But, mark! It is the man, and not his ghost, that "shall live forever." The right to thus live forever is secured by faith in Christ; but the time when this life will begin, will be at the last day. "Every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." Not till then will immortality begin. W. S.

SANTA CLAUS.—Many talk to their children about the visits of Santa Claus, without knowing the origin of the tradition, or the influence of it upon the tender mind of childhood. It is a relic of Catholicism taken into the Protestant church. Saint Nicholas (a Catholic saint), was claimed to be a very generous saint, and withal very fond of children; so after his death, it was claimed by Catholics that the ghost of Saint Nicholas came around on Christmas Eve to make presents to Catholic children; and then to make the lie look plausible, the Catholic parents had to make the presents secretly themselves, because this ghost omitted to do it, and thus one lie was told to prove another lie; first, the story about this present-making ghost was a lie, and then, when he failed to come, another lie was told to prove that he had come.

Now Protestants are retailing the same double lie, about the same Catholic ghost, having abbreviated his name to Santa Claus (Saint Nicholas.) The result of thus instilling into the minds of children this marvelous idea of an immaterial visitor, is very ruinous, even though soon undeceived. Never infuse any more of this Catholic nonsense into the minds of your children. Give your presents to your children yourself, and not lay it to a ghost. W. S.

"TWICE OUT."—To-day I take up a paper published by the Methodists in Macon, Ga., Jan. 10th, and read an article entitled "The case of Rev. P. G. Bowman," setting forth the expulsion of Bro. B. at their recent conference. Well, I think Bro. B. is surely out by this time. If they have any doubts about it, I think they had better try it over, and turn him out again. At first, he voluntarily went out, by resignation; and that makes once out; but wishing to show their power, even after he had joined another church, they insisted that he was not out, and so went through the form of expulsion; and that makes twice out. Is he out now? The old adage is—"Three times and out." Perhaps they had better put him out once more, and thus make a sure thing of it.

But this act has not turned the truth out of him, nor out of the State. It will require more than one such excommunication to keep the truth out of the South. Men are beginning to think for themselves, and are disputing the right of men to control their "thinking machines."

MASS. CONFERENCE.

BRO. GRANT:—The quarterly session of the Mass. Conference at Lawrence was one of special interest. I arrived Wednesday, in time for the first meeting, and stayed until Saturday evening. The meeting commenced in the Spirit, and reminded us of the Second Advent meetings of former times. The snow and rain of Thursday prevented many from being present, but enough of the genuine stock came in to make it interesting and profitable to be there. Our brethren at Lawrence not only welcomed us, but made ample preparation for all that came. No lack of homes or home comforts when out of meeting. The only difficulty was, that all who desired could not be supplied with guests.

The preaching and exhortations were both doctrinal and practical. All seemed to realize that nothing was so fruitful of saving results, as keeping before the people the signs of our soon coming Lord. This believed would bring the corresponding efforts of sanctifying ourselves by obeying the truth, thus letting the true light shine, that others seeing its practical working in the believer's life, would be constrained to run to the same fountain, and learn the wisest lesson. The indications of coming glory soon to be realized gave new impulse to the meeting; hearty responses of hallelujah, glory, and thanksgiving, with joy unspeakable, the perceivable effects, with a deep feeling of the necessity of living in constant readiness for any event that might suddenly transpire, prevailed. The salvation-bearing messengers to this last generation, with the flying message, "Behold he cometh," thought best to keep at the "specific work," giving special attention to those Bible truths which God has given us to save this generation from skepticism, spiritualism, and everlasting destruction. The sword is coming, and it will not do under any pretext for the watchmen to keep still.

The second advent of our Lord and Savior is near at hand. Who is on the Lord's side? This is the all-important question, and to be settled immediately. They that are not for him are against him. No neutral ground here, no more so than in the days of Noah and Lot. Having the mind of Christ, and of the "holy men of old" who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," we are with them in the fulfillment of the prophetic word, and can and shall say "this is that spoken of by the prophets"; and "are not in darkness that that day should overtake us as a thief."

We must keep the light before the people by giving publicity to that portion of God's word which others keep back through their ignorance, or love of honor, pleasure, and a wide departure from the word of God. Our meeting at Lawrence was characterized with these sentiments which have ever, by the grace of God, kept us a separate people. Standing up for Jesus and these last-day signals of soon coming redemption, has brought us into reproach. Let us welcome it for truth's sake, and bear it still. We have been excluded, cast off, not even recognized or fellowshiped by the religious bodies that have the form of godliness.

Well, my dearly beloved, reproach-bearing disciples for Christ's sake, be patient, be kind, be filled with the Spirit, and be ready to fellowship, co-operate, and work earnestly with all who will "stand up for Jesus." If they will not, we must "come out from among them," "esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches" than all earthly honors or treasures. LUTHER BOUTELL.

GEO. STORRS' NEW VIEWS.

N. FIELD.

In his new pamphlet, on page 15 he says: "The present age or dispensation has been, and still is, the age in which God is gathering the seed of Abraham, of whom Christ is the 'first fruits,' and preparing them for their work of blessing all nations and kindreds of the earth. This dispensation, or age, in which we live is not designed to witness the fulfillment of the promise and oath of God, but to prepare a people freed from carnal and selfish designs, earnestly desiring not only to see God's promise and oath to Abraham carried out, but a like one to Moses, 'that the earth shall be filled with the glory of God.' This age, then, so far from being the final one, is only a preparatory one, to prepare men and women for the great work of blessing 'all the families of the earth' in the ages to come."

If this doctrine be true, then, this dispensation is only designed to make preachers for the ages yet to come, in which they are to continue to labor and pray for the conversion of sinners. The resurrection from the dead will bring to the saints who sleep in Jesus, and who have suffered great tribulation in this dispensation, no deliverance from care and responsibility. They will still have to plead with sinners, have their message treated with contempt by some, and they themselves despised and rejected. This is rather a discouraging view of the resurrection state! But this is what awaits them, if Bro. Storrs is to be believed.

He is very positive that the promise and oath of God to Abraham cannot be fulfilled in this age or dispensation. Let us hear what Paul says about it—"And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers [Abraham, Isaac and Jacob], God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee." Acts 13:32, 33. It is very evident that Bro. Storrs and the apostle Paul are at issue here. All prudent and conservative christians will take sides with Paul.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 5.

Despite the good effect of the preaching at Carpenter, Ala., some who did not attend the meeting would insist that these meetings are a northern scheme to produce an influence on the coming election. But those who attended the meetings could clearly see that we were giving exclusive attention to the kingdom of God, and not meddling with the kingdoms of men.

Dec. 18th, I took the cars for Ooltewah, Tenn., where I preached in the evening to a large congregation in the Presbyterian church. I came to this place by the earnest request of Bro. H. Davis, who is laboring with Sr. Hastings in the South. They have been holding meetings about four or five miles from this place, with good results; but the clergy have been stirred up on the question of the nature of man, and the reign of Christ on earth in person. The next day (Dec. 19) I went to hear a Baptist minister review a sermon preached by Bro. Davis on this topic, about four miles from Ooltewah; and in the evening I listened to Bro. Davis' reply to the same. Bro. Davis did well. About a dozen ministers attended. The excitement is intense. They had undertaken to crush out the heresy in its infancy. The leading minister proposed having the matter debated, and in a church meeting appointed a committee to consult with us about the matter. We presented the points of difference between us in the form of propositions for debate, and instead of accepting them, and agreeing to furnish a man to discuss them, they simply took them with the understanding that they would present them to their champion, to see whether he would debate them. So it is yet uncertain whether the discussion will come off, or at what time it will take place, if ever. During the day, the friends who have already received the truth held a business meeting, to decide about building a house of worship, and arranged to build. This does not look like being exterminated by opposition. Sr. Hastings has done much good in this place.

Dec. 20th, I preached in the Presbyterian house in another part of the town. Several preachers were present, who had previously read my "Life beyond Death," and some confess that their faith is shaken in their former theology. The attention was good, but the cold weather kept many at home who would otherwise have attended; and our congregation numbered only about seventy. This is the coldest spell of weather known in this region for several years; and meeting-houses in this section are not fit for meetings in such cold weather.

Dec. 21st, I preached again at the same house, and was listened to with profound attention, a goodly congregation being present despite the cold weather. At the close of the sermon two young men arose for prayers. Bro. Davis and Eld. Fitzgerald (a Baptist minister) addressed the throne of grace with great earnestness. There are symptoms of good, and we hope many will be benefited. Some people are trying to convey the impression that as northern people we are trying to bring the southern people under our religious influence, preparatory to securing their votes, thus to rule the South. Some of their preachers tell them that the devil does not send out fools to preach for him, but smart men, and they must beware of them. Despite all these efforts to forestall our work, conviction is finding its way to the hearts of the people.

Dec. 22nd, the weather having moderated, a larger congregation assembled to hear me preach on prophecy. Bro. Davis and Sister Hastings held a meeting on the same night at another meeting-house, some six or eight miles away. My congregation listened eagerly, and a deep impression was made on many minds. At the close of my sermon, I called on sinners and backsliders to start for the kingdom, when about twenty arose for prayers, all adults, and several who had hitherto stood unmoved through all the religious excitements that had prevailed; and some of them were about fifty years of age. God's truth moves them. The feeling in the congregation was deep. But the signs of a coming rain leads me to fear that the meeting must be suspended in the midst of this interest. Dec. 23d it rained nearly all day, making the roads very muddy, keeping many at home; but we had a fair congregation nevertheless, and eight or ten requested prayers after my sermon.

Dec. 24th (Sunday) I preached two sermons to full congregations, who listened with great candor, including several preachers. Many are shaken in their old theories, and must ultimately renounce them. In the evening several came to the anxious seat for prayers after my sermon. Bro. Davis, Sister Hastings, and others, offered earnest prayer. I am to remain here over Christmas, and then move the meetings to another part of the town. W. S.

[The above was due last week.—ED.]

An opening presents itself for a meeting in Nashville as soon as I can get around to attend to it, but other calls claim attention first. A Methodist brother writes me from Ala., where I recently preached a few sermons: "I have been interrogated quite often in regard to your whereabouts, and if you were not coming back to preach again; every body says, We were just impressed with the conviction that surely this is truth. I saw Bro. M. to-day, and he was very importunate in his appeal; he wants to hear you again. You can judge from what you saw on the last night of your preaching here, the extent of interest. The very worst men in this vicinity were among those that rose for prayers. There is a deep feeling manifested in regard to your coming and preaching two or three weeks."

This brother being postmaster, has a good chance to judge of the state of feeling in the community. But unfortunately their house of worship is too small to convene the people that want to hear, and too cool for winter use, except in a warm spell. Nevertheless, I intend to give them a meeting as soon as I can meet other arrangements.

Next went to Red Clay, Ga., where I had an agreeable interview with the Methodist minister who had heard of my labors in Tenn., and was glad of an opportunity to exchange thoughts. I left several of my works in his possession, extorting from him a promise to read them faithfully. Also left works with some of his members on the same terms.

Next took cars to Cartersville, Ga., a city of about four thousand inhabitants, where I had been invited by a Methodist brother who had been led into some features of our faith by reading, and wished to learn more. Here I have preached several evenings in the Court house; but the rainy weather has been against us. Some of the clergy have been out to each meeting, and I have had the best of attention. The Methodist minister has visited me, and spent a long time in comparing notes on theology. I furnished him reading matter, which he has agreed to read. At the close of my Sunday meeting (Jan. 7th), a Baptist minister came into the desk, and told me that he "was perfectly delighted" with the sermon, and wanted to hear more on the prophecies.

The brother who invited me here, thinks of going out into the field to proclaim these truths, both by scattering reading matter, and by public speaking. He feels greatly strengthened already by my visit, and thinks he must do something to save men before the judgment dawns. For several years he has been coming to the conclusion that Jesus is soon coming. I am to remain here a while longer, and preach the word. W. S.

ABOUNDING SIN AND GRACE.

T. K. ALLEN.

"But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."—ROM. 5:20.

How has sin abounded? Has it not overspread the whole soul? "The whole world lieth in wickedness." "Wisdom that descendeth not from above is earthly, sensual, devilish." "Men love darkness rather than light." "The heart of men is fully set in them to do evil." "Out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornication, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness." Paul says the works of the flesh are "idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, sedition, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, revelings." Titus says—"We ourselves also were sometime foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another." Were not all our passions, propensities, tempers, and affections, inordinate, and evil, and did not pride, anger, self-will, malice, pride, unbelief, reign in us? Were we not shut up in a prison of sin, bound to our lusts and passions, and when the Spirit of God strove with us, did we not resist all his influence, and vexed and urged him to depart, for many long, rebellious years? Well, brethren, we were the servants of sin then, and were free from righteousness; but now, being made free from sin, we become servants to God, and holiness shall overspread our whole soul, so that all our tempers and passions shall be governed and regulated by the Holy Spirit, that dwells in us, casting down imaginations, and every thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ. And we shall have love and joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. We shall therefore be all holy; and as once we resisted the Holy Spirit, so now we shall have power to resist all the wiles and devices of the devil; and temptations and suggestions to evil will be overcome, and find no place in us. Like our divine Master we can say, "The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me."

Beloved brethren, who are "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ," let me exhort you to purify yourselves, "even as he is pure." "Cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." "Reckon yourselves dead indeed to sin, and that moment you will be alive to God. O begin to reckon now. Fear not. Believe, believe, believe, and continue to believe, so shalt thou continue free. For it is retained as it is received, by faith alone; and whoever thou art that perseveringly believest, it will be as a fire in thy bosom, and in spreading the glorious flame of love thou shalt still be saved to the uttermost. O! who will believe the report? You are only in an improper sense called believers, who reject so great salvation. Believe then, believe now, and you shall feel that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all unrighteousness, and as sin abounded, grace shall much more abound. As once you had your conversation in time past in the lust of the flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature the children of wrath even as others; so now no evil thing shall remain.

Do you believe this? Come! Jesus is offered as a whole Savior, a perfect physician. Receive him. Accept him now. Already he has been knocking for admission, until his head is filled with dew, and his locks with the drops of the night.

Winona, Minn.

SHORT REPORT.

H. B. SEVEY.

As items from meetings are intensely interesting to many of the readers of the Crisis, I will briefly report. Our next meeting was held in North Augusta, by request of Bro. Robie, in the Free-will Baptist house. The brethren of that church kindly provided for our wants. They belong to the original Baptists; only a few of that class now remain, who walk the paths their fathers trod. The history of the past shows that as numbers, influence, and wealth increase in the church, true piety suffers. We had very cold weather the day the meeting was appointed; none of our brethren were there; a few met in the evening; prayer was offered by Bro. Turner, the preacher in the place.

Next day a few came; in the evening still more. Some interest among the brethren. There was quite a feeling among some as the brethren hung up the chart. I told Bro. Doughty perhaps it would be best to take it down. He said he should rather be guilty of taking down the flag of the United States, if a soldier, than to take down the Lord's flag. So it remained as a witness that Jesus is soon to come. All the preaching and exhortations were in harmony with the last-day message. Our last meeting was of much interest. One young man arose for prayers. Some were strengthened. Thus our meeting closed. According to outward appearance, but little good seemed to be accomplished. The judgment will reveal all. Seed was sown that will not be lost; it will have its effect. Lord, grant it may find good ground, for Jesus' sake. Brn. N. F. Nason, Doughty, and Rhodes, were present to help preach the word.

Our meeting in Hallowell commenced Dec. 28th, with good interest. Brethren and sisters came from abroad with a will to work for the building up of the church and the salvation of sinners. The meeting continued to increase in interest and numbers. Our hall was not large enough to hold all that came. Wanderers were reclaimed, and sinners convicted. Hallowell is an old place. Many years ago there was a good company of believers brought out and kept together by the labors of Brn. Smith, Wellcome, Howard, and others. Some moved away. Dr. Smith died, and the cause for some years has been very low. They have been much encouraged and strengthened. A new impulse was given to the meeting by Bro. Rhodes' daughter being healed. She had been sick for some months, having fits lasting from three to twelve hours, being partially paralyzed, and deranged at times, employing four or five physicians. None could help her. Some said she could not live. She at last found faith in God's promises,—that the prayer of faith would save the sick. Saturday morning brethren went to Gardiner. Prayer was offered in her behalf, with the laying on of hands. She rode four miles to the meeting, praised God for what he had done for her, and staid all day and evening, and Sunday all day, until twelve o'clock at night; has been well ever since. The Dr. called to see her. She brought along his medicine, telling him she was well. He examined her, said the disease was gone, and to give all the glory to God. Thank God for his love to sick and dying man.

We sat around the table of the Lord Sunday evening, thanking God for the prospect of soon meeting in the kingdom. We watched the old year out in silent prayer, resolving to live nearer to our dear Father by his grace this year than the last. The oldest said it was the best meeting ever held in the place. Preaching brethren, laboring to build up rather than tear down and divide, would find a hearty welcome by the brethren and sisters. Brn. Howard, Rhodes, Rines, Reed, and others, were ready to help in proclaiming the word of life. Praise the Lord for our meeting in Hallowell, and for the blessed Spirit that holds the church in love, leaving hobbies, striving rather to help each other, esteeming others better than themselves. We have reason to praise God for the improvement in this direction in this vicinity. Beloved, let us walk like brethren, for soon the Master will call, and we must give an account of our stewardship. Jesus will soon call. Oh! to have him say, "Well done!" May it be our lot, for Jesus' sake.

HUTCHINS—WEBBER. At West Poland, Me., Jan. 13th, 1872, by Eld. J. Whitman, Mr. CHARLES A. HUTCHINS and Miss EMMA J. WEBBER, both of Oxford.

Obituaries.

CHURCHILL. Died in Lowell, Nov. 21st, 1871, Sister Mary A Churchill, aged sixty-two years.

After three weeks of intense suffering she fell asleep. The dark avenue to the tomb she so much dreaded was lighted by a loving Savior's presence, and with a calm confidence in him she descended the rugged steep with a firm, unfaltering tread. Her pains, her toils, her fears, are ended. The hand which so readily ministered to those she loved, lies folded upon her quiet breast. A large circle of brothers and sisters, nephews, neices, and friends, when they meet will miss her. "There will be one vacant chair"; but ere long, and we trust very soon, the Resurrector will issue the summons, "Ye dead, arise!" and among the mighty throng we confidently expect to see "Sister Mary," "Aunt Mary," not with diseased and imperfect form, but radiant with life, youth, and health, and clothed with immortality. May we who loved her be found in that day with our work done, our garments spotless, and ready to enter upon the rest eternal. M. G. COUCH.

HITCHCOCK. Died in Exeter, Wis., Jan. 9th, 1872, my venerable mother, Malinda Hitchcock, in her eighty-seventh year.

Mother made a profession of religion more than seventy years ago. She was very familiar with the Scriptures, and they were her delight. She embraced the Bible doctrines of the entire mortality of man, his unconsciousness in death, and the destruction of the finally impenitent, during the early history of the Christian connection, under the labors of E. Smith, C. W. Martin, John L. Peavey, and others of that denomination who then held and preached these sentiments. When the subject of the soon coming of the Lord was agitated, she fully embraced it as truth. These sentiments she held firmly until she died.

A discourse was preached by Eld. Adrian from her chosen text (1 Cor. 15: 49) at the Free Baptist meeting-house in Monticello, before a respectable circle of friends and relatives.

N. A. HITCHCOCK.

BERRY. At Grand Lodge, Mich., Dec. 25th, 1871, Gardner Berry, aged seventy years.

Mr. Berry had been a resident of Shelby, N. Y., for nearly half a century. Few men in the town were better or more favorably known. An obliging neighbor, a generous patron of the poor, a public spirited citizen, a reliable friend, and withal a most modest man, he was ever ready to show his faith by his works. He has long entertained a christian's hope, and a little more than two years ago he made a public profession of his faith and was baptized. The funeral services were held at East Shelby, N. Y., Dec 28th, and were very largely attended. The passages which he had selected to be read at the funeral were Psalms 37, and 41: 1–4. J. H. WHITMORE.

DEYO. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Rockford, Ill., Dec. 28th, 1871, of paralysis, Mary, wife of Eld. S. D. Deyo, and mother of the writer, aged sixty-three years, three months, and twelve days.

To my mother I owe much of my character and life. From her I received my first impressions for good. In answer to her prayer, I have tried to preach the gospel of the kingdom. She embraced Christianity in her youth among the Christians, and ever lived a life worthy of example. She embraced the blessed hope of Christ's coming when first proclaimed, near Rochester, N. Y., and hoped to remain till Jesus came; but she said it would not be long before she would wake up again. Prayer by Bro. H. F. DeWolf, of Rochelle, Ill. PETER S. W. DEYO.

ROBERTS. At his residence, near East Henrietta, N. Y., Jan. 10th (from injuries received on Christmas day), Hon. Martin Roberts, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

Mr. Roberts bequeathed an untarnished name—a legacy more valuable than silver or gold. His acquaintances recognize in him Pope's portraiture:—

"An honest man's the noblest work of God."

The funeral took place from his late residence, Jan. 13th, and was very largely attended. Sermon by the writer on Ps. 90: 12, in connection with Heb. 9: 27. J. H. WHITMORE.

FISKE. Died in Epsom, N. H., Dec. 4th, 1871, of consumption, Sister Mary Jane, wife of Bro. James Fiske, in her thirty-third year.

She fell asleep in Jesus, with a bright hope of soon awaking in his likeness, and meeting her husband and two children. JOHN PARSONS.

BROWN. Died in Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 19th, 1871, Hattie, wife of Samuel N. Brown, aged twenty-three years.

She leaves an affectionate husband and infant son, and many friends, to mourn her loss, but they sorrow not as those that have no hope.

S. M. BROWN.

WEET. Died in Alton, N. Y., Dec. 4th, of paralysis, Mary, wife of Thomas Weet, aged forty-seven years.

She was a great sufferer for one week, when she fell asleep in Jesus. She leaves a loved daughter and husband to mourn her loss. The funeral was attended by the writer.

M. R. MILES.

Sermon by the writer from Jer. 31: 15, 16.

M. R. MILES.

ADDISON. Died in Lakeville, Conn., Jan. 12th, 1872, of consumption, Spencer Addison, in the seventy-first year of his age.

Bro. Addison died in hope of soon living again, and being caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Funeral services by the writer. Text, Job 14: 14. W. H. WILD.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. E. MORRILL writes:—"I am still in the field, trying to do what I can for Jesus, who has done so much for me. The Lord has been and is blessing me. I feel daily my acceptance, and can say, Jesus saves; he saves me now. While I feel this joy and peace, which comes from entire consecration, I still feel burdened for those unsaved. I am trying to reach the lost and bring them to Christ. To brethren in places where I have promised to come and have meetings, I would say that I have not forgotten my promises, but will fulfill them as soon as I can. I have been at Suncook, N. H., a number of weeks, and the Lord has been blessing, and every week for a number of weeks some new ones have sought and found the Lord, and wanderers have been reclaimed. Last Sunday (Jan. 14) we led ten down the liquid stream, and they were buried with Christ in baptism. Among them were three who have been Roman Catholics, but are now rejoicing in the 'blessed hope.' Jan. 28th, we expect to baptize a number more, two of whom are from Catholicism. The work goes on. Others have started since Sunday. To God be the praise and glory now and forever."

BRO. S. W. MORRILL writes:—"The Lord is still working in Suncook. Four have come out from the Catholic church and been baptized, with six more, making ten in all. The work is still going on. Thank the Lord forever. A number have been reclaimed from a backslidden state. I am one of the number. Brn., pray for us."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

PARIS, Jan. 17. A number of ex-officers of the army, at the invitation of the Japanese Government, are about to proceed to Japan to instruct the native army in military tactics.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 17. The first Turco-European train over the railroad skirting the Sea of Marmora, entered Stamboul yesterday, crossing the old Seraglio grounds.

LONDON, Jan. 17. The Eastern Budget says that Baron von Offenberg, the present Political Agent and Consul General of Bucharest, will be the successor of Catacazy, as Russian minister at Washington.

MADRID, Jan. 18. The Minister has sent a circular to the Governors of the Provinces instructing them to suppress all organizations belonging to or in any way connected with the International Society within their jurisdictions.

While thus breaking up a system dangerous to the civil peace, they were directed not to interfere with the liberty of speech and to take no notice of the simple enunciation of the principles of the International Society, as the laws of Spain provide no punishment for such utterances.

LONDON, Jan. 17. Paris advices state that a proposition for the total suppression of the International Society in France, is before the Assembly.

BOMBAY, Jan. 18. A dangerous revolt among the Hookahs of India has been suppressed. At the first signs of trouble troops were dispatched from Delhi and marched direct to the head quarters of the rebels whom they met in large force, but completely defeated them, killing one hundred and taking several hundred prisoners.

VIENNA, Jan. 18. Count Andrassy received a deputation of Catholics to-day, and in reply to their address declared that the Pope was under no constraint, as was shown by the recent appointment by him of some thirty bishops. The relations between Austria and Italy are on a good footing. He knew of no Catholic power which could be justified in offering the Pope an asylum.

MILITARY AND NAVAL PREPARATIONS AT MARSEILLES.

PARIS, Jan 20. A considerable force of troops has recently concentrated in and around Marseilles, and there is an unusual number of men-of-war in the harbor. These circumstances having caused some uneasiness, a deputation of citizens waited on the Prefect of the Departmment to ascertain the cause. The reply of the Prefect was to the effect that in view of the recent disorders the Government deemed it prudent to take proper precautions against their renewal.

THIERS DISCOURAGED.

President Thiers yesterday, in reply to the deputation of the Assembly who called to notify him of the refusal to accept his resignation, said that he was worn out and discouraged. He could not change has opinions, and he believed that conflicts similar to the present one were likely to occur between the Legislative and Executive Department when the Military and Educational bills came before the Assembly. Thiers further said that while for the present he consented to withdraw his resignation, the end was inevitable, and sooner or later he would be compelled to retire from the Presidency of the Republic.

THE ARMY.

Gen. McMahon also called upon Thiers yesterday, and appealed to him, on behalf the army to withdraw his resignation. The Marshal said that the army would obey the orders of the Assembly, but would not be controlled by a Dictatorship, which was likely to follow the unconstitutional retirement of the President.

LONDON, Jan. 6. The ex-Emperor Napoleon, on New Year's day, is reported to have said: "I will give Thiers six months of Presidency of the Republic, and at the end of that time Gambetta will be in his place and the change be favorable to the Imperial cause."

MADRID, Jan. 22. A recent circular issued to the Governors of Provinces, instructing them to suppress meetings and break up organizations of the International Society, has evoked remonstrances from members in all parts of Spain. The Government is daily receiving petitions and protests, and the Internationals of Madrid have made an earnest appeal for the revocation of these instructions.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Jan. 21. The World's London letter contains a detailed plan of Scott Russell for his next step in the social movement, under which he hopes to obtain by parliamentary legislation for every workingman's family a house for $40 per annum, and food at wholesale rates. The eight hours' work and technical education bills will be ready for presentation to Parliament early in February.

Jan. 22. Dr. J. D. Bradley delivered a sermon yesterday in the Forty-third Street church (Episcopal), announcing his secession and his adoption of the Catholic religion. He was educated at Oxford University, England.

PUTTING THE FORTS IN ORDER.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Jan. 22. The News announces that the work of putting Forts Sumter and Moultrie in a defensible condition will begin immediately. Contractors commenced mounting forty heavy guns to-day. Fort Pulaski between Savannah will also be strengthened with extensive earthworks and guns of greater calibre. Capt. Renshaw who has been here on leave has been ordered at once to the command of the steamer Woosack of the South Atlantic squadron. The News attributes the movements to apprehensions of trouble with Spain.

THE JUBILEE OF 1872.—The building in which the Jubilee will be held will be the largest in the world, and will be composed of wood and iron, on an unique and beautiful plan, furnished by Major Francis Allen, a skilful architect, of Boston, who prepared the design for Gilmore's last Coliseum. The Boston Commercial Bulletin lately gave some statistics of the coming Coliseum, from which we take the following comparisons:—

	Feet.
Coliseum of 1872	822½.
St. Peter's, Rome	613½.
Coliseum, Rome	584.
St. Paul's, London	520.
Coliseum of 1869	500.
Milan Cathedral	443.
St. Paul's, Rome	419.
St. Sophia, Constantinople	360.

The Flavian Amphitheatre in Rome, christened, in later times, because of its stupendous proportions, the "Coliseum," or "Colosseum," is in the form of an ellipse, whose major and minor axes are respectively 584 and 468 feet, and has an area, including the massive walls, of five acres nearly. As we have seen, the proposed building will cover eight acres of ground, thus greatly exceeding in size a structure which, from its mammoth extent, has for eighteen centuries been ranked among the wonders of the world.—Boston Pilot.

In Brief.

—— Miss Susan Dimmock, a young lady from Boston, has just completed a course of medicine at the University of Zurich, in Switzerland, with a thesis in German, and a discussion with the students and professors, in which she acquitted herself to the admiration of the faculty.——The supply of india-rubber to the world is considered inexhaustible. Trees endure tapping for twenty years, and grow in dense groves which show no signs whatever of being thinned out by what has been done to them hitherto.——For the first time on this continent the anniversary of the birth of August Comte, the founder of the positive school of philosophy and religion, was celebrated in New York on Saturday evening.——Two hundred thousand dollars worth of arms and ammunition were shipped from New York to Turkey December 15th.——A dispatch from St. Petersburg announces the issue of an Imperial decree subjecting all the male citizens of Russia to military service.

Notices.

A SPECIAL CONFERENCE will be held in the Second Advent Chapel on Central St., Worcester, Mass., to commence on Tuesday, Feb. 6th, at two o'clock P. M., and to continue every day and evening through the week and over the following Sunday. The special object of this conference will be to examine the evidences relating to the time of the Lord's coming; to get more fully prepared for that event, and to lead sinners to Christ before he comes to close up the scenes of probation. A cordial invitation is extended to all, and especially to all the preaching brethren.

"The more that come with free good will,
Will make the banquet sweeter still."

By unanimous vote of the church.

DR. H. W. BUXTON, W. F. COLLIER, E. G. HIGGINS, } Committee.

☞ NOTICE is hereby given that the Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee have made arrangements with J. D. Swain to build tents for all who wish to hire them built the coming year. We recommend him as a good practical carpenter, who can be trusted with the business. All who wish his services, correspond with him immediately, as he can procure lumber at this season to better advantage. Address J. D. Swain, Portsmouth, N. H., Box 1445. J. COUCH.

THE SECOND quarterly meeting of the western district of Wisconsin will be held with the church in the town of Brunswick, Eau Claire Co., commencing Feb. 1st, 1872, and hold over Lord's day. Let us have a grand rally of warm hearts and sweet words for each other, and noble testimonies for Jesus. Come the first day.

P. W. HOUGH.

HAVING completed my engagements with three churches, I am now at liberty to fill new calls more extensively, and devote my time to the work of an Evangelist and Missionary. As there are no means raised for that purpose, I hope those who wish my labors will write to me the prospects for good, and the interest to sustain, that I may arrange to save time and expense. Do not delay to write. Address Peter S. W. Deyo, Charles City, Iowa.

A PROTRACTED meeting in So. Rochester, N. H. (at the chapel) will commence Feb. 13th, at seven o'clock P. M. A general invitation is given to all to come and labor for sinners. Bro. Wells and others will be present to preach the word.

J. L. CHUTE.

THE CHURCH in Clinton, Mass., is supplied with preaching the second Sunday of each month, for the present.

☞ Preaching brethren going to Great Falls, N. H., will please call on Bro. Joseph K. Nash, No. 48 Maine Street.

☞ With many thanks I acknowledge the following gifts from the kind brothers and sisters:—"Steward," $5; Sr. Carpenter, $5; T. W. Brooks, $2; R. A. Staples, $1; N. R. Hayes, $1; Auburn, N. Y., $1; "N." 25c.; Isaac Small, 50c.

CONFIDENCE IN CHRIST.

I bless the Christ of God,
I rest on love divine,
And with unfaltering lip and heart
I call this Savior mine.

His cross dispels each doubt;
I bury in his tomb
Each thought of unbelief and fear,
Each lingering shade of gloom.

I praise the God of grace,
I trust his truth and might;
He calls me his, I call him mine,
My guide, my joy, my light!

In him is only good,
In me is only ill;
My ill but draws his goodness forth,
And me he loveth still.

'Tis he who saveth me,
And freely pardon gives;
I love because he loveth me,
I live because he lives.

My life with him is hid,
My death has passed away,
My clouds have melted into light,
My midnight into day.

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 3.

E. S. WILLARD.

An Incident—Marriage—Husband's Conversion—An Epoch—Instrumentality—The Pastor's Grief—Joy in Liberty of Conscience—God and his Word Supreme—Brotherly Love Abides.

The winter following the one in which I found Jesus precious to my soul, my beloved mother was visited with an alarming sickness. Her sufferings were intense and protracted, and finally her life was despaired of by her attending physicians, and everything in the house wore the aspect of gloom and despair. To me it seemed that all I prized of earth was in jeopardy, and how to live without my mother I knew not; therefore, it seemed to me that she could not die now. When earthly refuge failed me, and my own prayers seemed too weak, I was emboldened, for the first time, to ask my dear and only sister, two years my senior, and who also was in Christ before me, to go away with me and pray. She readily assented, and we chose the most retired room, and there poured out our souls to God that our mother might live.

That evening when the bell announced supper it was my happiness to be left alone with my precious mother. I dared not speak a word to her, but was led again to kneel and speak to Jesus about her, and he then and there gave me the clearest assurance that she would recover; every cloud was gone, as if my mother were already well. In a few moments a middle-aged lady, who loved mother most tenderly, entered the room and passed on the opposite side of the bed from me, and leaned over mother as if to determine whether she still breathed. At this moment I ventured with smiling face to say to her—I believe mother will get well! She turned her tearful eyes upon me, and with her hand stroked my face, saying, "You dear girl! you want your mother to get well, don't you?"

But her despondency and that of all about me did not take away my peace. It was abiding. I felt that my treasure was yet to be spared me. In the turn of that night mother aroused and asked for food, and from that hour began to amend.

In the summer following I gave my hand in marriage to Rowland Willard, M. D. Dr. Wilson, now my beloved pastor, solemnized the occasion. Although not at this time a christian, my husband nobly secured a pew, procured books, and with me regularly attended church. From too close application to business, his health the ensuing year gave alarming symptoms of impair, which, under God, caused him seriously to consider his future well being. At this time there was great religious interest in Cincinnati, especially in the Presbyterian churches, of which there were six. A. Mahan, who afterward became President of Oberlin College, and distinguished himself in his writings upon "Christian Perfection," was at this time pastor of the Sixth Church, and an earnest laborer for souls. Among other means of grace, he held morning prayer meetings, which we attended with great delight. We also set up an altar for God, the God of Israel, in our own house, and made the wise decision of Joshua—"As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Thus was my husband led gently along until he found himself enclosed in God's net, and he yielded himself his joyful "prisoner."

About this time it pleased God to let the light of his word shine into our minds on the subject of christion baptism, which opened upon us a new era in christian experience, and changed our whole course, and proved truly an epoch in our lives.

It may be asked, By whose instrumentality was this great change wrought? We are most happy to state, and in so doing obey the Scripture injunction—"Render thereunto all their dues; . . . honor to whom honor," that it pleased God to use Elder J. B. Cook, then pastor of the First Baptist church in Cincinnati, but now a gospel laborer in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, and resident with his family in the latter place. And here we see how the Lord led the blind by a way they knew not.

During a little season of ill health to myself, husband frequently attended the First Baptist church, as it was so near to our residence, and became greatly interested in its pastor, as he was so courteous to strangers—making it a christian duty to seek them out and bid them welcome; and also enjoined the same upon his church, which they scrupulously followed. On one occasion, as we were preparing for church, husband invited me to accompany him to hear Elder Cook. I assented, though in heart much preferred my own pew and pastor. After sermon, Eld. C. came down and began his friendly greetings; and made his way toward us, greeting husband most cordially, after which he introduced me, and we had a pleasant interview, being at the same time made acquainted with the venerable Deacon Johnson and his fellow deacon, Lewis, and a number of the sisters, who seemed to possess the same spirit as their pastor,—all love, and interest to win souls. This scene was so novel to me, that it put me quite in a maze; for with us scarce a smile of recognition was indulged, but we all departed from the house of worship as staid and grave as we entered it.

From this time Eld. Cook visited us and labored most faithfully in counsels, prayers, and the presentation of reading matter, until we were thus cited along in the narrow way. The burden of this responsibility rested upon me, for my husband's educational views gave him a predilection for immersion; yet he left the matter entirely with me, saying if I could not see clearly to go with him, he would go with me. Was n't he good? Under these circumstances I visited my pastor and candidly stated to him my dilemma. He appeared grieved that my mind was troubled on that point; said he had a copy of a sermon he had preached on the subject of baptism, and if that failed to convince me, he could say nothing more. He also marked some places in a large work which he handed me. I took them home to examine at my leisure.

For the first time in my life, it may be, I now felt called upon to act alone for God. I felt that ignorance now could be no palliation. The means of knowing were before me, and I must know or be guilty. God's word is a revelation of his will, and if so, I could know his will, for I possessed it in my own language. I solemnly committed myself to God, then took up the "Sermon" and read it through. Its main position, as I now remember, was that baptism occupies the place in the Christian church that circumcision occupied under the law, and therefore children are its proper subjects. Here was the point to be settled for me; was the sprinkling to which I had been subjected when about twelve years old, at the time my parents united with the Methodist Episcopal church, the baptism of the Bible, or was it not? If it was, I had been baptized; if not, I ought to be!

Had this able argument met my eye but a few weeks before, it might have settled me in my present church relations; but now, able as it truly was, it only darkened counsel by a multitude of words, as its premises to my mind were subversive of Scripture. It contrasted so unfavorably with the "Scripture Guide to Baptism," which I had just read, examining every place in the New Testament where the subject is alluded to, showing conclusively that immersion is the mode; and, further, that the households mentioned as having been baptized were all believers, and that it is an ordinance which pertains exclusively to believers, that I had no difficulty in determining, to my satisfaction, where the truth lay.

I now read the places cited in the large book. These dwelt upon the impropriety of women submitting to immersion. But this had no weight with a mind intent upon knowing the voice of God.

In a few days I returned the books and had another interview with my venerable pastor. I told him it was plain to my mind that Jesus was immersed, and that the apostles baptized in that manner; also that the figures used in the Epistles showed the manner to be immersion. He gave no argument, but simply alluded to his words when I took the books: "If they do not convince you, I can say nothing more." "But," he added, "Elizabeth, you must know that I feel very badly to have you renounce what I consider to be the only Scripture baptism, and submit to an ordinance of man!"

In this my beloved pastor was consistent with his published views, for he concluded his discourse with these words—"One baptism, and that is sprinkling." My heart was pained for him, but for myself and the subject in contemplation, it was light. I returned home happy in the privilege of liberty of conscience.

But for this timely aid, reminding one of the visits of "Evangelist" to "Christian," husband would doubtless also have entered the Presbyterian church; but now we were baptized by Elder Cook in the Ohio river, and received the right hand of christian fellowship in their communion. Had I now left the "little flock" to which I had previously united? God forbid! That little flock is God's dear saints wherever found. Did I cast off this people with whom I had prayed and taken sweet counsel and walked to the house of God in company? Be it far from me. I loved them still as God's dear saints, but my mind had received light on a point of doctrine, and now, in order to continue my own fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ, I must acquit myself before God irrespective of church relation, however dear. I had first given myself to the Lord, and then, according to the light I had, to his people. My God held the first right in me, and all other surrenders must be in subordination to his will, even that of marriage. My union to Christ had the priority to my union with my husband; and although "only in the Lord" was the rule for me as a christian, yet this, like baptism, was hid from my eyes through ignorance, and therefore was overruled to my good. "It is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." With the security which these brethren felt on the subject of baptism I had nothing to do; my business was with my God and his word, whereof it is gravely affirmed—"The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12:48. It was not meet that I remain and make contention among them, but quietly proceed on my journey, leaving them to worship after the dictates of their own consciences, securing to myself the same boon.

It is not this church relation, or that, that is the ship that secures safety; but rather the following on to know the Lord. It is the continuing in God's word. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." Obedience to present truth crucifies, and crucifixion must accompany sanctification. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." When truth is seen, it must be obeyed, or it brings condemnation; and "if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart and knoweth all things." But "if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God, and whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." John 3:20–22.

THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR.

C. H. LEVERTON.

We frequently hear it said that the war between the Romans and Jews, which resulted in the destruction of Jerusalem, lasted seven years. Being accustomed to hear it stated thus, I had never investigated the point, but had taken it for granted that the statement was correct. But a few weeks ago, while conversing with Eld. J. S. W., I was asked if I could tell him where the statement was recorded. I replied that I supposed Josephus gave it thus. He answered that he could not find it there. I then concluded to examine Josephus on the point for myself, and now give the result.

I find no direct statement in Josephus' History concerning the length of the war; but there are certain facts given, from which we may reckon its duration; and I have ascertained that the war did not continue more than three years and a half.

Proof: first process. The war began in the twelfth year of Nero (Jos. Ant. B. 20, ch. 11, sec. 1); and Nero reigned thirteen years and eight days. Wars, B. 4, ch. 9, sec. 2. The combined reign of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, continued only about one year. Vespasian succeeded Vitellius, and in the second year of Vespasian (not the fourth, as stated by a correspondent recently) Jerusalem was taken. Now if we allow that the war commenced in the beginning of Nero's twelfth year, and did not end till the close of Vespasian's second year, we cannot make it more than five years; but from the following processes it will appear conclusive that the war began in the latter part of Nero's twelfth year, and closed in the beginning of Vespasian's second year, making about three years and a half.

Second process. Cestius Gallus began the campaign against the Jews, but continued it but a few months, when he left Jerusalem, and Vespasian then took command. We may allow nine or ten months for this period, it could not have been more than that. It is stated in the heading of Book 3, that from the time Vespasian took command to the taking of Gamala, occupied about one year. And from this to the coming of Titus was about one year. B. 4. From that point to the end of the war six or seven months elapsed. B. 5 and 6. From this it appears that the war occupied no more than three years and a half.

Third process. In B. 6, ch. 6, sec. 3, Josephus tells us that Jesus, son of Ananias, began to predict the destruction of the city four years before the war began, and continued his cry daily for seven years and five months, and he died less than a month before the city was subdued. Here we have decisive evidence in favor of our position.

In Dan. 9:27 it is said—"In the midst of the week [or, as some render it, in half a week] he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." And Josephus informs us that less than a month before the end of the war the sacrifice had failed for want of men to offer it. This is still another proof that the war lasted only about three years and a half.

NOW.

PHEBE A. GIFFORD.

What a volume of interest and importance does this little word of three letters unfold. It involves more than we are wont to think. It has once been possessor of all the hidden future. Happy is the person who fully estimates its value. With however much regret a retrospective view is taken, it can avail nothing, for the past is beyond recall. Once in our power, but now forever fled. Not so with the golden present, though it tarries but a moment, it is long enough to bear away an impress of willing obedience to that Being whose life, from everlasting to everlastingf defines eternity, and to whom one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. Not so with the finite race of man; if it were, neglect of the present moment might seem more excusable. But his life, the repetition of a day is, on the contrary, brief at best.

We are but weak, and our beneficent Creator did not impose upon us the responsibility of a whole life at once; but rather a moment at a time to improve in well doing, to spend to his glory in the faithful discharge of present duty. Regret or gladness will be ours, according as we spend it well or ill.

It is also a mould of the future. Being creatures of habit, we should beware of the first wrong step. Our habits, which strengthen with every repetition, are formed by beginning and continuing a practice. We should take heed lest we now begin or continue a practice, against which the immaculate Author of our being had a controversy, the result of which is eternal death. "The memory of the just is blessed," and blessed indeed must be the memory of a well-spent life. On the other hand, a life retrospect which awakens only bitter, unavailing lamentation, must be terrible indeed. Now is our precious opportunity to avert this dire calamity. Now is the chosen time of God, who gave it. "Behold now is the accepted time, behold now is the day of salvation."

Are we willing the future should bear the record of sin and sorrow, or do we desire for it this testimony, that it pleases God? What is our remedy? "Cease to do evil" now. Obey now. Take right care of the present, and the future will take care of itself. We are assured of God's forgiveness for our past wrong doing if we comply with his conditions, which are repentance, and faith in our Savior, who was sacrificed for us, and yielding to obey his requirements in the future.

The beginning of a new year is a favorite time for the formation of new resolutions, which are much easier to plan than to execute. But while we may not grasp the whole year, and fill up its now blank pages with a history of correct practice at once, knowing this may only be done by occupying a moment at a time in well doing; remembering that the year is but the aggregate of moments; and the complete history of the year must consist of its accumulated momentary history, which will not be complete until all its moments have passed,—we may the better realize the importance of our appreciating and rightly improving the present while it is within our grasp, knowing it is out of our power to retain it. Although the past may present occasion for regret, yet let it not be true in future that any of our "days are lost lamenting o'er lost days," but seize the present, and improve it wisely, thankful that we yet have time for amendment. Concentrate your energies upon the duty of the present if you would succeed. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest." Well doing is not only succeeded by reward when the Master at his coming shall say "Well done, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," but it is also accompanied by it. Another has written that well spent days bring happy nights and glad morrows. From the pious Philip Doddridge we have the following—

"Live while you live, the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies.
Lord, in my views let both united be;
I live in pleasure when I live to thee."

We have also Scripture testimony that "light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart." "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Delay no longer, but "remember now thy Creator," and "to-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

We are also urged to present right doing from the fact that our life, with all its opportunities for amendment and the discharge of duty, may soon be closed. The thought is but a delusive one of which the poet has written—

"All men think all men mortal but themselves."

Nought but the coming of Jesus can discharge any from incurring the death penalty. Sooner than we think may it chill our pulses and cause our probation to terminate. Accept practically the terms of salvation now, even the repentance and faith required, and "by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor and immortality, eternal life."

LINES.

"What think ye of Christ?" is the test,
To try both your state and your scheme;
You cannot be right in the rest,
Unless you think rightly of him;
As Jesus appears in your view,
As he is beloved or not;
So God is disposed to you,
And mercy or wrath is your lot.

Some call him a Savior in word,
But mix their own work with the plan;
And hope he his help will afford,
When they have done all that they can.
If doings prove rather too light,
A little they own they may fall,
They purpose to make up full weight
By casting his name in the scale.

Some take him a creature to be—
A man, or an angel at most;
Sure these have no feelings like me,
Nor know themselves wretched and lost.
So guilty, so helpless am I,
I could not confide in his word
Unless I could make the reply,
That Christ is "my Lord and my God."

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES AT THE SKATING RINK, SAN FRANCISCO.

Sermon by Dr. Stone, on the Natural Immortality of Man, and the Doom of the Impenitent.

[Reported by "C." for the Crisis.]

Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, there was an audience of five or six hundred persons gathered at the Pavillion Rink, on Stockton street, Sunday evening, Dec. 31st, 1871. The announced topic for the occasion was one calculated to elicit considerable interest, inasmuch as it had been frequently discussed of late in public in several of the churches of this city.

The Rev. Doctor took for his text 2 Thess. 1:9—"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."

As a sort of preliminary or prefatory section, the Rev. Doctor spoke briefly of the two principal definitions of the Greek and the Hebrew words which signify "soul"—nephesh and psuche. He said that the radical root idea in the two words was animate life. He said that they sometimes meant what we in common parlance call mind. Usually they signify the immaterial man, which is behind and which is the animating principle of the physical man.

The Doctor said that there had been so much discussion and cross discussion of the matters involved under the title of the evening's discourse, that it would be impossible to give anything like a thoroughly comprehensive review of the whole subject in an hour's discourse. In that space of time he would do what he could to enlighten the inquirer who doubted the natural immortality of man. He presumed that the author of the letter which called for this sermon agreed that man was by nature capable of immortality, and that the only question was with respect to the immortality or the annihilation of the bad. He also would presume that the person who wrote him conceded that there was a conscious intermediate state between death and the day of judgment.

The Doctor remarked that with respect to all materials things there was not only an infancy and a spring-time, but also a maturity and a harvest. What would we say of a tree that put forth leaves and blossom, but bore no fruit? Would we not hold that that tree had not fulfilled its mission? In the natural order of material progress and development there is a fruition in this world. The promise of the spring-time is fulfilled in the autumn. There is a rounded completeness in the material things of nature. Is this admitted to be a law of growth and perfection—that perfection shall be attained? that fruition shall be consummated? Then that is true of material things, which, according to the annihilationist, is denied to things spiritual; for here on earth the soul has only an infancy and spring-time. It can hardly be said to bring forth flowers of early summer. If it does not live beyond the grave and the judgment, then it is never brought to a state of fruition. Against this idea reason, following the observations which we make in the material world, revolts.

If one limb is cut off from a man—one after the other—the soul still may survive in the man, unimpaired in the exercise of all its faculties. Why then can we say that it does not and will not continue to live after the whole body has followed its members to the grave?

The Doctor said that it was asserted by some that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul was derived from human philosophy. And furthermore, it was asserted that the great masters of heathen philosophy did not really believe the doctrine, but promulgated or maintained it as a matter of policy. It was true that this doctrine had, in greater or less degree, obtained credence among the heathen. Some faint glimmering of the light of this truth reached their darkened minds. It certainly did not impeach the truth to say, that what the Bible revealed had been in some degree apprehended or suspected as truth by the most benighted nations of the world.

The Doctor remarked that it was contended by the annihilationists that the words employed in Scripture to signify or indicate the nature of the doom of the impenitent, necessarily involved the idea of an absolute cessation of all life. The words "dead," "death," "destroy," "perdition," were referred to by those who denied the immortality of the impenitent, as in themselves certifying that the judgment against the bad would be that of annihilation. He said that he would admit that if these words or some of them, were to be taken in their literal sense, the doom of extinction of all being would be established. But comparatively few words, if any, were now used in their just sense. The tropical definition of a word is the one that is most frequently to be applied or accepted. It is true that words commence as the simplest names for material objects. But they soon rise above this level, and are shaped by custom to signify other things—always having a manifest relation to their origin, but now embodying, or intimating, or expressing something else; it may be something more or something less. So with respect to the words quoted. Men were spoken of as dead in trespasses and sins. We say of a man who is sentenced to imprisonment for life that he is a dead man. That is, he is dead to all civil life; he is dead to the enjoyment of all the liberties and privileges from which he is debarred. But he still lives. We say of the incorrigible drunkard, that he has destroyed himself; that he is a ruined man; that he is a wreck. And yet he still lives. He is not wrecked like a stranded and broken-up ship. He is not ruined like a castle whose walls have been thrown down. He still lives. All through our life we legitimately use language in this way; the second meaning is the most legitimate, in the sense of being the ordinary and customary definition. And there are illustrations of this in Scripture. There is the lost sheep and the lost piece of money—both recovered. And yet there is the same word used to signify their destruction. So of the lost prodigal son, who was also dead and yet was alive—he was restored to his father's house.

The eternal life or the life beyond the grave, the Doctor contended, was manifestly something superadded to the personal life. For it was said in Scripture, in various forms, that he that hath the Son hath life—hath it now on this earth. And this is eternal life—to know the Father as God, and to know Jesus Christ as his Son.

In regard to the doom of the impenitent, there are plain, explicit illustrations. There is the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched. And there is the smoke of their torment ascending forever and ever in the sight of God and his holy angels.

It was contended by some that sin wore out the faculty of the soul, so to speak. It did not appear to be so. The wicked often flourish in the world, like a green bay tree. It appears to be the law of our physical and mental nature and of our emotional nature that exercise strengthens. And mere exercise, within the boundaries of reason, does not appear to injure or enervate.

The Doctor drew attention to the fact of Revelation—admitted to be the fact by the annihilationists—that the great apostate angel and his company had been sinning in war against God for thousands of years, and yet neither the devil nor his angels, so far as we can judge, exhibit any signs of weakness. Indeed, the Doctor said, we are assured and we have every reason to believe that, in the last days of time, centuries to come, the devil and his angels will exhibit more tremendous energy and power than ever before.

The Doctor contended that the Bible definition or declaration concerning the doom of the impenitent signifies that they were to be forever destroyed or debarred from the presence of God and his holy angels and the redeemed saints. He would not undertake to say that in the long procession of ages it might not be a necessary part of the dissuasive policy of God to restrain from iniquity, that the remorse and anguish of the impenitent should be continued, and should be known to beings uncontaminated or redeemed.

With respect to the condition of those upon whom the final judgment of condemnation was passed, the Doctor noticed that there was a principle of life always involved. It was not a silent, pulseless, motionless condition. There was weeping in that darkness, that outer darkness. There was wailing; there was gnashing of teeth. It might be that one reason why God would preserve the souls of the impenitent in their hell of remorse was that they might be awful and availing dissuasives against apostasy and sin.

OVER AND OVER AGAIN.

Over and over again,
No matter which way I turn,
I always find in the Book of Life
Some lesson I must learn.
I must take my turn at the mill,
I must grind out the golden grain;
I must work with a resolute will
Over and over again.

We cannot measure the need
Of even the tiniest flower,
Nor check the flow of the golden sand
That runs through a single hour.
But the morning dews must fall,
And the sun and the summer rain
Must do their part, and perform it all
Over and over again.

Over and over again
The brook through the meadow flows,
And over and over again
The ponderous mill-wheel goes;
Once doing will not suffice,
Though doing be not in vain;
And a blessing failing us once or twice,
May come if we try again.

The path that has once been trod,
Is never so rough to the feet;
And the lesson we once have learned,
Is never so hard to repeat.
Though sorrowful tears may fall,
And the heart to its depths be driven
With storm and tempest, we need them all
To render us meet for heaven.

"ALL."

J. H. CLARK.

Webster says this word "All" means "every one, or the whole number of particulars. The whole quantity, extent, duration, amount, quality, or degree. The aggregate amount."

Question. Does all under all circumstances, and in all places, really include all according to the above definition? Most certainly. One brother says this proves that Jesus possesses unlimited power both in heaven and in earth; for "all power is given unto me both in heaven and in earth"; and all does not spell part. If all in one place includes the whole, why not in every other place? Said the great Teacher—"For the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." Here we have the two classes of mankind; the good and the evil, which we believe include all mankind. So that all those who have gone down to the grave, will hear the voice of the Son of God at the resurrection, at the last day, and they all will come forth. Just as well charge Jesus with uttering a falsehood as to say only a part of the dead will be raised to life again.

At the last supper Jesus said—"Drink ye all of it." Did he mean all in this case? It reads—"All have sinned"; does it mean a part of mankind, or all of them? When we understand the full meaning of "all," we have no trouble in understanding that all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God at the last day, and shall come forth; the one class to the resurrection of life, and the other class to the resurrection of damnation.

I understand the crowning truths of this day are, the signs of the times, the fulfillment of prophecy, the soon coming of Jesus to judgment, and a heart prepared to meet the Lord. Theories alone will not save us. We need more love, to be more like Jesus.

More like Jesus day by day,
More like Jesus when we pray;
More like Jesus as we go
Pilgrim through this world of woe.

False doctrines abound, bringing death to the church. There is need of more pure and undefiled religion in the heart. Watch and pray always, lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him."

ATONED FOR.

"If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."—1 JOHN 2:1.

"I write unto you," says John, "that ye sin not." Such was his aim in writing this epistle, and such was his aim in writing the words of our text. Any man that uses it merely as an opiate to his conscience, to procure him peace in sinning, diverts it from its legitimate use.

But when a christian has been overtaken in a fault, what shall he do? Let him remember that for him, the unrighteous one, there is an advocate, Jesus Christ, the righteous. Fear not the javelin of divine wrath. It must come through Christ, before it can reach you. Nay, it has already reached him. The marks of the wounds appear in his glorified body. Your sin, mounting up to the throne of God, does not get there before Christ, your advocate. It is a great thing when an advocate can get up in court and say: "The trespass of my client has been already atoned for: the full penalty has been inflicted and nothing now can be imputed to him. Christ's advocacy not only obtains forus justification, but also the Spirit of God, who, with the blood of Christ, cleanseth us from all sin.

We are richer in heaven than we are on earth. We have Christ the righteous, our advocate—mine—yours—in heaven; on the earth we have nothing we can justly call our own. We are here in a wayfaring place; what we see is but the furniture of an inn; it does not belong to us, save for a momentary use. But we have unsearchable riches in the country to which we go. When any one says, "What have you?" may you be able to answer, "I have an advocate with the Father—the richest of friends in the most important of all places."—Bowen's Daily Meditations.

Gems.

— We suffer more from anger and grief, than from the very things for which we anger and grieve.

— We should act with as much energy as if we expected everything for ourselves; and we should pray with as much earnestness as if we expected everything from God.

— The greatest of all mistakes is to live only for time, when any moment may launch us into eternity.

— Nothing is thriving in the soul unless it is growing.

— The higher character a person supports, the more he regards his minutest actions.

— There is more bitterness following upon sin's ending than ever there was sweetness from sin's acting. You that see nothing but weal in its commission, will suffer nothing but woe in its conclusion. You that sin for your profit, will never profit by your sins.

— Go slowly to the entertainment of thy friends, but quickly to their misfortunes.

— Duty is one of the loftiest of all sensations we are permitted to experience.

— A firm trust in the assistance of Almighty power naturally produces patience, hope, cheerfulness, and all other dispositions of mind which alleviate those calamities we ourselves are not able to remove.

— All the faculties of the rightly governed soul, stand obediently waiting to receive the command to obey.

— Self-confidence destroys its thousands, but holy diffidence is sure protection.

— When a man is in a wise state, he is always in a calm state.

— Never was a spiritual good earnestly desired, which God did not vouchsafe to give.

— There is no sweeter spirit than a yielding spirit, submitting to God, and saying, "thy will be done."

— Our knowledge will be only against us, if we know not how to put it to good account before God.

HOW A FLY WALKS ON THE CEILING.

To walk head downwards on a floor would puzzle a great many; and the wisest men were for a long time unable to explain how the fly walked so easily on the ceiling. Some supposed that the foot of the fly was formed to act like a sucker, which, exhausting the air, would enable the insect to attach itself firmly to the ceiling. Others fancied that this foot might be furnished with little hooks to grasp the inequalities of the mortar. A third supposition was, that the foot was a sort of gum-bottle, provided with a sticky fluid, by help of which the fly was kept from falling.

But the best idea of all was to examine this portion of the insect's limb. By the aid of the wonderful instrument, the microscope, people can now see, instead of being only able to guess as in olden times. The microscope magnified the leg of the fly so that it appeared as large as that of a horse, and its foot as broad as a horse's hoof. This little foot was then seen to possess all the good qualities above mentioned. The All-wise Creator had indeed formed the fly's foot as a sucker, furnished with a set of hooks, and also moistened with a viscid fluid. Thus is God's wisdom shown even in such a small thing as the foot of a fly, to say nothing of the same power and tender mercy shown in the other parts of the little creature's body; and this wondrously formed little insect has its legs and wings torn from its body by thoughtless boys and girls, and is wantonly crushed by many people who must be surely ignorant of the care and loving providence that God has shown to these little objects of creation.

"But what use are flies?" some may ask. To answer this, we need only notice any decaying matter in the summer time. A piece of stale meat or decaying vegetable matter will soon be covered with flies. They eat up such putrescent substances, and thus prevent our being injured by the poisonous gases that would arise from such putrid matter. A poor dead dog or a cat will soon be consumed by the swarms of flies that its decaying body will attract. And should they, the flies, become too numerous, God has provided against their becoming such a plague to us as they were to the defiant Egyptians by the spider, whose crafty nature and dangerous web may be compared to our great Enemy, who is ever on the watch to allure and destroy the souls of men.

Again, there is the cold winter, amid which most of the flies perish. A few only find refuge in crooks and crannies of chimnies and other warm nooks; but the greater portion, having made no provision for winter, as the ant and the bee have, die off as soon as the cold weather sets in. Surely they have enemies enough, without little boys and girls being cruel to them.

"Let them enjoy their little day,
Their lowly bliss receive;
Oh! do not lightly take away
The life thou can'st not give."

SELF DENIAL.

Do you know what self-denial means? Perhaps this story will help you to understand it.

One morning, as Harry and his parents were sitting at the breakfast-table, Harry seemed for awhile in a brown study. Presently he exclaimed, "Father, I have made up my mind not to eat any more salt mackerel."

"Ah! what has brought you to that conclusion?" asked his father, with a look of earnest inquiry.

"Because," continued Harry, "our Sabbath-school teacher said we ought to give up something, so that we might have money to put in the missionary-box."

"Well, but what has induced my boy to choose salt mackerel as the thing he will give up?" again asked his father.

"Why," answered Harry, "because mackerel don't come very often; and I don't like them very much, anyhow."

Now, do my young readers think there is any self-denial in that? I will tell you what self-denial is.

Little Jenny, who dearly loves oranges, received one just ever so rich in its beautiful golden color, and plump with its delicious juice. Instead of eating it, she ran around the corner and gave it to little Emma, who was sick, and whose mother was too poor to buy for her such luxuries. That was self-denial.

When you give away something that you really want, that, by so doing, you may make another happy; or when you give up something that you are really fond of, that you may have the money for missionary or other good purposes,—that is self-denial.

Jesus said, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself."—Carrier Dove.

I was recently spending a few days in a family of which the mother is one of those women who shine at home, who lives her religion day by day; one who, while insisting upon exact truthfulness in her children, practises the same herself. I have known her sometimes to make quite a sacrifice that she might keep a promise made to a child; her word, once given, is held sacred.

During my visit, I heard one morning a little five-year-old daughter telling an older playmate something that the latter seemed to doubt. "How do you know it is so?" she asked. "Oh!" replied the five-year-old child, confidently, "mamma says so."

Still the playmate doubted; when rising with flushed cheeks and sparkling eyes, the surprised and indignant little one exclaimed: "What! don't you believe my mamma? Why, she never, never told me anything that was not true."

Can our little ones always say: "My mamma never, never told me anything that was not true?"—American Messenger.

COLDS.

Dr. Trall says in the Health Reformer, on "taking cold":—

"Did any one of the thousands who talk so flippantly about catching a cold, or being caught by one, ever seriously think what the phrase means? Literally, the expression is not true. Scientifically, the phrase, "taking cold," is an absurdity. Pathologically, what is called "a cold" is a condition of preternatural heat. The disease termed a cold is a state of inflammation, or fever, or both.

No person ever took cold from continuous exposure to cold, paradoxical as it may seem. He might be cold, he might freeze, but he would not have "a cold." Before the disease can occur, he must be exposed to heat; and this must be either rapidly applied, or extreme in degree; then "a cold" may exist.

But the cold—what is it? Congestion of the capillary vessels of the nose, attended with heat and pain. And this is enough, for it is a veritable inflammation of the mucons membrane, often attended with mucous discharge and excoriation, with more or less of general fever.

To cure a cold, therefore, or rather the person who has it, we must remove or obviate the local engagement. Our appliances must be calculated to unload the congested vessels by determining the circulation to other parts; hence, hip-and-foot-baths are admirable obviates, and the warm-bath, or wet-sheet pack, when the system is feverish. Fasting from twenty four to thirty-six hours, with a single warm or vapor-bath, will usually relieve the worst symptoms of a common cold and cure the patient completely.

Some persons, catarrhally inclined, are always getting new colds. Every exposure, every adverse wind or damp day, seems to renew or aggravate the morbid condition. This is because they are in some manner obstructed, or because when cold or chilled they approach the fire too suddenly. Overeating, or the use of constipating food, by clogging the outlets of the body, predispose to cold. And if, during the winter season, persons are too much in hot, ill-ventilated rooms, and indulge too freely in the unhygienic luxuries of the table, they will be liable to frequent and severe colds, with a prospect of acute rheumatism, influenza, or bilious pneumonia, in the spring.

Sleeping in well-ventilated rooms, a simple dietary, and tepid ablutions once or twice a week, with such other attention to health conditions as common sense should suggest, will either prevent all common colds, or reader them trivial in their effects.

CAUSES OF SUDDEN DEATH.—Very few of the sudden deaths which are said to arise from "diseases of the heart," do really arise from that cause. To ascertain the real origin of sudden deaths, experiments have been tried in Europe and reported to a scientific congress held at Strasburg. Sixty-six cases of sudden death were made the subject of a thorough post-mortem examination; in these only two were found who had died from disease of the heart. Nine out of sixty-six have died from apoplexy, while there were forty-six cases of congestion of the lungs—that is, the lungs were so full of blood they could not work, there not being room enough for a sufficient quality of air to enter to support life. The causes that produce congestion of the lungs are cold feet, tight clothing, costive bowels, sitting still chilled after being warmed with labor or rapid walk, going too suddenly from close heated rooms into the cold air, especially after speaking, and sudden and depressing news operating on the blood. The causes of sudden death being known, an avoidance of them may serve to lengthen valuable lives which would otherwise be lost under the verdict of "heart complaint." That disease is supposed to be inevitable and incurable; hence, many may not take the pains they would to avoid sudden death if they knew it lay in their power.

TO LEAD WORKERS.—A red lead manufacturer of France has discovered that the use of milk at their meals, which he has made obligatory on his workmen to the extent of one litre daily, preserves those employed in lead works free from symptoms of lead disease.

THE PROPHETIC PERIODS.—No. 6.

DANIEL 8th AND 9th CONSIDERED.

D. CLOW.

Thirdly. That the epoch of the said vision must lie in the vicinity of the high horns. That the said horns were exceedingly higher in the days of Xerxes and Artaxerxes than ever before. That Xerxes was the fourth and last king to stand up previously to the vision, and that therefore the said epoch must synchronize with the reign of Artaxerxes, his son and successor, who was called "the Great," "the king of kings."

Fourthly. We have shown that the "pushing" of the ram must lie within his own empire, and cannot relate to military movements at all. First, from the fact that he, unlike the goat that came from the west and touched not the ground, was standing within the narrow limits of his own capital; was at home attending to his own business. He was "pushing," indeed, so that no "beast" (3 : 18) might (dare) stand before him; but this does not necessarily signify the mobilization of armies; nor does it necessarily imply war at all. This view of the case is supported by the fact that the ram was standing quietly before the river in Shushan. Query. Was the entire population of the empire there? O no, but the representative strength of the empire was there; consisting of the national army, very properly symbolized by the "ram with two horns"; the king and his cabinet representing the head, the grand army of the empire the body, and the two grand divisions thereof—the said horns—the Medes and the Persians. Now there is no criticism that can weaken this view of the case. And when we contrast it with the custom of Oriental nations, always concentrating the national army in and around the capital of the empire, it renders this view of the matter invulnerable, and should satisfy the minds of the most acute skeptics.

The goat that came from the west, in like manner, was not the entire Grecian nation, by any means at all, but the grand national army thereof. Nor were they encamped on the bank of a river, as was the said ram; but they were coming from the west, even to Shushan, where the ram stood. Query. If the ram was "pushing" from Shushan westward to invade Grecia, why was the goat flying from the west toward Shushan, to attack the ram? The answer is this: the whole Persian army was encamped at Shushan, upon the bank of the river Ulai, and there is where the horns of the ram were broken.

The said "pushing," therefore, must be political, and must relate to some civil strife. What can it be? We think, as before stated, that it relates to the said decree that was sent out to all the subordinate kings and rulers of the empire, to rise up simultaneously, and massacre an imprisoned people—the Jews. "Neither was there any upon earth that could deliver out of his hand"; but God heard their prayers, and turned the tide of destruction upon their enemies, who had no friends to help them, neither in heaven, nor upon earth. The indignation of the king ran so high, after he discovered the fraud that the Amalekites had practiced upon him, that he threatened to destroy with fire and sword any city or nation ("beast") that dared attempt to assist them. The bear arose up on "one side" in behalf of the Jews.

Now if the chronology of these events synchronizes with B. C. 426, then the seventy weeks (Dan. 9 : 24) must reach to A. D. 65, when and where we shall find the Jews in open rebellion against the Romans, and the Romans desolating their land. As this is conceded by all, we will not dwell upon that point. If we stretch the line of seventy weeks, o' four hundred and ninety years, back from A. D. 65, including only one of the two extremes, of course, we reach to the year B. C. 426, the very year in which the said "pushing" commenced; and this year opened a new era in the history of the Jewish nation, which they forever recognized as such, and celebrate even to this day. This was the twelfth year of Artaxerxes' reign. Thurman. This seems to be all that a confiding christian can ask as it relates to the said epoch. Then it follows that the vision of the evening and the morning (i. e., 2300 days) reaches to the spring of 1875. As it relates to the cleansing of the sanctuary, we must say, in the fear of God, and the love of his dear Son our Savior, that we believe 1875 is the extreme point to which they can be extended, with the light that now shines on the sacred pages of truth. But the Lord will appear before that.

We have said that the vision, in its primary sense and meaning, relates to Daniel's people. This is plainly implied in the text—"How long shall be the vision . . . . to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" The vision, then, concerns the sanctuary and the host. The "host" we all understand to mean the Jews; and the sanctuary—that which was trodden under foot at that time, and all subsequent time down to the present day—we are inclined to think relates primarily to the whole earth, then to Judea and Jerusalem, and lastly to the temple at Jerusalem. The whole thing has been in a state of desolation ever since Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed by the Chaldeans. Previous to this, the Jewish Rabbins affirm that the shekinah, or visible symbol of the presence of God, was always present in the temple; subsequent to that never; showing clearly that the sanctuary (whichever it may be) has never been cleansed in the sense of the text. When Jesus returns, then the sanctuary will be cleansed; the shekinah will be there, and the glory of God will fill the whole earth.

Since we have found the epoch of the vision, we will stretch the line of 2300 years along down the stream of time, through all the mutations and changes of succeeding kingdoms and empires, so vividly set forth in the vision, to the cleansing of the sanctuary. In passing out of the Medo Persian dominions, we enter the Grecian empire, and travel on through all its changes; and at length we arrive in the vicinity of the little horn, or the Roman empire; and here, too, we may look for the "king of fierce countenance," and we find him, in the person of Herod the Great, even in "the latter time" of the "four horns" into which Grecia was divided. Now we know that we are also in the vicinity of the prince of princes, because the said "king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," was to stand up against him; and, moreover, because we know that seventy weeks from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem are nearly expired.

Then all of a sudden, a messenger from the courts of heaven appears to the shepherds, while watching their flocks by night, and says—"Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." Now the fullness of the time (sixty-nine weeks), as the learned apostle declared, had come, and a thrill of mingled joy and gratitude springs from every thought,—the Messiah has appeared! The Prince of princes has come! We turn to our chart to see what progress we have made, and find only four hundred and twenty-one years from the starting point, or the epoch of the vision, whereas "sixty-nine weeks unto Messiah the Prince" are four hundred and eighty-three years. Now what does this mean? I once supposed that all the smaller periods must fall within the seventy weeks. Now I turn to the text and read—"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city," to finish the transgression, to make an end of sins, to make reconciliation for iniquity, to bring in everlasting righteousness, to seal up the vision and the prophecy, and to anoint the most holy." Not a word here about the sixty-nine weeks. But we read on—"Know therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, there shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks"; i. e., sixty-nine weeks. Now we see our mistake; the two periods have widely different epochs; the one is the pushing of the ram, and the other the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. Strange, indeed, that I could not see it before. And what confirms this view of the case is, that just sixty-nine weeks, or four hundred and eighty-three years, lie between the said commandment and the birth of the Savior.

We take up our journey again on the line of the vision and travel on. The next event designated is the crucifixion. It is said—"The city shall be built again, and the wall." "And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." Messiah was cut off A. D. 30. Then it follows that just sixty-two weeks lie between the crucifixion and the completion of the city and the walls. The next event designated, is the destruction of the city and the sanctuary by the Roman army; and our chart tells us that it lies at the end of seventy weeks, i. e., four hundred and ninety years from the pushing of the ram, where we started. We look ahead, and lo! there they are; the Jews are in open rebellion, as we told you they would be, and the "people of the Prince that shall come" are there. Now we know they will destroy the city and the sanctuary, and we wait to see the result of the war. "He shall confirm the covenant" (the time designated in the vision) for one week, i. e., the said war will continue seven years, and it did continue just seven years. See Josephus. And from this point onward "desolations are determined, . . . even until the consummation."

The incidents that were to transpire in the said seventy weeks are, "To finish [restrain] transgression, to make an end of sins, to make reconciliation for iniquity, to bring in everlasting righteousness, to seal up the vision and the prophecy, and to anoint the most holy." "To finish" or restrain "transgression," may imply, as some suppose, the restraining of aggressive wars against the Jews; but I am inclined to think that it signifies the restraining influences of the Jewish religion upon the moral character of the people, which would be suspended within the said seventy weeks by the introduction of a new dispensation. I cannot see how it can apply to the restraining of aggressive wars against them, as they never were restrained, only at short intervals; nor will I attempt to show the facts, as they are well understood by all. "To make an end of sins," I understand to signify an end of sin offerings under the law, which were done away in Christ. "To make reconciliation for iniquity," I understand to mean, "that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." "To bring in everlasting righteousness," is the introduction of "the righteousness which is by faith." "To seal up the vision and the prophecy," I understand to signify God's endorsement of the twenty-three hundred days. "Seventy weeks are determined [cut off] upon thy people, and upon thy holy city." What for? "To seal up the vision and the prophecy,"—in the sense of attaching a seal to contracts or covenants. "And to anoint the most holy," I understand this to relate to the transfiguration of Christ. First, because nothing else ever transpired with him prior to his passion, of sufficient magnitude and importance to be called anointing. We all know that it was customary among the Jews to anoint their kings and high priests upon the day of their inauguration. Samuel was sent to anoint Saul. See 1 Sam. 15 : 1. 1 Kings 1 : 34, 45. And I infer, therefore, that in order to fulfill the law, Christ, the heir apparent to the throne, must be anointed also. And to carry out the analogy and the type in all its distinctive features, he must be anointed before his passion, and upon or within the bounds of his own dominion. "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom. And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart; and was transfigured before them; and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light; and, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias, talking with him." "And a voice was heard, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."

Now it is plainly asserted in the first clause of the foregoing text, that they (Peter, James, and John) would see the Son of man coming in his kingdom. And they saw it, in all its greatness and grandeur, in the "mountain." Jesus was transfigured before them, "his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." Moses and Elias were there too, talking with him. It strikes me that this grand display of almighty wisdom and power had a deeper significance than merely to gratify the curiosity of those three men. Yes, indeed, they were taken up to witness the coronation of their King. And there they saw the high commissioners from the courts of heaven, even Moses and Elias, and heard them talking with him. They came with a crown of glory, "and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light."

It was a custom among the Jews to change the vesture of the prince at the inauguration of the king and high priests. See Ex. 29 : 27. Hence the necessity of the change in the mount of transfiguration for the glory that he had with his Father, "before the world was." John 17 : 5. He was clothed, not only with the robes of royalty, but with the garments of the priesthood, to minister in the tabernacle, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Before his coronation and anointing he could not legally enter upon the office of high priest, if there is any meaning in the type; nor could he exercise the functions of a king. Peter says—"For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty." "For he received from God the Father honor and glory." It was a grand and glorious event; no less, indeed, than the coronation and introduction of the Son of God into his everlasting kingdom, substantially and really. The anointed king was there, clothed with robes of royalty, and invested with "all power . . . . in heaven and in earth," as he subsequently declared. He was standing, too, within the limits of his own empire, the proper place for his inauguration. There, too, were Moses and Elias, the representative subjects of his kingdom, clothed with authority to invest their Lord with the title of king, in behalf of all the saints. And Peter, James, and John, were called to witness the fact, as Peter subsequently positively declared. "Verily I say unto you, there be some standing here, that shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." This has the one signification of installation in his kingdom. And from thence, he became "an high priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec"; i. e., by inheritance; and a legal induction into both branches of his administration. "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." "And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

SANCTIFICATION.

J. S. WHITE.

"As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him."—Col. 2 : 6.

With what exercises of mind did you receive Christ, supposing you have received him? You saw and felt that you were a sinner. Not only that you were a sinner in common with all men, but that you were a great sinner. It made no difference whether you had lived a moral life or not, before you were convinced of your sinfulness. It may have been true of you, as of Paul before he was converted, "touching the law blameless," and after the "straitest sect" you may have lived a Pharisee. You saw that you had disregarded God's goodness in blessing you and bearing with you while you had all your life neglected his great salvation. You looked upon yourself as did the apostle, as the chiefest of sinners. In thinking of others, you could see only their external deportment, while you did clearly see the character of all your movements of mind. The contrast with you was not small. You were the greater sinner. You thought God could more easily save others than you. You did not see how God could save so great a sinner as you were. You made the subject an individual and personal matter.

You saw the goodness of God in the sufferings and death of Christ to save sinners; and but for sin Christ would not have died. It was clear to you that Christ suffered for you, as much so as if there had been no other sinner in the world. Your sins were the occasion of Christ being nailed to the cross. To you Christ in his character was exceedingly lovely. You looked to him for mercy. You gave yourself up to him, with the belief that, if he received you, it would be right and mercy on his part; and if he did not receive you, it would be equally right.

With these convictions you made a full and unconditional surrender to the Savior. It was not until then that you found peace,—peace unlike and far beyond what you had before known. You loved God and your Savior with all your heart. Your faith in Christ was a reality that you could not express. You loved your neighbor as you loved yourself. You loved all men, and wanted all to come to Jesus and be saved. You were an enemy to no one, and no one was an enemy to you. It seemed to you that all things around you praised God, and you wondered why all men did not praise him. You were sanctified. God for Christ's sake had forgiven you all sin. He had received you, justified you, and sanctified you. Your will was wholly lost in God's will. Then you were as good, as perfect, as fully sanctified, as well prepared for the world to come, as it is possible for you to be while in a mortal state. What can be added to make you better? God forgave you, justified and accepted you, and by faith translated you into his kingdom.

There is no space of time between justification and sanctification. One is not the other, yet one does not exist without the other. But are we not required to grow in grace, and does not this imply that we may, and should, grow better? No. The converted man may have more knowledge, and more experience, but that will not make him any better. To grow in grace, he must first be in grace. To remain in grace, while his experience enlarges, and his knowledge increases, is to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. "As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." Consecrated and sanctified when you received Christ, remain so. This is all that is required. You did the will of the Lord, so far as you knew it when you received Christ, and you could do no more than that afterwards. Begin right, and remain so, is all that is required. Have the faith, and live in the faith. Then you will grow in the faith, or grow while you are keeping the faith. Be right, and remain in the right. This is perseverance. In no other sense is sanctification a progressive work. "As ye have the light, walk in the light."

But what about this great blessing of which some speak, and which they call sanctification, all the way after they think they were converted, from six months to twenty-five years? In all these cases, one of three things must be true:

1. They may never have been converted till they came into the state which they call sanctification. This will account for their saying that this experience is different, and far beyond anything they ever had before. I was well acquainted with an Orthodox minister who preached in the same place more than fifty years. After he had been a settled pastor of the church sixteen years, a great revival commenced in his society. He soon found that those under conviction and those who came out rejoicing had exercises of mind that he had never experienced. This led him to think that he was an unconverted man. He yielded to his convictions, prayed for mercy, put himself among the convicted, anxious ones, and came out a convert. He dated his conversion at that time. He said he had been deceived in thinking he was a converted man when he was settled over that church. His life was such that his people considered him a pious man.

As in his case, so I think it has been in other cases. The only difference is that he did not hold on to the shallow exercises of mind which he had when he first thought he was converted, but gave them up as spurious and worthless, when he was really converted. Others still believe their stony ground conversion was genuine, and that this experience which they have had a long time afterwards, over and above everything they before experienced, is sanctification added to their old conversion.

2. It may be that some of these persons were converted at the time they date their conversion. But they have so long and so far backslid, that they have well nigh forgotten that they were purged from their old sins. And in coming back to where they were when converted, the change is so great in contrast with the life they have lived, they think it must be they have now become sanctified. The truth is, they have now repented and returned to the moral state they were in when first converted. Their backsliding may not have been in going into the sinful practices of the world. It may be they have kept up their profession and so lived that most persons have thought they were what they call christians. If these persons were ever converted, they can see that every good feeling they now have, they had when they were converted. They now have come back to the moral condition they were in at their change of heart. This re-conversion is so great to them, they call it sanctification. If the change is as great as it appears to them, I think some others will be likely to observe it.

3. Some of these cases of professed sanctification may be only sparks of their own kindling. Those who claim to be sanctified have never yet been converted. They know nothing of a change of heart. They have never seen what they are as sinners. They have never received the word into a good and honest heart. They are either hypocrites, or else wholly deceived in their religion. Their religion is manufactured for the occasion. Under an excited, animal, mesmeric influence, they either think, or try to make others think, that they are sanctified. Their sanctification lasts them till a change of circumstances. Perhaps they are sanctified at a campmeeting, and it lasts them until they leave the ground, and in some cases a few days longer; after which they have no more of it until they go to another such meeting. Then they are renewed, revived, re-sanctified; and to show it, they will reprove and condemn others for their pride in dress, and jewelry, and lack of humility; perhaps tell them they are not prepared for the Lord, and cannot go into the kingdom unless they get sanctified. They go home wonderfully blessed, having done their duty so faithfully. This is the last of their sanctification until the year comes round, and then it is, Ho, for the meeting and for another dip at sanctification; and Jehu-like, to show their great zeal for Christ and his cause. This class of persons are a curse to themselves, and a stumbling-block to those who would be right. They are wofully deceived as to their religion, if they are not hypocrites.

There are some good ones who seem to think if a person is sanctified, he will have no trials, be always on the mount of rejoicing, never sorrowful, nor cast down. This is a great mistake. Our Savior was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He was sanctified from his birth. He was perfect in all things; ever did the will of his Father. His perfection was manifested in his suffering. Hence it is said that he was "made perfect through suffering." Not that he was ever imperfect, but that his perfection was proved by his suffering. He was as perfect when he said his soul was "sorrowful even unto death," as when it was said on one occasion, he "rejoiced in spirit." Converted persons who are sanctified do have times of sorrow, of darkness, of trials, of dejection, of mourning, and of grief. It is "enough for the servant that he be as his master," said the Savior. The apostle said—"If ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons."

Do not then let the humble, praying, afflicted child of God conclude that he has no religion, because he cannot always nor generally feel like shouting, and rejoicing, and saying that he is sanctified, and knows that he is the Lord's, and shall be in his kingdom. Leave that for those to do who do not know what true religious experience is; or to those who would make you think they are wonderfully good, and who talk and act as if they had placed God under obligations to save them on account of their superior excellence; or to those who are all the while, in one way or another, praising themselves, as if they thought no one would ever discover their goodness, if they did not speak of it. "Let another praise thee, and not thyself."

Jesus prayed—"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." The Spirit aids the man to see the truth. He sees it, and receives it in the love of it. He is then sanctified. This was true of the believing, penitent thief on the cross. He did not get sanctified after that.

THE HARMONY OF SCRIPTURE ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

(From the Rainbow, Eng.)

The truths contained in the views of Origen and Augustine reconciled by the earlier doctrine of conditional immortality.

BY THE REV. SAMUEL MINTON, M. A.

MORTALITY PUTTING ON IMMORTALITY.

We proceed, therefore, to inquire whether the Scripture doctrine of resurrection involves the idea of universal immortality. Will the resurrection of the body confer immortality in all cases?

There is obviously no moral necessity that it should do so. All might be raised from their graves for the purposes of retribution and reward, without all being raised "to the life immortal." The continuance of their restored life might depend upon the judgment passed upon them for the deeds done in the body. All must be raised from the dead in order to be judged by that man whom God hath appointed. But what is there to prevent sentence of death being then passed upon those who are "worthy" of it—not temporal and bodily death only, but eternal death, that is, death from which there will be no recovery, and of the whole man, body and soul?

I will venture to say that no a priori reason whatever can be assigned for rejecting such a view, and that the only question for us is, What saith the Scripture?

Now, it is not a little remarkable that in every place where resurrection is spoken of as securing immortality, it is with exclusive reference to the resurrection of them that are Christ's at his coming; while in every place, where the resurrection of the wicked is directly mentioned, care seems to be taken to show that it will not be "after the power of an endless life."

a. Luke 20 : 35, 36. "They that shall account worthy to obtain that age [the millennial], and the resurrection from amongst the dead [the first resurrection—the resurrection of the just], neither marry, nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more."

John 6 : 40. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one who seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day."

John 11 : 26. "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall not die for ever." The believer may die for a time ("the body is dead because of sin"), but not for ever.

1 Cor. 15 : 54. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Does this refer to the wicked as well as the righteous? Is death swallowed up in victory in the case of those, who, it is alleged, rise to an immortality of wretchedness, whose bodies are made incorruptible, only that they may never be consumed by the unquenchable fire into which they are cast? Are their bodies sown in dishonor and raised in glory, sown animal bodies and raised spiritual bodies? Will they bear the image of the heavenly? Can any thing be clearer than that the apostle here is speaking of the saints alone?

b. Dan. 12 : 2. "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here it is implied that the resurrection of the latter will not be to everlasting life. The wicked will rise to a sense of shame, and to be the objects of everlasting contempt. "The memory of the just is blessed"; and the memory of the unjust will be accursed. This idea, we may observe in passing, is abundantly sufficient to meet the alleged necessity for keeping the unsaved alive forever, namely, that otherwise there would be no adequate manifestation of God's wrath against sin.

John 5 : 28, 29. "The hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." To what these latter will be condemned is to be inferred from the contrasted blessing. If the lot of the righteous is to be life, the lot of the wicked must be death. More will be said on these words presently.

Rev. 20 : 5, 6. "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." This of course implies, that on "the rest of the dead" the second death will have power; in their case, mortality will not put on immortality, nor will death be swallowed up in victory.

In the much disputed parable (if it can be called a parable) of the sheep and the goats, there is no mention of resurrection at all. It closes our Lord's reply to the question, "What will be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the age?"—that is, of this dispensation; and it describes the judgment of "all the nations," which will then take place. However clear may be its moral aspect, its prophetic interpretation is beset with the gravest difficulties. But if, as many believe, its last words look on to the final destiny of all men, we find the same contrast, that has been noticed so often already, again presenting itself: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into everlasting life." The punishment therefore must consist, not in an everlasting life of misery, but in the loss of everlasting life altogether. And it must be called everlasting or eternal for the same reason that the fire which consumed Sodom is called "eternal fire"—namely, because its effects are final and irremediable. It is evident that the word eternal as applied to any act, or to any-thing which involves an act, does not prove that the action will continue forever. Eternal redemption is not eternal redeeming, eternal judgment is not eternal judging, eternal fire is not eternal burning; then why should eternal punishment necessarily be eternal punishing, and eternal destruction eternal destroying? The one sole answer that can be given is, that man being immortal cannot be destroyed, and that therefore the words must be understood in some sense which will harmonize with that presumed immortality. Take out this postulate, and the passage affords not a shadow of proof that the wicked will be forever conscious of pain.

LIFE.

And this brings us to the great central fact in the whole controversy,—namely, that life, eternal life, living forever, immortality, is the special privilege offered to those who seek it, through Christ, by patient continuance in well-doing; while death or destruction is constantly threatened as the end of those who obey not the gospel of God. Life or death!—life or death!—this is what Scripture rings with from beginning to end. If these reiterated promises and threatenings are to be understood in their plain natural sense, the question is settled, and the whole difficulty removed.

Now, there are some very strong reasons in favor of so understanding them, in addition to the prima facie presumption against the predominating language of Scripture on any given subject being meant to be taken in a non-natural sense. Let us first consider the promise of everlasting life in the world to come.

1. Every one must admit that the word life does not in itself involve holiness or happiness; otherwise, as Archbishop Whately remarks, to speak of a happy life would be mere tautology, and to speak of a miserable life, a contradiction in terms. A man may lead a wicked and miserable life, as well as a holy and happy life. Now, if both the righteous and the wicked are to spend an everlasting life of happiness, or if the righteous are to spend an everlasting life of happiness, and the wicked an everlasting life of misery, how can "everlasting life" simply be so constantly promised, in one form or another, as the reward of the righteous? It must of course mean, on that supposition, an everlasting life of holiness and happiness. How strange that the points of difference between their future lot and that of the wicked should be so entirely passed over in these reiterated promises to the righteous, and the language be studiously framed, so as to express no more than what is common to them both,—namely, that they shall live forever, that they shall be immortal, and have eternal life! That any thing so misleading should ever occur in Scripture, is very difficult to believe; that it should be the prevailing habit of Scripture, is absolutely incredible.

If, on the other hand, it be a revealed truth that the whole universe is ultimately to be reconciled by Christ, so that God may be all in all, the explanation is obvious. To promise any one everlasting life is to promise him a share in that universal blessedness. There is no need to specify in words that it will be a life of holiness and happiness, for there can be no other eternal life; to live forever in sin and misery is impossible.

2. But this is not all. Even if we could believe that the (zoe, life), which is so constantly promised to the righteous, was only the exaggerated language "of poetry or passion," and meant, not life, but all that is commonly thought to be worth living for, there is another word, which it is impossible so to explain away: (psuche) can only mean—either the soul, as distinguished from the body, or else natural life; and our Lord most distinctly asserts several times, that our own psuche is what we shall either preserve or lose hereafter. He asserts it, also, in contrast to our preserving or losing it here. If we are unwilling to sacrifice our life now, should it be required by faithfulness to him, we shall certainly be deprived of it then, whether we will or no. Once, indeed, our Lord adds "unto everlasting zoe." (John 12 : 25.) But that this is only intended to emphasize what he elsewhere expresses simply by preserving the psuche, appears very plainly from its being contrasted with the loss by the unfaithful—not of their zoe, but of their own psuche. The alternative was precisely that which had been put by Ezekiel—"When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness which he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive."

3. Furthermore, we are told, that when Adam had marred "the image of God, after which he was created in righteousness and true holiness," he was debarred from access to the tree of life, so that he might not eat of it and "live forever." By this familiar expression, of such constant occurrence afterwards, no one understands here, in the first place where it is found, its original ruling utterance,—lest he should be holy forever, lest he should be happy forever, lest he should know God, and possess every thing which makes life desirable. The tree of life was given for no such purpose: it was given that he might live forever, that he might keep possession of the life bestowed upon him, when the Creator breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul. The happiness of that life depended internally upon his consciousness of God's favor, and externally upon surrounding circumstances being in harmony with the nature that God had given him.

4. Observe also how our Lord compares the life, which he bestows, with that which was sustained by manna in the wilderness: "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead; this is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die." (John 6 : 49, 50.) If "not die" means not remain wicked and miserable, where is the contrast to the manna? Was that given to make the Israelites holy and happy? No; it was given to sustain their physical life. This it could do only for a time. The bread which Christ gives will sustain it forever. "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall not die forever." (John 11 : 25, 26.)

In fact, the more closely we examine the passages of Scripture which speak of eternal life as the gift of God in Christ Jesus, the more certain does it appear, that they include, not presuppose, the possession of endless physical life.

SINGING.

M. A. CURTIS.

While at the campmeeting at Alton Bay, I heard singing which stirred my inmost soul; hymns which called out such heart-searching I never heard. Crowds were gathered here and there, carelessly singing these words—

"I am trusting, Lord, in thee,
Dear Lamb of Calvary;"

and music that seemed to waft them to the courts of glory, although it came from sinful lips. At times I would join with them, but when I came to these words, it seemed that my tongue would paralyze lest I should sing a lie to God. For in these lines, as you will readily see, we acknowledge to God, the searcher of all hearts, that we are trusting in him. Could I sing this while I refused to trust God where I could not trace him? "Lord! I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Help me to trust in thee wholly. And with the acknowledgment that I trusted him, my prayer would ascend for grace to give myself unreservedly to him.

One other hymn which especially attracted my attention contains these words—

"I will follow thee, my Savior,
Thou didst shed thy blood for me,
And though all men should forsake thee,
By thy grace I'll follow thee."

In singing this, the question forces itself upon me, Would I follow Christ if it took me to dens and caves of the earth? Would I follow him if it led me to the rack or burning stake? Should I still cling to the cross if relatives and friends should reject him? If all men counted the blood of the covenant an unholy thing, would I still glory in nothing save the cross?

While writing these lines my cry goes up, Lord, help me to sing in the spirit, and with the understanding also. The morning stars sang together at the creation. The angels sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," at the Savior's birth. In a little while the living saints will sing—"O death, where is thy sting?" And those who are sleeping in Jesus will come forth singing—"O grave, where is thy victory?" Soon we shall sing redemption's song.

God listens while we sing, and may the time speedily come when we shall sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Soon we shall join the angel choir, and

"With harps tuned celestial, our voices we'll raise,
To Jesus our Savior, in accents of praise."

TRIP ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

Friday, Jan. 5th. In our last notes, we arted with our readers yesterday at Donner ake, near Truckee city, on the Sierra Neada mountains in the State of California.

After breakfast at Truckee, we started off gain with two engines to take us up the teep, winding track towards the "Summit of he Sierras." The course of the road is windng like a horse-shoe, in order to ascend the nountain. Up, up, puffing, puffing, still igher, higher, till we reach the summit, and nter the long line of snow sheds, which over the road for some forty miles, and hide rom our view some very wild scenery. At he summit, we are seven thousand and fortywo feet above the level of the sea. On these nountains we pass through a succession of unnels and snow sheds, so closely connected hat the passenger can hardly tell one from he other. The longest tunnel is 1,700 feet, he others are from one to seven hundred feet. They hide most of the magnificent scenery, which is quite a loss to the traveler. Semi-occasionally we catch a glimpse of some deep valley, where the tops of the tall pines are hundreds of feet below the rail-road track. Some of these chasms go down to a sublime depth, and make one shudder at the sight. In the spring the huge avalanche rolls down the mountain side, dashing over the snow-sheds, while the cars are passing quietly through them unharmed. Great quantities of lumber are cut from this region.

From the Summit we go down—down—down—a very winding, serpentine road, through exceedingly wild scenery; the cars being run by a careful brakeman, while the engineer and the engines rest from their labors. Near Alta we pass the "Great American Canon," through which runs a river between mountain banks two thousand feet high. This immense gorge is one of the grandest sights on the continent. Once seen it can never be forgotten. Onward and downward we wind our way. Passing Dutch Flat, and Gold Run, we come to the noted "Cape Horn," which affords the grandest sight on the route. The track was first cut into the side of the mountain by Chinamen, let down from the top by ropes. It is said to be two thousand five hundred feet from the track down to the bottom of the canon, where a river winds its way, looking like a thread of silver. We only had a few minutes to gaze at this wonder of wonders, and then hasten down the mountain among pleasant homes, surrounded by fruit trees and green grass. What a contrast! In the morning, at breakfast, we were where the snow was three and a half feet on a level; at dinnertime, out of the sight of the snow, where the grass and other things looked like the last of April and forepart of May in New England.

We arrived at Sacramento yesterday, about 4.30 P. M., and stopped all night. We met some choice friends, with whom we had very pleasant interviews. We found good quarters at the Capitol Hotel. Bro. and Sr. Wilson and niece stopped with us. This morning we went with our friend "C." to see the Capitol, which is a very fine building, costing about one and a half million dollars. It is said there are but two other State Capitol buildings in the United States that are superior to this; one is in Columbus, O., the other in Nashville, Tenn. The Senate Chamber is very fine. Indeed, the whole interior of the building is a rare specimen of architecture.

At present there is a great freshet in California. Immense quantities of rain have fallen, and the Sacramento river is now twenty-two feet and ten inches above low water mark. It is estimated that seven hundred thousand acres of land are now overflowed on the banks of that river alone. It is raining again to-day. The water has broken through the levee, and many houses are entirely surrounded. We saw horses and other animals standing on the verandas of the houses in order to keep out of the water surrounding them. The R. R. track between Sacramento and San Francisco, a distance of one hundred and thirty-eight miles, by Oakland, is so flooded that passengers go by steamboat on the Sacramento river; distance one hundred and twenty-five miles. Since last November all the passengers from Sacramento to San Francisco, have been taken by the way of Vallejo, which gives eighty-three miles by rail, and twenty-three by boat, arriving about the same time as when we went all the way by rail, excepting the ferry of six miles across from Oakland. As we sailed down the Sacramento river, which is now very muddy, we passed some places more elevated, where the gardener was at work; also gardens containing fresh vegetables. These may be found at all seasons of the year. While on the boat we obtained some interesting facts from Mr. Wadsworth, of Sacramento, who is engaged in a very extensive manufacture of sugar from the sugar beet. The company have some fifteen hundred acres appropriated to the best culture; and have ordered twenty tons of beet seed to be used this year. The sugar is as good as that made from the sugar cane, and is not easily distinguished from the best cane sugar. The cost of manufacture of the beet sugar is less than that made from the cane. Mr. Wadsworth is a very intelligent gentleman, who has spent some time in Germany and other parts of Europe to gather facts in relation to the culture of the sugar beet, and the best methods of making the sugar. He informed us that he had raised a beet that was nearly six feet long, and weighed four hundred and twelve pounds. It was not allowed to go to seed, and was kept in the ground four years.

While on the boat, we also had conversation with Mr. Brown, who superintended the building of the snow sheds on the Central Pacific R. R., to which we have before referred. From him we have obtained definite information in relation to the sheds. Over fifty million feet of lumber were employed in their construction. One shed is nearly thirty miles long, including about one mile of tunnel through the mountain. There is one mile of sheds, which cost one hundred and sixty thousand dollars. The average cost is not far from fifteen thousand dollars a mile. The whole length of sheds is about thirty-four miles. They are built of fir and yellow pine. One of the cuts in the side of the mountain is one hundred and twenty-five feet deep.

We arrived at Vallejo about five P. M., in company with Bro. Wilson and family, who went to San Francisco while we stopped to remain over the Sabbath at V. We found Bro. Young and several other brethren at the wharf waiting to give us a hearty welcome.

Saturday, Jan. 6th. We are now in the midst of our warm California friends. Bro. Rich, the Methodist minister, called on us this morning, and several other brethren. We have just made a brief call on Bro. Klink, the Congregational minister, in whose house we held meetings last spring. We are to have our first meeting on the coast to-night, in the Tabernacle, which our brethren have occupied since last June. So far as we can learn, the church here is doing well.

CALIFORNIA.

We are now, Monday, Jan. 8th, fairly at work again in California. It is wonderfully wet and muddy. These are strong obstacles in the way of getting to meeting; but in spite of these things, large audiences assembled to hear the word. We spent Saturday and yesterday at Vallejo, and had excellent meetings. The people took great pains to get out through the mud, which surpasses any thing of the kind we ever encountered before. It has rained almost every day for over three weeks. In the midst of the city of Vallejo, wagons go into the mud up to the hub. It is with difficulty that carriages pass at all. This mud is made of the adobe soil, and is very sticky. It is the most disagreeable mud we ever found. It is both sticky and slippery. When on the sidewalks and crossings, one needs to take much care lest he slip down, especially on the side hills. Fortunately we got along without this special experience. It is only once in about ten years that such a rainy season occurs in California. It secures abundant crops to the farmer, provided he can get an opportunity to sow his seed. This is the time for plowing and sowing; but it is too wet at present. In 1862 it rained more than it has yet this year, and the water was about a foot and a half higher.

The church in Vallejo is doing well under the faithful labors of Bro. and Sr. Fassett, Bro. Reed and Howell. We enjoyed our visit. Their meetings are held at the corner of Sacramento and York streets, in a hall that was first built in San Francisco about twenty years ago, and moved to Vallejo some fifteen years since, and become noted as the worst dance and liquor saloon in the city. It was headquarters for vile characters and wicked conduct. The property about it lost value because of this den of iniquity. The brethren succeeded in getting it for meetings, then renovated it, painted and papered it, and dedicated it to the worship of the Lord, who has always met with them, and blest them with the comfort of the Holy Spirit. Their prospects are encouraging. Last evening four rose for prayers, and others felt deeply, as was manifested by their flowing tears.

Bro. Hatch, the Baptist minister, came in and united with us in the exercises on Saturday and Sabbath evenings, manifesting a true christian spirit. He appears to be free from sectarian bigotry, and willing to unite with all christians in laboring for the salvation of sinners. He understands experimental religion, and loves to talk of Jesus.

At ten o'clock this morning we took the boat for San Francisco, where we arrived at about one P. M., and found the brethren at the wharf, waiting our arrival, and ready to do all in their power for our comfort. We were soon at our old home, with Bro. and Sr. Place, 318 Hayes Street, where we received a most hearty welcome. We soon received a call from Bro. Fassett, who is looking well. Bro. and Sr. Fassett are highly esteemed here for their faithful ministerial labors and good examples. Sr. Fassett's very bad eyes are improving finely, and she has bright hopes and prospects of complete recovery.

Thursday, Jan. 11th. We have had three precious meetings. It begins to seem like the blessed seasons we enjoyed here last winter. The prospect is very encouraging. The Spirit of the Lord is in our midst, already producing happy results. Pray for us.

☞ A UNION NATIONAL Sunday School Temperance Meeting will be in Tremont Temple, Boston, Monday, Feb. 5th. Three sessions; at 10 A. M., 2 and 7 P. M. All friends of the cause, and the children also, are invited to attend. Prominent speakers are expected. The singing will be under the direction of Dr. Tourjee.

WE may be justified in assuming that the year 1871 will be known in future calendars as the Black Year.—Chicago Tribune.

☞ GEO. H. HEPWORTH, for some years pastor of the church of the "Unity" in this city, and for the last two of the church of the "Messiah" in New York, has recently renounced "Unitarianism," and proposes to organize a new church, whose aim shall be the salvation of men and women, and the broader co-operation of christians in such work. We give below the basis of this organization, which was presented before a meeting called for Monday, Jan. 22nd.

"New York, Jan. 14th, 1872.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDS: We ask for the sympathy and co-operation of all who are willing to assist in building up a new Church of Christ.

God in his providence is bringing all denominations into closer affiliation with each other. People see plainly that the formulas of any creed, however true in themselves, are of less importance than the possession of the Holy Spirit. Necessary as it is to have an assured belief in fundamental truths, and to stand on evangelical ground, it is still more important to find means by which those truths can be made to act on the hearts and lives of men. We propose to solve this problem by asking good men and women of all names to unite in an entirely unsectarian movement, and one which will respect the rights of private judgment in minor matters, while it does its utmost to kindle a religious enthusiasm in this community. We ask, with this end in view, the co-operation of all christians who are willing to stand on the basis of the historic faith of Christ's church; the divine nature of the Lord Jesus; the sinfulness of the human race, and the regenerating offices of the Holy Spirit, and especially of those who are willing to labor for human salvation. Let us form a church the spirit of which shall be practical, and the aim of which shall be to bring men and women in this great city to Christ. Let us make him the Lord of our lives, and pray that in the latter day, when he shall come, and all the holy angels with him, we may hear him say to us—'Well done, good and faithful servants.' May the good God bless our endeavors, and make us in some degree instrumental in building up his glorious kingdom. Amen.

We shall, in the course of a week or two, meet in some convenient place to organize our Society, under the name of 'The Church of the Disciples,' and we ask your prayers and your co-operation.

GEO. H. HEPWORTH, and Others."

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M., PREBENDARY OF CORK. Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, M. D., of Yale College. 8vo. 68 pp. Price 40 cents.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject. We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—1 copy, 40 cts.; two copies, 75 cts.; three copies, $1; one dozen for $3.50;—all sent by mail, postpaid. Please order freely. AG'T.

EDWIN T. HIMES.—We are pained to learn of the death of this devoted young minister of the gospel. He quietly fell asleep, Wednesday, Jan. 17th, at his home in Winona, Minn. His funeral was attended in Buchanan, Mich., Jan. 24th. His brother William writes:—

"I need not tell those who knew his life how he died. He died as he had lived, a Christian. For four days he was quite unconscious of all around him except that he invariably recognized his wife whenever she spoke to him. His words were few. At one time he seemed to be commending his companion to 'trust in Jesus.' About an hour before he expired he spoke, and said 'Mother.' Half an hour later he said, gently, 'Addie'—and thus with his last thoughts upon his mother, and his companion, and their best Comforter and Friend, he 'fell on sleep.'"

OUR GREAT WORK.

Either we are a deluded people, or we have a great work to do—a work that should engage both our attention and our energies. If we are not deluded, we are already near the judgment day; and if we are nearing that day, this light should not be put under a bushel, but be held up to the gaze of the bewildered multitudes who are walking in prophetic darkness. And this is an essential feature in our work. We are the people to hold up this prophetic torch, and to keep it ablaze, to cast light on all sides, to dispel the gloom.

If we who have the light do not let it shine, who will? We cannot be justified in smothering it. God will hold us responsible. If we see the sword of vengeance coming, we must give the alarm, or meet a fearful responsibility.

Are we faithfully performing the great work committed to our hands—the work of heralding the coming of the divine Judge? Do we feel the burden of the solemn mission on our hearts? We cannot be justified in withholding the light on the plea that the message is not relished. The question is not, "Is it popular?" but, "Is it true?" If true, proclaim it in the fear of God, in every way possible.

BURNT OUT OF THE CHURCH.—The recent war revealed a new way of getting out of the church, indicated by the following dialogue:

"I believe you belong to the Baptist church, Bro. A.?"

"No, sir; I do not."

"Did'nt you belong to them a few years ago?"

"I did, sir."

"Ah! then you have left them, have you?"

"No, sir."

"Got turned out, did you?"

"No, sir; I got burnt out; the church house and church book got burnt out by the Yankees, and that let me out."

A new way of getting unchurched. W. S.

SECRET PRAYER.—Secret prayer is the life of true godliness. An assent that secret prayer is essential, and an occasional but reluctant practice of it, is not sufficient. Every day should the saint hold secret communion with God, if he would know the sweetness of inward peace, and be prepared to do every duty in the strength of the Lord. Then in the prayer-meeting his heart will be already watered with grace, and he can at once pour out the refreshing stream to invigorate others, instead of pumping and pumping to start the water. Some christians, like some pumps, need priming before the water will flow; but secret prayer, if not neglected, will keep us always primed, and ready for every good word and work. W. S.

THE SECRET OF PULPIT POWER is to be in dead earnest about the vital and eternal truth of God. Dr. John M. Mason, when asked the secret of Chalmers' power, replied, "His blood earnestness."

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 6.

Carterville, Ga., Jan. 8th. I preached in this city again to-night, to a much larger assembly, including several clergymen from different denominations. Had the best attention. Was also introduced to two clergymen whom I had not met before. Hope by the preaching of the word, and the scattering of reading matter, to exalt the truth of God above the fables of men in the minds of many of the people. Had a long conversation with an editor of one of the city papers, who is a Methodist minister, and obtained his promise to come and hear.

Jan. 9th. My congregation was much increased to-night, and the whole assembly gave breathless attention for nearly two hours, while the Lord helped me pour the truth upon both the people and the clergy who were present. It was a solemn and interesting season. The Court House being occupied for other purposes to-morrow night, the Baptist house was offered me for that night. There is a fear that I will fill the town with "northern heresy," and an undercurrent effort is being made to forestall it by some of the clergy. It is hard to have their fables exposed in their presence. The cry of "northerner" is usually as effective as the cry of "mad dog." For the want of a better argument, they raise this as their war-cry, simply to arouse the deep prejudices of the southern people. They tell them that "all heresy comes from the north."

Jan. 10th. Preached in the Baptist church to a congregation of between two and three hundred, including five or six ministers. All ears were open to hear the "new doctrine." Many speak in its favor, and others, though impressed while listening, are sure that it must be a "northern heresy." People are beginning to read, to find proof for their tottering systems of theology.

Jan. 11th. Returned to the Court House. About three hundred out. Had the most profound attention, and some new ministers present. I called upon sinners to seek the Lord, when three men, deeply wrought upon, presented themselves for prayers, and others wept in the congregation. We had a solemn season. My sermons are the topic of conversation all through the city; yet prejudice keeps many from attending. To-day a minister came ten miles on purpose to converse with me, and to hear me, having previously made himself unpopular by embracing some features of our faith. Gave him a quantity of reading matter, and trust he will be led into the full light of truth.

Jan. 12th. To-night I preached to about four hundred very attentive listeners for an hour and a half. Several clergymen present. At the close of my sermon I called for volunteers, when nine adults arose as seekers of salvation. Our season of prayer was interspersed with weeping on the part of a goodly number. Tarried for the night with a merchant of the place who was formerly a Methodist minister, but had got ensnared with the cares of this life, lost his first love, given up preaching, and gone into a backslidden state. These meetings have aroused him, and he has started anew. He feels deeply interested in the doctrines that I am preaching. Conversed with the Methodist pastor, who has just finished reading my "Three Works in One," which I gave him recently, and he confesses that he sees no way to escape my reasoning, and that I have given him a great deal of light; but said that the case of the rich man and Lazarus appeared to favor the doctrine of a disembodied state. I told him that we could squeeze that doctrine out of that case just as we could squeeze cider out of cotton.

"Can you squeeze cider out of cotton?"

"No."

"Well, I will tell you how to do it; just put cider into it first, and then you can squeeze it out; so just put a disembodied soul into this text, and then you can get that doctrine out of it, and not till then. The text does not mention a disembodied soul; and the hell (hades) to which the rich man went is a realm where there is 'no knowledge, nor wisdom' (Eccl. 9: 19); and even if a disembodied soul should go to that realm, it would be unconscious; besides, its occupants remain unjudged till the resurrection. Rev. 20: 13. In this case, Christ, on the principle of parabolic personification, attributes speech and sight to the unconscious dead, to indicate the regrets that the unholy dead would feel for a past misspent life, if they were conscious;—thus making the dead themselves speak to the living, but not their souls. Lazarus (not his soul) was carried by messengers (not heavenly angels) to Abraham's bosom (not to heaven), to become a companion of Abraham in death. To these dead ones, too (not to their souls), is attributed speech; they ended their lives in comfort and peace, and if they could feel at all, they would feel peace. The same method of speech is used in the case of Pharaoh, who went down to hell (sheol), not in a disembodied state, but 'with weapons of war,' and 'bones,' being 'slain'; and yet to him and his fellows is attributed speech, sight, hearing, comfort, and shame, showing how they would feel if they could feel in death. So the rich man and Lazarus, though dead and unconscious, by personification are represented as seeing, feeling, and talking,—thus making the dead speak to the living, as they would if they could."

Jan. 13th. After preaching to-night, I went home with another merchant of the place, who says I have given him more light on the Scriptures than he ever received from all other sources before.

Jan. 14th (Sunday). Had the largest congregation that has yet attended, to whom I preached on the subject of the salvation and damnation of disembodied men before the judgment, in contrast with the Bible theory of saving or punishing physical men, in their resurrected state, after the judgment. Had candid attention. Some of the clergy are as busy as bees among the people, to make them think that this "northern heresy" is ruinous, and warn the people against it secretly and publicly. But some seed will take root in spite of them. Left another appointment.

OUR PAPER.

BRO. GRANT:—I have read with attention Bro. Munger's article headed "Perplexity," and I hope others have done the same. It is often said that "where there's a will there's a way," and I think this rule will apply to the case in hand. Just think of the expense to each subscriber, and see if even a moderate degree of will would not be sufficient to enable nearly every one to find a way to pay for the paper. A small fraction over five cents a week pays the subscription price and the postage.

It is certain that many of those who owe for the paper spend much more than that daily for needless luxuries. I know of one who said he must stop his paper, he could not afford to pay for it. That man owed about ten dollars for the Crisis, and he had wasted hundreds on "fleshly lusts, which war against the soul," during the time in which he had been a subscriber. We hope there are not many such on the list, but there are some who are verging that way. We hope that conscience, and the power of God, will move all such to awake to duty and sin not.

There is another extreme more commendable. There are some who pay promptly in advance for "our paper" who are in straitened circumstances. They are hardly able to procure the bare necessaries of life, and have nothing laid by for a "rainy day." They find that in this case "where there's a will there's a way."

Now let every one who is in arrears hasten to pay up his part of the $10,000 due the Crisis, and thus alleviate this perplexity.

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES.

J. S. WHITE.

Bro. Daniel Churchill says, "Will Bro. White inform us if the daily sacrifice in Dan. 12: 11 is the same as in 8: 11, and 11: 31?"

It is the same. It is the "daily" in every place. If it had meant one thing in one place, and another thing in another place, the angel must have explained it to Daniel, to make him understand it. The angel gave Daniel no explanation of the daily. The reason of this is very plain. Before the angel used the word in his explanation of the vision, he said to Daniel—"Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days." Daniel's people had a daily sacrifice. It was a sacrifice "day by day"; "a continual burnt offering." Paul calls this offering a daily sacrifice. That was to be taken away from Daniel's people. It was one of the things that was to befall them.

I said in my article that the power which took away the daily, was the power which placed the abomination which maketh desolate. 11: 31—"And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice; and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." The sanctuary was the place where Daniel's people worshiped. The daily was their sacrifice, which they daily offered in the sanctuary. The abomination was to be placed in their sanctuary in the place of their sacrifice. As the removing of the daily was to affect Daniel's people, so the placing of the abomination was to affect them, and could have no reference to the Gentile church. This had been previously shown Daniel in chapter 9: 26, 27—"And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate." See margin.

The abomination was to make the city and sanctuary where the Jews, or Daniel's people, worshiped, desolate, until the consummation. This was so plainly stated to Daniel, that the Savior could well say, "When ye see the abomination spoken of by Daniel the prophet, whoso readeth let him understand." The city and sanctuary were to be made desolate by abominations until the time comes for that which is determined to be poured upon the desolater. Can any thing be more plainly stated?

In keeping with this plainness, Jesus said—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The length of time for the abomination, or abominations, is limited only by the time for that which is determined to be poured upon the desolater, as the angel states it; and by the fulfillment of the times of the Gentiles as the Savior states it. Therefore I do not believe that the 1290 days measure the length of time for the abomination to continue. From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away to set up the abomination that maketh desolate, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. I take the marginal reading. This time comes in between taking away the daily and placing the abomination that maketh desolate; when once placed it is to remain to the consummation, or until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. How long this time is, is another question, which is not necessarily included in anything I have said.

Bro. Churchill asks—"Was the abomination set up at the same time the daily sacrifice was taken away; viz., at the destruction of Jerusalem? And did the 1290 days commence there? If so, what event marked the ending of those days?"

I cannot answer these questions without involving the whole question of the prophetic periods. If I give my view of the 1290 days, I must, to be consistent, notice the "time, times, and a half," and also the 1335 days; which I am willing to do if requested.

THE 1290 AND 1335 DAYS.

BRO. GRANT:—I see in L. T. Cunningham's remarks on the 1290 years of Daniel, he says the events of the French Revolution, culminating in the humiliation of the papacy in 1798, are of a character of sufficient magnitude to mark the close of the 1290 years, which is precisely the view that Father Miller preached thirty years ago, which brought the 1335 to a close in 1843. He says that seventy-five years from this date, that is, 1798, will bring us to the end of the 1335 years. You can easily perceive his mistake; for 1290, and forty-five years, make 1335. His seventy-five years would make 1365 instead of 1335. So you see that the 1260 and 1290 must start at the same point, and that will bring the 1290 in 1828; and the forty-five years added to the 1290 from this date, 1828, make the 1335 years, which will end in 1873.

Dan. 12: 11, 12, reads—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." If the 1290 is a part of the 1335, it leaves only forty-five to make the whole number. If papacy is the abomination that was set up, and the year 538 the correct date of its being set up, the 1290 must run till 1828, and the 1335 end in 1873. We find that the numbers could not commence at the taking away of the daily, which was in 508, because the 1335 would end in 1843; therefore we are compelled to start from the setting up of the abomination, 538. That is the last and only starting point that I can see we have any hold on.

If the dates above are correct, and papacy is the abomination that is spoken of by Daniel, the 1335 cannot go beyond 1873. For myself, I cannot see anything in the shape of dates or figures beyond 1873. As for any great events to take place as proof of the ending of the 1290 years, the angel does not give us a hint of any, although it is natural to suppose that some great event might take place, to note the ending of so important a number. Now the 1260 years being the length of time that the saints were given into the hands of this persecuting power, it is natural to expect and look for some great event to take place that would release them from his power at the end of the 1260; and here we find the judgment set under Napoleon I. They took away his dominion, broke his power to consume and destroy it unto the end, and from that time, 1798, his power has been decreasing until the present time. Where is his temporal power or dominion now? Gone, never to return. Yet he will prevail or fight against the saints, by his spiritual power, until the Ancient of days comes; then he will be destroyed by the brightness of the coming of the Lord. ROBERT T. PRICE.

Elizabeth, N. J.

REMARKS ON THE ABOVE.—Bro. Price misapprehends my position. It is true I agree with Bro. Miller, that the 1290 years commence in A. D. 508, and the 1260 in 538, and both end together in 1798. But do not date the 1335 days in 508, as Bro. Miller did, but date them in 538, when the abomination that maketh desolate was set up; therefore end the 1335 days in 1873. If each of these periods are to be dated in 538, when the abomination was set up, we can see no reason for the number 1290 being given. 1260 would have been all that was necessary to measure the history of the abomination (or the papacy), from the period of its being set up, in 508, to 1798 (the period of its supremacy). We understand the taking away of the "daily" (or paganism) was one event, and the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate another; that the taking away of the one, and the setting up of the other, were not simultaneous events; therefore the 1290 do not commence with the 1260, but both of these periods end together in 1798; while the 1335 and the 1260 commence together, in 538; thus ending 1260 in 1798, and the 1335 in 1873.

We understand that paganism was taken away in 508; but the papacy was not "set up" till 538; making thirty years between the two events. This view makes harmony of the periods, while the view that ends the 1290 in 1828 disjoints them, and does not agree with the conditions of the prophecy.

HO! TO THE CONFERENCE.

Our brethren at Worcester have given a cordial invitation to all that feel interested, to come together at their place of worship, Tuesday, Feb. 6th, at two o'clock P. M., to continue through the week (see "notice" in another column), to examine the evidences relating to the time of the Lord's coming. We regard this as a very important meeting, and its importance cannot be overestimated, if we are within a few months of the judgment of the great day. Our action should affect the interests of millions of the inhabitants of the earth; therefore the sooner we understand our special duty in giving a distinctness to the proclamation—"Behold he cometh," the quicker we shall move in a direction that will tell the most effectively in arousing the slumbering virgins, and the vast myriads of earth's population, that they may see the storm cloud coming in season to take shelter in the "rock," lest they be swept down to perdition.

No language can describe the importance of the work before us, and which God calls upon us to do. There are terrible responsibilities resting upon us who believe in Christ's immediate coming, and they must be met and discharged, if we would gain the approval of Christ, and be welcomed by him in the day of his coming. Awful scenes are just before us. The world is being stirred, and is preparing for the last final struggle. Satanic elements are manifesting themselves everywhere, hurrying on multitudes to their awful work, and the earth is being filled with violence; and all flesh (as in the days before the flood) is corrupting its way upon the earth, and the wickedness of man is great. Every feature that was to mark the last days is strikingly manifest everywhere. Is it not time now for the waiting church to understand and apply the great chronological measurements that reach to the resurrection and consummation given us in the word of God? Then let the ministers of Christ awake, especially to the importance of this subject, that they may be prepared to give the household "meat in due season."

Let all prepare themselves to come to this conference, to learn the mind of God as given in the teachings of his word. Let earnest prayer ascend to the throne of grace, that the special blessing of God may attend this meeting; that he will vouchsafe unto us the Holy Spirit in a special manner, to enlighten and unfold to us those "deep things" revealed in his holy word. Receive this word of counsel, ye servants of Christ, in view of your responsibilities to the household of faith, and to an unbelieving world just sliding into perdition. Amen. Your Bro. in Christ,

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

RESULT OF CENTURIES OF CULTURE.—The successive editions of WEBSTER'S Unabridged are as perennial in interest as in value. Each successive reprint finds the work of our great lexicographer still unrivaled among English dictionaries. In each republication we likewise find a mirror of the scientific progress of the age, a sleepless vigilance which nothing escapes, to catch every new shade of verbal significance, and to retain for our unapproached standard of language that freshness which preserves it from ever becoming old. In the 1,840 pages before us there are compressed the results of centuries of culture, and the sum of the intellectual contributions of some of the greatest minds of the race. Whether regarded as a whole, or in detail, the book is equally marvelous. Its illustrations are copious, appropriate, and carefully executed. The matter in the appendix is of a character indispensable for reference to all who read, and to all who write with serious purpose. The book is, in short, one which neither school nor study, library or office, ought to be without.—New York Times.

Correspondence.

From Sr. C. Tuller.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—The Saturdays give me a little leisure, and I snatch a few minutes to-day to tell you how I am getting along. In the midst of temptations and doubts, which the adversary is continually hurling, and the struggles which every teacher among this people experiences, I am still holding on to the "Guiding Hand." The question oft arises in mind, Is it duty in these last days to encounter the labor, perplexity, and expense, required to sustain a well organized school? The response quickly comes, If you leave, what will become of these few sheep in the wilderness? I have now nearly forty scholars, several young men and women in earnest to learn to read correctly, and understand arithmetic, etc. Bright lads and lassies, restless as our own dear ones, and just as capable of cultivation, throng my room.

I know there are many among our people who ask—"Will this work pay, when time is so short?" The answer of my own heart is, whatever I would do for my own darling, in the way of mental cultivation, I should do for these; and if it will pay for him, in keeping his mind from idleness and strolling about, it will pay for these. For in making prominent in school the great principles of christianity, some seed by the blessing of God will be sown, and will bring forth some fruit. A prominent man, who has ridiculed me and my work not a little, said the other day, to one who has been as a sister to me—"Well, Mrs. Tuller certainly has improved the darkies." He could see no higher power at work. But the simple admission that improvement was visible, gratified me. I cannot speak so encouragingly of the religious interest as I could last winter, although there are several of my scholars, and of the people who were baptized, who still adorn their profession. One of my girls, a beautiful octoroon, sleeps in Jesus, I trust. The change in her was apparent, and she went down calmly and quietly.

The church has been greatly disturbed by sectarianism; some for Paul, and some for Apollos, causing jars and discords, not unlike what we have experienced in our own Advent churches even, and which I have always seen more or less in all churches, but which have always brought leanness and grieved away the Spirit. But I believe God has a few children here, and I hope for better things. I have ever exhorted them to union and love, so as to be ready for the marriage supper, near at hand.

I consider the ignorance of this poor people. Not one of the adults here can read the Bible intelligently. Some of them have picked out a chapter here and there, and a few hymns, and read them so many times that they can almost repeat them. I read to them from our papers often, which seems to delight them. God will know just what to do with the race. It is for me to know my duty. The impression upon my mind is—"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might"; and watch the indications of Providence. He will direct.

The late gift from our Society enabled me to make a poor old slave more comfortable. I spent over ten dollars for his beds, which were unfit for a human being. Two years ago next April, the last days of his wife were soothed by gifts from friends, and coffin provided. Since then, he has been unable to earn, with his two young children, more than to just live, and clothing and bedding are in tatters. I think he is a christian, though imperfect. He understands the coming kingdom and restitution, and rejoices in the hope. I have made his family as comfortable as means would allow. If any one feels a duty to such poor old ones, and has a mite to send for clothing, I will faithfully apply.

Another pitiable case I will speak of. An old man over eighty must be turned out, homeless, unless some one pities. He bought his freedom several years before the war. Then he was accused, and unjustly too, of helping slaves away, and was thrown into the Penitentiary, and from hardships endured there, has suffered much since. But when out, by industry he got a team and wagon, and took land and managed to live well. Three years ago he leased a new piece of land from a rich man, who encouraged him that it should be a home for life; but by the intrigue of a white man he is ordered off, and he is now feeble and unable to do but little. Added to this, the other day he let a neighbor white man take his best horse, worth a hundred dollars, and he by carelessness let him run away, which caused his death. His team and wagon and cow were all he owned. I have arranged for him to occupy an acre of ground for two years; but he has nothing to build with, or nothing of account. Thirty dollars would put him up a comfortable cabin, that would make his last days comfortable. Are there not some of our people that can retrench a little more, and put the littles together and help this poor old soul? His wife works out three and four days in a week, and keeps two homeless children (not her own) comfortable. They both claim to be christians and have a good name. When these poor ones can manage a farm, there are enough glad of their labor; but when they can no longer work hard, there is no home for them. One thing we have to comfort us—"There is room enough in Paradise for all a home!"

The Christian, Crisis, Banner, and Woman and her Work, are still received thankfully, and loaned among white people.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—From A. A. M. Society, by G. T. Adams, $25. E. Treadwell, $6, Ella Treadwell, Chicago, gift of clothing and papers. A Christmas gift from my son Baxter, $5, and a paper of tea and butter. I forgot to say that the remainder of the gift of the Society enables me to keep a young orphan girl, without home, through the winter, in hopes of fitting her for teaching. Also papers and tracts from J. Eaton, O. To the household I tender love and gratitude. May God grant me a home with them in the kingdom.

West Point, Ky., Jan. 19th, 1872.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. E. D. KENTFIELD writes:—"I notice in the Crisis that there are some $10,000 due the Office. This is not as it should be. If those who are owing are able to pay their indebtedness, they are not doing as they would be done by, and certainly not obeying the injunction to 'owe no man anything.' Brethren and sisters, you who are owing, can you not make some sacrifice in some way, either in manner of living, in articles of table use, in dress, or do away with your tea, coffee, or tobacco, or anything you can do without, and thus pay the Lord's demands and not rob him in tithes or offerings? I have been in arrears for my paper, and I have made the sacrifice I speak of, and am thus going to pay for it. Let us try and do this, and thus replenish the treasury of the Lord, and help more fully to spread the glad news of salvation and of our soon coming King. Will the Lord hold us guiltless if we do not? If any are careless about it, be so no longer. The Lord is coming. Let us be found doing justly."

C. C. MARSTON writes from Elida, Ill.:—"The Lord is giving us great success in this place in spreading the present truth. There never had been an Advent sermon preached in all this country until I came here. At first much opposition was manifested. Many came the first night resolved 'to go once and satisfy themselves that it was all a humbug.' But by coming once they could not stay away. Many in and out of the church are seeing and believing the truth. A deep solemnity rests upon the people, and many are almost persuaded to give their hearts to the Lord. Pray for us."

BRO. J. A. CLEAVELAND writes:—"The Lord is doing a good work here in Morrisville. Souls are being converted to him. Glory to God."

SCOTT. Died Jan. 13th, 1872, of typhoid pneumonia, Elviretta Jane Scott, daughter of Wm. and E. J. McJunkin, and wife of Wm. Scott, of Nevada, O., aged twenty-five years.

She professed faith in Christ in 1867, and was immersed into his name for the remission of sins that were in the past, and for the hope of the resurrection of the just by faith unto eternal life. She sleeps in Jesus, but leaves a little son and two daughters, with husband, father, brother, and numerous relatives and friends to mourn her premature death, but who sorrow not as those who have no hope. Her funeral was attended by a numerous concourse, when words of comfort and admonition were spoken by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13. G. W. STETSON.

FLANDERS. Died in Warner, N. H., Jan. 12th, 1872, of consumption, James G. Flanders, aged forty years and four months.

He experienced religion a few weeks before his death. The hope of a resurrection to life again afforded him sweet consolation in his last hours. He leaves a wife and children to mourn his loss, but they sorrow not as others which have no hope. Words of comfort spoken by D. W. Davis, from Ps. 30: 5. J. E. N.

AINSWORTH. Died in Hardwick, Dec. 31st, 1871, my dear father, Jabez Ainsworth, aged eighty-five years and six months.

The subject of this notice made a public profession of faith in Christ about fifty years ago. Within six years both my parents have fallen asleep. But we mourn not as those that have no hope. They believed in the soon coming of Christ to establish his kingdom here upon this earth, and to give reward to his waiting people.

JOHN E. AINSWORTH.

HIMES. In Winona, Minn., Jan. 17th, 1872, Edwin T. Himes, aged thirty years and six months.

His remains were taken to Buchanan, Mich., his father's home, where he was buried Jan. 24th, the services being conducted by Eld. D. Mathewson, assisted by D. R. Mansfield and James Nerriss. W. L. H.

DOW. Peacefully fell asleep in Christ, Dec. 26th, at Effingham, N. H., Sr. Julia V., daughter of Harrison and Fanny F. Dow, aged nineteen years and nine months.

Her last words were—"Good by, father, till Jesus comes." She sleeps, but not forever.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LISBON, Jan. 26. The mail steamer from Rio Janeiro brings news of a terrible steamship disaster. Steamer America, plying between Rio and Montevideo, while on her trip from the latter port on the night of the 22d took fire. The flames spread with great rapidity and the vessel was soon burned to the water's edge. A large number of passengers were on board, of whom eighty-seven were burned to death or drowned.

SLAVES EMANCIPATED.

The Empress Dowager of Brazil has freed all her personal slaves.

PARIS, Jan. 26. All the places of business will be closed on the 28th inst., anniversary of the capitulation of Paris.

The Bonapartist agents are very active in the army, and are distributing pamphlets, urging the restoration of the Empire as the ending of all the woes of France. Copies were found in the barricades and seized by the police.

A new national federation on the Communists' basis is organizing in Paris.

MADRID, Jan. 26. A stormy scene followed the reading of the decree of dissolution in the Cortes. The House seemed to be taken by surprise, and the members were unable to conceal their indignation. Passionate speeches were made, which were answered with derisive cries by a few supporters of the Ministry. One Deputy exclaimed: "The time has come for barricades." The greatest uproar and confusion followed, amid which the sitting was declared at an end.

It appears that the King finally refused to accept the resignation of the Ministry tendered by Sagasta, and a decree dissolving the Cortes was issued in consequence.

The people generally sympathize with the Deputies and demand the retirement of the present Government. The King is urged to accept their resignations and immediately form a new cabinet. The agitation is very great in this city. Disturbances are feared and the troops are under arms.

LONDON, Jan. 25. In the storm of yesterday and the preceding night the rain-fall was extraordinary. The streams in the south of England overflowed their banks, and whole villages are deluged. Great damage has been done to property, especially in the Valley of the Severn, where the flood was wide-spread, and the devastation extensive. The Thames also rose above its banks, and the town of Windsor has suffered severely. The effects of the freshet were felt even in London. The upper portion of the city on the river was flooded, and the loss of property and interruption to business are quite serious.

ROME, Jan. 25. Notwithstanding the disinclination of the Pope to leave Rome, his adversaries are urging him to quit the city and establish the Holy See in some other locality.

FRANCE.

ANOTHER CONFLICT THREATENED.

LONDON, Jan. 27. [Herald special.] News has been received that a Republican uprising was organized throughout the south of France. A movement was ready in case Thiers' resignation resulted in the appointment of Aumale or McMahon Chief Executive. The Republicans keep the peace only subject to the Bordeaux arrangement. Any attemps of the Monarchists to absolve themselves from its obligations will be the signal for taking up arms. Gambetta made a journey south to have an understanding with the leaders. Supplies of money, arms, ammunition and all the necessaries of war were on hand, and all the preparations for a civil conflict made. The leaders have determined to continue these precautions against future possibilities.

THE POPE AND THE CZAR.

ROME, Jan. 28. The Pope yesterday granted an audience to Grand Duke Michael, brother of the Czar of Russia. This is regarded as an indication of reconciliation of the differences which have existed between His Holiness and the Czar. It is reported that the Pope will, in return for the permission to refill the vacant Polish Episcopal Sees, expressly sanction the adoption of the Russian language in the Roman Catholic churches of those provinces with the mixed population lying between Russia and Poland proper.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 29. Intelligence was received to-day of the total destruction by earthquake of Schmachie, a town of Transcaucasia. The shocks were very protracted and many lives were lost.

DISPERSION OF THE JEWS.—The Jews are now most numerous in the northern part of Africa between Morocco and Egypt. In the strip of Europe stretching from the Danube to the Baltic there are about 4,000,000; while in all Western Europe there are not 100,000 of them. This statement shows that the great mass of the Jews keep as near as may be to the Holy Land, ready to enter in and possess it whenever the summons they wait for comes. In Palestine itself, however, they are few and weak. There are colonies of them in Western Arabia, in Persia and the countries on the Euphrates. There are Jews in China, and in Cochin China there are both white and black Jews—the latter being proselytes. In all their dispersion the Jews retain their traditions, customs, and hopes, and though speaking nearly every language under the sun, are yet essentially one nation.

DOMESTIC.

THE GREAT SNOW BLOCKADE.

Omaha, Neb., Jan. 29. A train from the West, which left Laramie Station on Friday last, arrived at Cheyenne to-day. The road is reported to be again blocked between Cheyenne and Laramie. A train from the west passed Laramie this afternoon. There is a high wind and the snow is drifting at Rawlins. There are about two hundred cars of through freight here for the West.

VOLCANIC ERUPTION.

San Francisco, Jan. 29. Mount Hood, Oregon, is throwing out a dense column of smoke, indicative of active volcanic action.

COAL MINES ON FIRE.

The Bellingham coal mines are on fire and the flames are consuming the houses, etc., outside the shaft. The sea will be turned in to extinguish the flames.

CRIME ON THE RAMPAGE.—One of the periodical outbreaks of crime, so peculiar to New York, is upon us. The audacity and daring of burglars are unprecedented. The community are perfectly helpless. These desperadoes "go through" a block, as they call it, and the terrified inhabitants are only too glad if they are not pummeled to a jelly in their beds, gashed with knives or shot. It is really unsafe to walk any of the by-streets of Brooklyn or New York after ten o'clock. Five persons were assaulted in Brooklyn on one night, three of them robbed, and one of them so terribly beaten that he died next day. He was a professor of music. It is really unsafe riding in the cars at night, the conductors giving no assistance, if they are not in complicity with the desperadoes.—Cor. Journal.

TRICKY SPIRITUALISTS—A HUMBUG EXPOSED.—Mrs. Elizabeth Fuller, magnetic physician, appeared before Justice Ledwith, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, on Tuesday, and asserted that her watch had been stolen on the previous Saturday by Thomas Sproul, a young man living with a spiritual medium known as "Col. Gordon," at No. 406 Fourth avenue. The alleged thief was arrested and brought yesterday, before the Magistrate, by whom he was committed for trial at the General Sessions. Sproul vehemently denied the charge, and said that there was a conspiracy between Mrs. Fuller and Gordon to have him imprisoned because he had threatened to expose the humbug of their spiritual seances. He then narrated a somewhat curious history of his "spiritual" experience, as follows:

"I was a book-binder in Harpers; and one night about two months ago went to a seance at Gordon's, having long cherished the Spiritualist's belief; after the seance was over Gordon came up to me and said that I was his spiritual brother; then he put his arms around me and said my dead brother commanded me to sleep with him so that the spirits would not kill him; in about two weeks I consented to join him, and we have been together since; he had an altar erected in the room, and had a long white gown made; he charged people twenty-five cents admission, and when a sufficient number had come, he would stand up in the white robe, and, pointing to the altar, would say it was a spiritual magnet. Then he would read the Bible and make the people sing hymns. When this was done, the gas-lights were all put out except one over the altar, turned down very low. Lifting his robe, Gordon would approach the altar, and telling the people to take hold of hands, he would then show them what purported to be a spirit face—sometimes the 'spirit bride,' as be called it. A lady fainted away once when this was shown. The spirit face was painted upon card-board. He showed so many of the spiritual faces that people began to believe in him and crowded the room. Gordon told me that there was money enough in it for both of us to make our fortunes. Things went on swimmingly with us for over a month. I really thought myself that Gordon was a true medium for a long time. At last I watched him closely, and finally opened his trunk, and found in it twenty-five of the spirit faces. He got them down in Nassau street. I burnt the pictures up when I found the whole thing was a fraud, and told Gordon that I would leave him. He was very angry, as it spoiled a seance that night. I then wrote to the Banner of Light, exposing the whole thing, although I haven't seen my letter in it. Gordon begged of me to give up the pictures, as they were impressing the people with the fact that there were indeed spirits. Mrs. Fuller sent word to me to come and make her a call. I fell into the trap set for me and went there Saturday afternoon, and stayed there for three hours. I know nothing of her watch. Why did she wait until the next Tuesday afternoon before she made a complaint against me, when she says she discovered it had disappeared a few minutes after I left the house on Saturday? I assert that there is a conspiracy."—N. Y. Tribune.

Religious.

THE GOSPEL IN MADAGASCAR.

The London Missionary Chronicle gives an account of a meeting held some months ago of the Congregational Union of Imerina, a single province of Madagascar, covering less territory than many of our Congregational Associations. Yet the church in which the services were held, and which seats one thousand persons, was crowded, and the delegates present represented two hundred churches. The day was occupied with earnest discussions on various subjects, among which were the following: Character of Native Preachers; Church Discipline; Relation of the Church to the State; Deportment in the House of God; Marriage. The whole occasion, in the numbers and enthusiasm of those present, would compare favorably with some of our largest religious gatherings. In Madagascar most truly the blood of martyrs has proved to be "the seed of the church," and out of the fires of persecution there has arisen a church of such power and influence, such hopefulness and promise, as to astonish the Christian world, whose faith has been far too weak to anticipate results so great.

PREACHING IN PRAYER-MEETING.

A correspondent in the Congregationalist, this week, tells a little experience of his own, illustrative of a mistake which has dampened the fervor of more than one prayer-meeting. He had charge of a meeting a short time since, at which were present among the rest some young converts, of whom it was especially hoped that they would take part. The meeting was opened, and the usual invitation extended to all to speak and pray. A christian of forty years' standing was the first to accept the invitation. The old man announced his subject, "The importance of searching the Scriptures," and preached for about ten minutes on the wisdom of the Bereans. An attempt was made to remove the chill occasioned by his discourse by singing one verse of "Sweet Hour of Prayer." The next brother who arose delivered a short sermon on "the folly of backsliding. After that there was no use in attempting to rally the meeting. The young converts wanted to speak, but they could not preach, and after the preaching they thought it would not be appropriate to speak of their new found love, and their purpose to serve Christ. The story of the prayer-meeting, the counterpart of many others, is one that might be fruitful in good results if its lessons were heeded.

THE SABBATH IN JAPAN.

Mr. Clark, son of Rev. Rufus W. Clark, D. D., of Albany, sailed last October for Yokohama, in response to an advantageous offer he had received to teach natural science, French and English. On his arrival he found that the contract, prepared by the Imperial Government for him to sign, contained an article forbidding him to teach religion. This he utterly refused to consent to, and the prohibition was finally removed. His course is likely to effect much for the cause of religious liberty in Japan. He writes to the New York Evangelist a letter, conveying his impressions concerning the condition of matters there. The following is an extract:

"You can scarcely imagine the impressions of one from a Christian land at the first view of the heathenism of which he had so long heard but never seen before. There is no more Sabbath here than if the Ten Commandments were never written. The sounds of labor are heard in every direction, and sin and corruption abound in their worst forms. Instead of church bells, I hear ever and anon the deep, prolonged sound of the great bell of the heathen Temple, as it strikes to announce that another soul has entered to bow down to the idol. Instead of sacred music, I hear fire-crackers in an adjacent Chinese burying-ground, where worship is going on to the spirits of the dead. As I visited the temples of Yedo the other day and saw the hundreds of human beings prostrated before their images and calling upon their gods, it did seem to me the most pitiable sight I ever witnessed; and as I moved among the millions in the great capital of Japan, who never heard the name of Christ, it seemed too solemn to be true. Possibly I may become so accustomed to heathenism and its accompaniments as not to feel their painful reality, but I trust I may never lose the earnest desire to turn these poor deluded souls from their errors."

A NATIONAL CONVENTION is to be held in Cincinnati on the 31st inst., the object of which will be to promote a religious amendment of the Constitution. These are the propositions upon which the Convention will base its action:

1. A nation is the creature of God.
2. It is clothed with authority derived from God.
3. It owes allegiance to Jesus Christ, the appointed Ruler of Nations.
4. It is subject to the authority of the Bible, the special revelation of moral law.

In a denominational point of view, the Jews, and those Christians who do not accept the Bible "as the special revelation of moral law," will not be likely to accept the proposed amendment with a good grace.

In Brief.

——Three thousand deaths daily from hunger is the sad monotone Persia sounds in the ears of the civilized world, which hears but scarcely heeds. ——The noonday meetings at the rooms of the Christian Association, in Tremont Temple, continue to be full of interest. The attendance is large, and reports are daily heard from all parts of our land, as well as foreign countries. The singing at this meeting is always a leading feature, and is such as comes from the heart.——An apparatus has been invented to be attached to the keel of vessels to give warning of the proximity of icebergs. It is of such a nature that when the keel strikes a very cold stratum of water the alarm is sounded. The instrument will indicate the exact temperature of the water below the vessel at all times.——The movement in Spain for the organization of a National Evangelical Church has already enlisted the services and co-operation of one hundred priests who are tired of Ultramontanism.——Milwaukee is getting very short of water. The wells and cisterns are becoming exhausted, and a water famine prevails.——The immigration from Europe is likely to be heavier than ever the present year. Passages are said to be secured six or eight weeks in advance by all the sailing and steamship lines.——According to the Catholic Standard the Popes of Rome have been driven from their seats forty-five times, and twenty-seven times the brows of those who filled St. Peter's chair have been "enwreathed with the purple crown of martyrdom."

Notices.

TO THE SISTERS.—Sr. Herron needs a strong, capable, kind, Christian girl to help her; and while relieving her of care and responsibility, give her little girls a chance to rest and recover strength and health lost by the labors they have already been obliged to perform. The eldest is seriously threatened with spinal complaint, and has a chance to go into the country to recruit, whenever her place can be filled by any one else. The labor is not severe, and any reasonable person will be able to please and be pleased. If services can be given, they will be thankfully received; if not, compensation will be given. This I say on my own responsibility. Will some sister in Christ communicate with me immediately, giving particulars, and oblige all concerned?

Maplewood, Mass. E. P. WOODWARD.

A QUARTERLY session of the Mass. Conference will be held in Brimfield, Mass., to commence Feb 20th, 1872, evening, and continue through the week and over the following Sunday. Meetings morning, afternoon, and evening. This is a place where they need help. They have a Chapel, and give us an urgent invitation to meet with them in conference. All that attend will be welcomed and cared for. We hope the brethren in all that region will make an effort with sacrifice to attend the meeting. Come, if possible, at the commencement, and stay through. Let the preachers who can be present, that more interest may be given to the meeting. C. H. BARNES, Sec.

A SPECIAL CONFERENCE will be held in the Second Advent Chapel on Central St., Worcester, Mass., to commence on Tuesday, Feb. 6th, at two o'clock P. M., and to continue every day and evening through the week and over the following Sunday. The special object of this conference will be to examine the evidences relating to the time of the Lord's coming; to get more fully prepared for that event, and to lead sinners to Christ before he comes to close up the scenes of probation. A cordial invitation is extended to all, and especially to all the preaching brethren.

"The more that come with free good will,
Will make the banquet sweeter still."

By unanimous vote of the church.

DR. H. W. BUXTON, W. F. COLLIER, E. G. HIGGINS, } Committee.

☞ NOTICE is hereby given that the Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee have made arrangements with J. D. Swain to build tents for all who wish to hire them built the coming year. We recommend him as a good practical carpenter, who can be trusted with the business. All who wish his services, correspond with him immediately, as he can procure lumber at this season to better advantage. Address J. D. Swain, Portsmouth, N. H., Box 1445. J. COUCH.

THE SECOND quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held with the church at East Rochester, commencing Feb. 21st, at half past seven P. M., to hold over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is extended to all. Come, brethren, with the armor on.

T. W. PIPER.
J. G. SMITH.
C. H. FLETCHER.

THERE will be a protracted meeting in the Union meeting-house, at Little White Creek, Washington Co., N. Y., commencing at half past six o'clock, Tuesday evening, Feb. 13th. Brn. Pike and Flagg will assist in preaching the word.

R. L. HARRISON.

A PROTRACTED meeting in So. Rochester, N. H. (at the chapel) will commence Feb. 13th, at seven o'clock P. M. A general invitation is given to all to come and labor for sinners. Bro. Wells and others will be present to preach the word.

J. L. CHUTE.

A PROTRACTED MEETING will commence on Thursday evening, Feb. 1st, in North Carver, Mass., and hold over the Sabbath. A cordial invitation is given to the friends abroad to meet with us, and labor to save men from perishing. Bro. Mooney and Bro. and Sr. Boynton are intending to be with us to preach the word.

W. E. HATHAWAY.

HAVING completed my engagements with three churches, I am now at liberty to fill new calls more extensively, and devote my time to the work of an Evangelist and Missionary. As there are no means raised for that purpose, I hope those who wish my labors will write to me the prospects for good, and the interest to sustain, that I may arrange to save time and expense. Do not delay to write. Address Peter S. W. Deyo, Charles City, Iowa.

THE ADVENT CHURCH of Haverhill, Mass., have hired the Hall over the post office, Merrimac Street. Meetings three times on Sunday, and on Thursday evening. D. M. LEAVITT, Elder.

THE CHURCH in Clinton, Mass., is supplied with preaching the second Sunday of each month, for the present.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

☞ Appointments are advertised from TWO to THREE weeks in advance. Please notice.

CREATION AND REDEMPTION.

[illegible]

Thrilled the vast universe, the gracious word
Of will creative, and quickly from thence
Round the fair new-born earth were poured
Songs from the sacred haunts of praise,
Gushing from boundless depths, and whence
Each Son of Him the Highest tuned his lays,
Environing the earth, God's baptism of joy.
Man mingled in this cup a dread alloy;
Death's darkness brooded then earth's sunniest days;
Fair Mercy waved her wing the darkness o'er,
Rays from the heav'nly hills of Hope poured down,
Opened the way of life and peace once more.
'Mid the dim hours, as circling years rolled on,
A vision glad of light unwonted came.
Peace was the burden of the glorious theme;
Angelic visitants wrapped in glory's flame,
To wand'ring man were missioned to proclaim:
"In the highest to God the glory shall be,
Earth's Savior is born, and man may be free;
Now the powers of death in their strength may assail,
The great Prince of Life by his might shall prevail."
Come ye again as thus of yore,
Heaven's visitants to earth, sick, sad,
Ring out those joyous notes once more,
In all the world let man be glad.
Salvation heralded long since,
Time bringing to its consummation see;
Morn dawneth on this darkened earth,
Awakens man to heaven's birth,
Salvation cometh! man is free!

Christmas, Delavan, Wis.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Is the kingdom of God at hand? Is it near? Is it to be set up in the days of these kings? Luke 21: 31—"So likewise ye, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." These things have come to pass. This generation have witnessed them. And from this fact "men's hearts are failing them" wonderfully while looking after those things which are coming on the earth. The very last of these series of events have crowded themselves upon the present generation. The church long since began to look up and lift up its head, for its redemption is nigh at hand. This is of great importance and interest to those who understandingly pray—"Thy kingdom come." They feel an assurance almost to a certainty that they shall soon be welcomed to "inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world."

The question now is, Will the kingdom come in connection with Christ's coming? 2 Tim. 4: 1—"I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." Also Rev. 11: 15—"And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever." Then Dan 7: 13, 14—"I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Now here are Christ, Paul, John, Daniel, all testifying that the everlasting kingdom is in close proximity to Jesus' coming. There can only be time for the everlasting destruction of Christ's enemies; and that is in the end of this world—dispensation—by the fiery process which burns the tares, and is the perdition of ungodly men. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

Here is of necessity a new heavens and new earth. The holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, with bridal robes, "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." They now are introduced by the Bridegroom to the kingdom. It is the new earth. The first has passed away. How large the territory of this kingdom? Dan. 7: 27—"And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High." These quotations so connect truth and link it together, that no long space can be crowded between the old and new earth; between the kingdoms of this world, and our Lord's;—the sounding of the seventh angel brings the longed-for event.

To the questions—Is the kingdom of God soon coming? Do the signs say it is certainly so? Is it the kosmos under the whole heavens? Would it be near if we had to wait a thousand years after Christ comes? Then Christ's coming is near, but the kingdom is not,—we say, They are of the utmost importance in their relationship to each other. Is the old usurper, with all who have followed in this God-hating rebellion, to be burned up at the end of this age, when the sheep and goats are separated, and when it is said to "them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"? Is this so? or are we to have another millennium, in which the devil may make havoc, worry and destroy still?

To me, the Bible plainly teaches that Jesus at his coming delivers up "the kingdom to God, even the Father," and says, Father, I have done all I can to save fallen humanity; mercy is exhausted. He rises and shuts to the door. This brings me to the day of wrath, fire, perdition, judgment. The heavens are rolling together with a great noise, the elements melting "with fervent heat, the earth also." Here the old devil and all the younger train, with all the rebels against Christ's government, will be doomed to find their utter destruction; while the blood-washed throng of redeemed songsters will be obliged to say Amen, "Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." Then comes the shout—"Let us be glad and rejoice and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come." Here is the throne of David given by the Father to Jesus the Messiah. He commences his reign over the house of Jacob. It is to last forever and ever, and of his kingdom there is to be "no end."

This is paradise restored, now blooming in its primeval beauty. The righteous are dwelling in the new heavens and new earth. Peter's promise is fulfilled; the kingdom is given to the little flock; Jesus reigns on David's throne, and the rebels are destroyed, root and branch, his enemies made his footstool. The new earth under his control, he reigns from shore to shore, from the river to the ends of the earth. This must soon be realized. We believe, therefore speak.

Chelsea, Jan., 1872.

BEECHER explains that the reason he gave up pastorial visits was because the ladies kept him waiting so long while they were dressing. Besides, they all would talk of nothing but servants, children's ailments and family genealogies, until it got to be a trifle monotonous.

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 4.

R. S. WILLARD.

JOY IN NEW CHURCH RELATION—SOCIAL PRAYER THE OUTLEADING OF GRACE IN THE HEART—SATAN A DEADLY FOE, BUT A SURE DELIVERER.

We entered right into the blessed spirit of labor in the church. Husband and Dr. Samuel Tibbets were ordained and added to the number of its deacons, who loved and labored together as brethren, and took their turns in accompanying their pastor in his missionary work; while I was cordially invited to meet with the sisters in their social prayer, and other means of grace.

While in the Presbyterian church, I longed for social prayer. Finally it struck me that if I could meet with some sister in Christ, we might pray together. Not knowing any to whom I dared mention it, I opened my heart to my husband, who, through a circuitous avenue, helped me find the object of my search; and I was waited upon by Miss Mary, daughter of Dr. Wilson, who presented her mother's christian love, and disclosed the fact that there had been a female prayer-meeting at the house of her mother for the past twenty years, and that she would be most happy to have me attend. This was the first intimation to me of such a meeting there or elsewhere. Judge ye of my joy!

This meeting I attended regularly until I left the church, and was the only young person in attendance. This was the brightest spot in all my christian experience up to this time, and thus it continued for more than a year, when, through manifold temptations, Satan found footing even here, and made this too a place of trial. After changing my church relation, and for a time enjoying so greatly their liberty in the Lord; as if to prove to me that even this enjoyment was the direct gift from his hand, the Lord permitted the adversary to afflict me even here, until the cross became so heavy that I could not take it up, but even refused to close the meeting with prayer on being asked by Mrs. Cook, the wife of our pastor. This so afflicted me that I hastened to another room and wept bitterly, as did Peter, for I felt that I had denied my Lord. After all were dispersed, Sr. Cook found me and endeavored to administer words of comfort; but none could I apply. I left the house feeling that I never could return to it again without help from God; and I am happy to record that the needful help came in the following incident:

My father being trustee of the Commercial Hospital, took from it a boy of eight years to serve in his family. At the decease of my mother, he was given his choice to live with my sister or myself. He chose our home, and was now about eleven years of age. We had also taken a little motherless girl of eight years, which, in my inexperience, I found an unexpected task. I saw plainly that I must have new help from God for these new duties, or I should make my family miserable and bring disgrace upon my profession; consequently I was led to seek his help as one that must receive; and, bless his name, I did receive.

I had observed that immediately after family worship everything appeared more cheerful. I could speak more pleasantly to the children, and they obeyed more readily from love. It was therefore suggested, as I earnestly supplicated guidance, that immediately after breakfast and dinner I should spend a few minutes in reading a few verses of Scripture to the children, and pray with them, that the Lord would give me patience, and help them to be obedient to me, and kind to each other. With this arrangement the children seemed delighted, and we were greatly blessed together. It was the antidote for all our troubles. O bless God, what a burden was lifted from me as I entered into this "secret of the Lord."

But the adversary came near wresting from me this my strong hold from the ills which sin has brought into domestic life.

After a time a nephew of husband's from Vermont, aged fifteen years, was sent by his fond mother to make his home with us; he assisted his uncle in the drug store. But the time came for him to enter school, and this left him at the house at the time of prayer with the children. What must I do? I could not pray before Samuel! Must I give up this season? I dare not. There sat Samuel, little knowing he was the source of trial, and the children looking at me to know what to do. Fierce was the conflict in my breast. For a moment courage failed me. I yielded the point and started to leave the room; but at the door was a desk, and upon it lay a testament; instinctly I opened it. The parable of the vineyard let out to unfaithful husbandmen met my eye; and while reading it the Holy Spirit made this application:—These children are your vineyard; will you yield the fruit to God in its season and secure the blessing? or will you not? decide now. I answered, I will; and the victory was mine. I instantly turned and acknowledged to Samuel what I had been accustomed to do with the children, and invited him to join us. By this time we were all in tears. I read the parable (Mark 12: 1–9), and had great liberty in talking; and when we knelt to pray words flowed with my breath, and no thought of embarrassment crossed my mind.

That very afternoon was the returning weekly prayer-meeting, that had been such an intolerable dread; but now I could scarcely wait the hour of its arrival. The room was well filled. Sr. Cook now opened her burdened heart; said she had often called upon every sister in the room to open the meeting with prayer, and all had refused; she thought it best to discontinue the meeting if there was not greater interest. She then turned to me and requested that I open the meeting by prayer. I dropped upon my knees and opened my mouth, and the same blessed unction of the morning was upon me; all fear was gone, and only love to God and love to man filled my soul; and so great was the blessing upon us all that five prayers followed ere we rose from our knees—the first time there had been anything like it among us. O it was a heavenly visitation! We all thanked God and took courage.

I scarce need add that the meetings were not discontinued. This was a blessed victory for me; and as real as any ever won on the field of carnal strife; and far more lasting than many, for the years that intervene have only confirmed the triumph.

"March boldly on, my joyful soul,
Soon, soon shall thy journey end;
Swiftly the moments of sorrow roll,
And they bear thee to Christ, thy friend.
This heavenly peace within thy heart,
When the trial is done doth remain,
Is the earnest rich of that better part
When thy Lord shall come again."

— One of the most important rules of the science of manners is to maintain an almost absolute silence in regard to ourselves.

FOREVER WITH THE LORD.

The prayer of Jesus, when about to leave the world and return to the Father, was, that his followers might be with him and behold his glory. He had, however, just before assured them that they could not follow him to the place where he was going. Sorrow filled their hearts. The thought of separation from their heavenly friend was more bitter than death. Jesus' loving heart was tenderly sympathetic, for his truly divine nature was affectionately attached to the humble followers who had continued with him in his temptations. Accordingly he told them of a future meeting in the many mansions of his Father's house, to take place when he should come again.

Slowly the apostles learned that they were not to appear with Christ in glory till his second coming. The Holy Spirit instructed them that the redeemed were, like their Lord, to be made perfect through sufferings; and ages of tribulation must pass to train, discipline, and purify, a countless multitude to become a spotless bride for the heavenly Bridegroom. It also taught that death must dissolve these abject, corruptible, mortal, *soulual bodies, of earthy image and nature, that, through a resurrection, it might transfuse the attributes of its own divine nature, glory, power, incorruptibility and immortality into the spiritual bodies of heavenly form and structure.

The fitness of things requires a heavenly Jerusalem. The heavenly Husband must wed a heavenly Bride. The marriage union is for everlasting duration. That death may never wreathe the symbol of bereavement and mourning around the Savior's brilliant crown, the virgin bride must be deathless. While absent from the Lord, her history is a record of lives of toil, privation, pain, sickness, and death. Often the prison, the rack, and fiery stake, made her a desolation on earth. From the beds of pain, and the agonies of martyrdom, death alone gave her a retreat into his chambers of wasteness, where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest. At length she becomes complete in members, and perfect in character. Through the great tribulation she has wended her sorrowful journey to the grave. The last remnant, those left over to the end, are nearing its gloomy portals, when all at once, she is made immortal, and rapt away to meet her coming Lord, and be forever with him.

Forever with the Lord. It is to go through the gates of pearl, and find a home within the walls of precious gems that enclose the city of God.

Forever with the Lord. It is to be where tears are wiped from all faces, where there is no more pain, and where there is no more death.

Forever with the Lord. It is to walk amid the groves of the tree of life, along the river of life, in the paradise of God.

Forever with the Lord. It is to enjoy the exceeding, great and eternal weight of glory.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

JOHN WESLEY.

HOW KNOW?

Q. What is reasonable proof? How may we certainly know one that is saved from all sin?

A. We cannot infallibly know one that is thus saved (no, nor even one that is justified), unless it should please God to endow us with the miraculous discernment of spirits. But we apprehend these would be sufficient proofs to any reasonable man, and such as would leave little room to doubt either the truth or depth of the work: 1. If we had clear evidence of his exemplary behavior for some time before his supposed change. This would give us reason to believe he would not lie for God, but speak neither more nor less than he felt. 2. If he gave a distinct account of the time and manner wherein the change was wrought, with sound speech which could not be reproved; and, 3. If it appeared that all his subsequent words and actions were holy and unblamable.

The short of the matter is this:—1. I have abundant reason to believe this person will not lie. 2. He testifies before God—"I feel no sin, but all love; I pray, rejoice, and give thanks without ceasing; and I have as clear an inward witness that I am fully renewed as that I am justified." Now, if I have nothing to oppose to this plain testimony, I ought in reason to believe it.

It avails nothing to object.—"But I know several things wherein he is quite mistaken." For it has been allowed that all who are in the body are liable to mistake; and that a mistake in judgment may sometimes occasion a mistake in practice (though great care is to be taken that no ill use be made of this concession.) For instance: even one that is perfected in love may mistake with regard to another person, and think him in a particular case to be more or less faulty than he really is. And hence he may speak to him with more or less severity than the truth requires. And in this sense (though that be not the primary meaning of St. James), "In many things we offend all." This therefore is no proof at all that the person so speaking is not perfected in love.

Q. But is it not a proof if he is surprised or fluttered by a noise, a fall, or some sudden danger?

A. It is not; for one may start, tremble, change color, or be otherwise disordered in body, while the soul is calmly stayed on God and remains in perfect peace. Nay, the mind itself may be deeply distressed, may be exceeding sorrowful, may be perplexed and pressed down by heaviness and anguish, even to agony, while the heart cleaves to God by perfect love, and the will is wholly resigned to him. Was it not so with the Son of man himself? Does any child of man endure the distress, the anguish, the agony, which he sustained? And yet he "knew no sin."

Q. But can any who have a pure heart prefer pleasing to unpleasing food? Or use any pleasure of sense which is not strictly necessary? If so, how do they differ from others?

A. The difference between these and others in taking pleasant food, is, 1. They need none of these things to make them happy; for they have a spring of happiness within. They see and love God. Hence they "rejoice evermore, and in every thing give thanks." 2. They may use them, but they do not seek them. 3. They use them sparingly, and not for the sake of the thing itself. This being premised, we answer directly, such a one may use pleasing food without the danger which attends those who are not saved from sin. He may prefer it to unpleasing though equally wholesome food, as a means of increasing thankfulness, with a single eye to God, "who giveth us all things richly to enjoy;" on the same principle he may smell a flower, or eat a bunch of grapes, or take any other pleasure which does not lessen but increase his delight in God. Therefore neither can we say that one perfected in love would be incapable of marriage, and of worldly business; if he were called thereto he would be more capable than ever; as being able to do all things without hurry or carefulness, without any distraction of spirit.

Q. But what does the perfect one do more than others; more than common believers?

A. Perhaps nothing; so may the providence of God have hedged him in by outward circumstances. Perhaps not so much (though he desires and longs to spend and be spent for God); at least not externally; he may neither speak so many words, nor do so many works. As neither did our Lord himself speak so many words, or do so many, no, nor so great works, as some of his apostles, (John 14: 12.) But this is no proof that he has not more grace.

Q. But is not this a proof against him—I feel no power either in his words or prayer?

A. It is not; for perhaps that is your own fault. You are not likely to feel any power therein, if any of these hindrances lie in the way: first, your own deadness of soul; the dead Pharisees felt no power even in His words who "spake as never man spake." Second, the guilt of some unrepented sin lying upon the conscience. Third, prejudice toward him of any kind. Fourth, your not believing that state to be attainable wherein he professes to be. Fifth, believing it to be ungodliness to think or own he has attained it. Sixth, overvaluing or idolizing him. Seventh, overvaluing yourself and your own judgment. If any of these be the case, what wonder is it that you feel no power in any thing he says? But do not others feel it? If they do, your argument falls to the ground. And if they do not, do none of these hindrances lie in their way too? You must be certain of this before you can build any argument thereon. And even then your argument will prove no more than that grace and gifts do not always go together.

"But he does not come up to my idea of a perfect christian." And perhaps no one ever did or ever will. For your idea may go beyond, or at least beside the scriptural account. It may include more than the Bible includes therein, or, however, something which that does not include. Christian perfection is pure love filling the heart, and governing all the words and actions. If your idea includes any thing more, or any thing else, it is not scriptural; and then no wonder that a scripturally perfect christian does not come up to it.

I fear many stumble on this stumbling block. They include as many ingredients as they please, not according to Scripture, but their own imagination, in their idea of one that is perfect in love; and then readily deny any one to be such who does not answer that imaginary idea.

The more care should we take to keep the simple scriptural account continually in our eyes; pure love reigning alone in the heart and life, this is the whole of christian perfection.

Q. When may a person judge himself to have attained this?

A. When, after having been fully convinced of inbred sin, by a far deeper and clearer conviction than that which he experienced before justification, and after having experienced a gradual mortification of it, he experiences a total death to sin, and an entire renewal in the love and image of God, so as to "rejoice evermore," to "pray without ceasing," and "in every thing to give thanks." Not that "to feel all love and no sin," is a sufficient proof. Several have experienced this for a time, before their souls were fully renewed. None, therefore, ought to believe that the work is done, till there is added the testimony of the Spirit, witnessing his entire sanctification as clearly as his justification.

Q. But whence is it that some imagine they are thus sanctified, when in reality they are not?

A. It is hence; they do not judge by all the preceding marks, but either by part of them, or by others that are ambiguous. But I know no instance of a person attending to them all, and yet deceived in this matter. I believe there can be none in the world. If a man be deeply and fully convinced, after justification, of inbred sin; if he then experience a gradual mortification of sin, and afterward an entire renewal in the image of God; if to this change, immensely greater than that wrought when he was justified, be added a clear, direct witness of the renewal, I judge it next to impossible this man should be deceived herein. And if one whom I know to be a man of veracity testify these things to me, I ought not, without some sufficient reason, to reject his testimony.

Q. Is this death to sin and renewal in love gradual or instantaneous?

A. A man may be dying for some time, yet he does not, properly speaking, die till the instant the soul is separated from the body. . . . In like manner he may be dying to sin for some time, yet he is not dead to sin until sin is separated from his soul; and in that instant he lives the full life of love. And as the change undergone when the body dies is of a different kind, and infinitely greater than any we had known before, yea, such as till then it is impossible to conceive; so the change wrought when the soul dies to sin is of a different kind, and infinitely greater than any before, and than any can conceive till he experiences it. Yet he still grows in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ, in the love and image of God. . . .

Q. How are we to wait for this change?

A. Not in careless indifference or indolent inactivity; but in vigorous universal obedience, in a zealous keeping of all the commandments, in watchfulness and painfulness, in denying ourselves and taking up our cross daily, as well as in earnest prayer and fasting, and a close attendance on all the ordinances of God. And if any man dream of attaining it any other way (yea, or of keeping it when it is attained when he has received it even in the largest measure), he deceiveth his own soul. It is true we receive it by simple faith. But God does not, will not give that faith, unless we seek it with all diligence in the way which he hath ordained.

This consideration may satisfy those who inquire why so few have received the blessing? Inquire how many are seeking it in this way, and you have a sufficient answer.

Prayer especially is wanting. Who continues instant therein? Who wrestles with God for this very thing? So ye have not because ye ask not, or because ye ask amiss, namely, "That ye may be renewed before you die." Before you die! Will that content you? Nay, but ask that it may be done now, today! Do not call this "setting God a time." Certainly to-day is his time, as well as tomorrow. Make haste, man—make haste! Let

Thy soul break out in strong desire,
The perfect bliss to prove;
Thy longing heart be all on fire,
To be dissolved in love.

Q. But may we continue in peace and joy till we are perfect in love?

A. Certainly we may, for the kingdom of God is not divided against itself. Therefore let not believers be discouraged from rejoicing in the Lord always. And yet we may be sensibly pained at the sinful nature that still remains in us. It is good for us to have a piercing sense of this, and a vehement desire to be delivered from it. But this should only incite us the more zealously to fly every moment to our strong helper, the more earnestly to "press forward to the mark for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus." And when the sense of our sin most abounds, the sense of his love should much more abound.—Plain Account.

SYMPATHETIC WORKERS.—I heard a minister make an address that made me feel as if I had a hole in my back, and some one had dumped a load of corn-cobs on top of me. Every word grated. Not one syllable of the gospel did he know. Never be afraid of loving, yielding, or bearing too much, or of too tenderly considering the circumstances of the persons you address. All my youth I was brought up under an old minister. He carried a gold-headed cane, and was very dignified. I used to think he liked to bury people to get rid of them. I would as soon go to bed on an iceberg as tell him the troubles of my young heart. I would not open my heart to an unsympathizing person. If any one will love me, caress me, and coax me, he can do any thing in the world with me. Don't corrugate people or make them say, 'Oh, dear! there comes that woman again,' or, 'There's old John Thomas coming to talk to me about my soul!' An intelligent, sympathizing person will always find the door open. I have never been rejected in fifty years' experience. Don't drive a wedge in the broad end first.

I knew a young girl to whom I could trace twenty five conversions. Dudley, my son of blessed memory, owed his conversion to that girl. She was not twenty; she died at twenty-three. Young men contended for the privilege of going home with her, and her one attraction was that she talked with them about their souls, and about the Savior. Her elder sister went to a fireman's ball the evening she joined the church, but soon after she came and joined it too, and said, 'It is all dear E—— who has led me to Christ.'"—Dr. Tyng, in Liberal Christian.

— Power is not a stock in trade for us to hoard up within and dispense as we please. It is just the ability to do at the right moment what God requires of us.

— There are moments when the two worlds, the earthly and the spiritual, sweep by near to each other, when earthly day and heavenly night touch each other in twilight.

— He is the strongest and noblest man who is most obedient to God's law.

— The best, truest preaching, is very much like earnest, thoughtful talk.

— Errors, to be dangerous, must have a great deal of truth mixed up with them.

— For each one of us no business can be of more pressing moment, of more urgent importance, than the discovery of our besetting sin.

— Prefer loss before unjust gain, for that brings grief but once, this forever.

— Dr. Watts says the man who is gifted with the talent of parlor preaching, can do more good than the minister by public harangues and learned disquisitions.

— The plain duty of the happy is to help the suffering to bear their woe.

— He who thinks better of his neighbors than they deserve, cannot be a bad man, for the standard by which his judgment is formed is the goodness of his heart.

CHRISTMAS SONG.

AIR.—I saw a christian traveler.

E. A. LIBBY.

Within a stable manger a little babe once lay;
His parents there were strangers—no better place had they.
But list! I hear sweet music, it rings o'er Bethlehem's plain,
Hosanna in the highest, peace and good will to men.
CHO.—Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Christ is born, the angels say.
Beside his lowly cradle the gentle mother staid,
And in heart she pondered the words the angel said.
The lowing of the oxen, the bleating of the sheep,
Was the discordant music that lulled the babe to sleep.
While in that humble stable wise men unto him came,
And in their hearts they worshiped the dear Redeemer's name;
And in their hands they brought him frankincense, gold and myrrh;
The Father he had sent them, guided by a bright star.
But not all unmolested could that sweet infant lay,
For wicked men had purposed his life to take away.
The cruel Herod's edict was sent throughout the land,
And many little children were slaughtered by his hand.
O, there was weeping, wailing, mothers their children mourned,
But God unto them promised again they should return;
He warned the faithful Joseph while on his bed he lay,—
Arise! and take the young child, to Egypt flee away.
The child increased in wisdom, in years and stature grew,
Obedient to his parents, no sin he ever knew;
He had a sacred mission—this sin-cursed earth to save;
That we might shun perdition, his precious life he gave.
Homeless, despised and weary, he toiled to save mankind;
He raised the dead and dying, gave sight unto the blind.
In dark Gethsemane's garden in agony he prayed,
Judas, the bold deceiver, his master there betrayed.
With piercing thorns they crowned him on Calvary's rugged brow;
Father, he prayed, forgive them, they know not what they do.
He died, and he was buried in Joseph's own new tomb,
But God unlocked the prison, and robbed death of its gloom.
To heaven he ascended, and on his Father's throne
He sits our mediator till he again shall come.
He says he will not tarry, the world proclaims him nigh,
His people then for gladness hosanna loud will cry.
CHO.—Hallelujah! Hallelujah! Christ will come, the angels say.

East Rochester, N. H.

"I. H. S."

"Mamma," said little Angeline, "please tell me what the letters I. H. S. stand for."

"What makes you think of those letters just now?"

"Why, this morning, when we were at Uncle George's church, I saw them in the centre of one of the beautiful stained-glass windows."

"Did you never see them anywhere else, my dear?"

"Yes, mamma; I have sometimes seen them in books; and once I saw them stamped in gold on the cover of a hymn-book."

"Well, my child, what do you think they mean?"

"Dear mamma, I can not tell. Jennie Dove once said that they were the first letters of the words, 'I have suffered,' as if the Savior spoke in that way to us, to remind us of what he has borne for our sakes."

"While that, my dear, would be a most precious lesson, still it does not express the meaning of those letters. They stand for three Latin words, used as an old Christian motto,—'Jesus Hominum Salvator,'—which mean, 'Jesus, the Savior of men.' They remind us of a very great and precious truth. Jesus is our Savior, and our only Savior; and without him we could not be saved at all. Let us never fail to trust and hope in Jesus, the Savior of men."—Lutheran S. S. Herald.

"THAT'S HOW."—After a great snow storm, a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow bank, before his grandmother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

"How do you expect to get through that drift?" asked a man that was passing along.

"By keeping at it," said the boy, cheerfully, "that's how!" That is the secret of mastering almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it. Do not keep thinking how large or how hard it is, but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller and smaller until it is done.

If a hard lesson is to be learned, do not lose a breath in saying, "I can't" or "I do not see how," but go at it, and keep at it. Study. That is the only way to conquer it. If a fault is to be cured, or a bad habit broken up, it cannot be done by merely being sorry, or only trying a little. You must keep fighting it, and not give up fighting until it is got rid of.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

GETTING RESTED EVERY DAY.

Every person who would live well should get so thoroughly rested once every twenty-four hours as to feel bright, fresh, active, and strong. Many do not do this, but go on feeling tired, overworked, ill at ease, sick, never at rest from morning till night. No course could be worse. If a man wishes to last a reasonable number of years on this globe, and live in peace and comfort, he should get rested every day of his life. Many resort to stimulants, when they had better go to bed and sleep. Sleep does not always come easily. The brain sometimes loses the power to stop thinking when the proper hour arrives for sleep, but keeps on, like the heart, aching involuntarily. How can such people get sleep is one of the most important questions they can consider. Shall they resort to chloral hydrate, morphine, tobacco, or as some do, to ale, beer, or other alcoholic drinks? We advise no person to take poisonous drugs on his own account, but there are agencies of great value, better for common daily use than all the drugs in the world, which every person can learn to use without harm to himself, providing he is reasonably intelligent. One of the agencies is water. A tepid sitz bath taken just before going to bed, of such a temper as shall be agreeable, is a beautiful sedative for many persons, preparing them for sleep that is sound and refreshing. It may be used for ten or fifteen minutes, or even longer if agreeable. It should be taken in a warm room, and such portions of the body as are not in the water well covered with a blanket.

Still another remedy, and often more convenient, is a mild current of electricity, continuing from five to thirty minutes. The positive pole may be held in one hand, or by means of a sponge placed over the stomach and abdomen, and moved about from point to point, while the negative pole may be placed at the feet. This is one of the best methods of producing a condition favorable to sleep that is known, and after a little study can be adopted by any one. Every house should have an electrical apparatus, for electricity carefully and wisely used has great value for many purposes. Still another agent, not yet very well understood, and one not to be advised except it can be given by those who know its use, is magnetism, by means of passes over the head, or simply holding the hands of the person to be influenced. Still another agent is a very short shower-bath, or a hot foot-bath, or holding the hands, if hot, in cold water; or if the hands are cool, holding them in hot water; or putting a cold wet compress over the abdomen. The two best remedies, however, are the sitz-bath at bed-time, and the use of electricity. Whatever is done should be done with judgment and care.

RHEUMATISM.

The immediate cause of all rheumatic affections is the lodgment of particles of foreign matter in the dense structures of the joints. These may be earthy, mineral, saline, or alkaline. Lime and ammonia are common bases of saline and alkaline matter which accumulate in and around the joints. In old gouty subjects these concretions form protuberances or "rings" around the joints of the fingers and toes. In some cases ulceration takes place and the part discharges carbonate of lime and other earthy ingredients.

All substances of a saline or earthy nature, which are not digestible and assimilable, tend to the formation of rheumatic and gouty obstructions; and when accumulated to the extent of seriously interrupting the circulation, the vital powers make a special effort to expel them. This remedial effort is rheumatism.

Where the obstruction happens to be greatest, the blood accumulates, and the part is red, hot, swollen, and painful. This is inflammation; hence all rheumatism is inflammatory. If the accumulation is great, and one or more large joints or several small ones are affected simultaneously, the whole system will be so disturbed that fever will co-exist; hence the term rheumatic fever, meaning a local inflammation of the joints and a constitutional febrile disturbance. Such being the nature of all rheumatic affections, the proper treatment—and that which has been invariably and promptly successful in the hands of all hygienic physicians, so far as I know—is not difficult to indicate.

The first attention should be given to the fever when that exists, for it is a rule that should never be forgotten by hygienists, that general treatment is always more important than local, in febrile diseases of all kinds. The fever should be managed according to the degree of heat; and the greater the heat of the surface the more frequently should it be bathed with tepid or cool water. The inflamed joints should be wrapped in cold, wet cloths covered with dry ones, and renewed as often as they become warmer than the normal temperature. They should be continued until the heat and swelling are permanently abated. The diet must be simple and abstemious, and when the fever is violent, no food should be taken, except a little gruel and baked apple, or something equivalent, once or twice a day, until the paroxysms subside. The bowels require no attention, save an enema or two of simple water.

GOOD HEALTH AS AN ELEMENT OF SUCCESS.

It is no exaggeration to say that health is a large ingredient in what the world calls talent. A man without it may be a giant in intellect, but his deeds will be the deeds of a dwarf. On the contrary, let him have a quick circulation, a good digestion, the bulk, thews, and sinews of a man, and the alacrity, the unthinking confidence inspired by these, and though having but a thimbleful of brains, he will either blunder upon success or set failure at defiance. It is true, especially in this country, that the number of centaurs in every community—of men in whom heroic intellects are allied with bodily constitution as tough as horses—is small; that in general, a man has reason to think himself well off in the lottery of life if he draws the prize of a healthy stomach with a mind, or prize of a healthy stomach without a mind, or a prize of a fine intellect with a crazy stomach.

But of the two, a weak mind in a herculean frame is better than a giant mind in a crazy constitution. A pound of energy with an ounce of talent will achieve greater results than a pound of talent with an ounce of energy. Wit, judgment, imagination, eloquence, all the qualities of the mind, attain with a vigorous constitution a force and splendor impossible without it. A mechanic may have tools of the sharpest edge and highest polish; but what are these without a vigorous arm and hand? Of what use is it that your mind has become a vast granary of knowledge, if you have not strength to turn the key?—Home and Health.

USE OF GERANIUM LEAVES.—It is not generally known that the leaves of a geranium are an excellent application for cuts, where the skin is rubbed off, and other wounds of that kind. One or two leaves must be bruised and applied to the part, and the wound will be cicatrized in a short time.

THE PROPHETIC PERIODS.—No. 7.

DANIEL 8th AND 9th CONSIDERED.

D. CLOW.

(Concluded.)

Now, in glancing back at the vision, I see the marvelous wisdom of our God in arranging the prophetic periods as they are. It was to cut off the hypocrite and scoffer from any participation in the saints' inheritance, and to draw out the latent christian elements in all that feel inclined to take God at his word and to put their trust in his dear Son.

At first view, it does indeed seem that all the smaller periods, i. e., the sixty-nine weeks, the sixty-two, and the one week, are to be reckoned in the seventy weeks; and here is where we stumbled in 1843. But the glory of God was there still, and I thank his holy name that I had common sense enough to hold on by faith to his precious promises.

That the seventy weeks (Dan. 9 : 24) reach to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in A. D. 65, there can be no mistake. Then to say that the sixty-nine weeks, reaching to the "Messiah the Prince," are to be reckoned in the said seventy weeks, is equivalent to a declaration that the true Christian era is about A. D. 58, or within one week of the destruction of Jerusalem. But all those periods have each their separate epochs. The seventy weeks begin with the pushing of the ram, B. C. 426. The sixty-nine weeks begin with the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, B. C. 488. The sixty-two weeks commence with the completion of the walls, B. C. 406. The one week commences when the Roman army entered into Judea, A. D. 65. And for these facts we are all indebted to our dear Bro. Thurman, who labored so many years to establish the chronology of biblical and historic events, upon the basis of astronomical science. We all owe him a debt that we never can pay, except in an open and frank acknowledgment of our indebtedness.

For many years a cloud of thick darkness hung around the "seventy weeks" and the "going forth of the commandment," in supposing that the epoch of the one was the beginning of the other. Uncompromising faith in Jeremiah's declaration that God would "accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem; and that after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place," told me that this was the point for the said commandment to go forth. But this would not harmonize with the old theory, and doubt and darkness was the result. But now, thank heaven, the whole thing is as clear as a bell, and 1875 will bring the promised rest. But oh, what a day of trouble lies between us and that eventful year!

Jerusalem was to be destroyed at the end of seventy weeks from the pushing of the ram to exterminate the Jewish nation, but which resulted in the total destruction of the Amalekite race. From that time onward to the end of the vision, desolation was to cover the land. Is not that the condition of that land to-day? "He shall confirm the covenant . . . for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate." How long? "Even unto the consummation." How long will it be to the said consummation? 1810 years. Has it been 1810 years since Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans? Let us see. It began to be desolated A. D. 65. Now add to this 1810, and we have 1875. Eighteen hundred years ago people might have said, and doubtless did say, when talking of the vision, and of the fulfillment of the seventy weeks just accomplished, it is a long time to the said "consummation"; the said desolation may not continue so long, and if not, the vision will be a failure. But we cannot talk after that style; we are living in the latter end of the said eighteen hundred years; and as we glance at the history of the past, we behold an unbroken field of desolation from that day to this, and the people themselves "scattered and peeled," to the great wonder and astonishment of the world.

Do you ask me why so few adopt our view of these things? I will tell you in as few words as possible. It is because it conflicts with their worldly interests. It is unpopular, and therefore degrading. They cannot afford to sacrifice even their social interests for the true christian character, only as it is tendered to them through the popular channels of mock-auction religion; here they meet with a cordial response to every species of worldly lust, and it suits them exactly. Everything of a godly character they ignore as too humiliating and burdensome; and they justify themselves by the brainless foppery of nominal christians. It is an easy matter for them to obtain recognition in any popular church, upon their own terms; and being totally ignorant of what constitutes the true christian character, they accept the general invitation to come in.

I know they may charge me with a censorious spirit, on purpose to justify themselves in their folly; but I have a right to protest against the unjust charge. The same charge would lie against the best men that have ever lived upon the earth. I do not merit their curses, nor do I crave their blessings. I have but one object in view, and that is to tell them to "repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." They may still smile at what they suppose is my folly. I pity them for their ignorance, and would save them, but my arm is too short. I cannot reach them.

But a few months more, and all will be over. Their fashionable folly will not save them. Their Shakspearean religion will not be recognized by the Judge. Their dreams of a short and easy transit into the stellary heavens will prove a great delusion. "And the songs of the temple shall be howling in that day." As it was in the days of Lot, and of Noah, so it is now; they are smiting their fellow servants, and eating and drinking with the drunken. Even now, the Lord is pleading with them in divers ways to abandon their sins, and to get ready for the judgment. His voice may be heard even in the stillness of the night, while in our wakeful moments, we meditate upon the awful grandeur and sublimity of passing events. But these do not disturb them, we know, because of their fancied security in the pale of a popular church, or within the vicinity of popular clerical influence. Do we not

> See them leading in the dance,
> And in the popular games of chance;
> Hear them muttering mournful prayers,
> Now they're chanting festive airs!

Does this agree with the Christian religion? Are they willing to take their chances in the judgment, with such blasphemous mockery? Dare they meet their Judge in open court with such credentials as these? And if I happen to stand by their side there, do they believe that they will then as now turn to me with a sneer and tell me to be gone? Will they then cast their silly slurs, and flaunt their scornful looks in my face? Nay, indeed, but they will beg of me to pray for them, even when my lips are closed!

THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR.

A. SIMPSON.

A writer says the war on Jerusalem did not continue more than three years and a half. I had supposed that Gabriel told Daniel the truth, when he informed him that the Romans would confirm the covenant with many (his people the Jews) for one week, and in the midst of the week he (the Romans) would cause the sacrifice to cease. I had believed this confirmation to have been seven years, if no historian had said so, because Gabriel's word to Daniel is sufficient; and I had never dreamed that the middle of any thing was the end of it. Some translate it—"In the half of the week [last half] the sacrifice shall cease.

The editor of the Cottage Bible says, on Dan. 9 : 27, "The week of years, when the Romans destroyed the temple, and which, instead of following the death of Messiah within seven years, was forty years after that event." Boothroyd says, on Dan. 9 : 26, "And the people of the prince." This certainly ought not to be applied to the Messiah, but to Titus and his army, for the city was not destroyed by Christians, but by the Romans. The wrong pointing led to a faulty division of the verses, and confounded two parts of the prophecy, perfectly distinct." In explanation of verse 27, Boothroyd remarks, "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; that is, of years. And in the midst of this period, A. D. 70, all Jewish sacrifices ceased for ever."

The reckoning days for years, and weeks of such years, is not peculiar to the Scriptures. Varro says he was entered into the twelfth week of his years, i. e., his eighty-fourth year.

Marsh in his Ecclesiastical History (p. 148) says, "On the 17th of July the daily sacrifice ceased, according to the prediction of Daniel, no proper person being left to minister at the altar." And he says this war lasted seven years.

In the marginal reference of Josephus, the writer says, "The whole number of the Jews that were destroyed during the entire seven years, is summed up by Archbishop Usher out of Josephus, and amounts to 1,337,490." Josephus says the war began on Jerusalem, in the twelfth year of the reign of Nero. Dion Cassius says Nero began to reign Oct. 14th, A. D. 53. Add twelve to fifty-three and you have A. D. 65, just where the seventy weeks ended, and the one week began.

Nero reigned thirteen years and eight days, and died Oct. 22d, A. D. 66. Galba succeeded Nero, and reigned seven months and seven days. Otho reigned three months and two days. Vitellius reigned eight months and five days. Add the reign of these three emperors together, and we have eighteen months and fourteen days. Add this to Oct. 22d, A. D. 66, where Nero died, and it will bring us to May 6th, A. D. 68, to the death of Vitellius, and the year that Vespasian was made emperor.

Now turn to Josephus (Wars, B. 6, C. 10, S. 1)—"And thus was Jerusalem taken, in the second year of the reign of Vespasian." Add two years to A. D. 68, where Vespasian began to reign, and we have A. D. 70 for the taking of Jerusalem; but not for the ending of the war (as stated by a correspondent recently.) And there is where the sacrifice ceased in the midst, or last half, of the week. But the end of the seven years' war is not yet. For the war does not end till the fourth year of Vespasian, as I stated in a former article. Now for the proof. Wars, B. 7, C., 7, S., 1—"And now, in the fourth year of the reign of Vespasian, it came to pass." This book 7, brings us to the end of the war on the Jews, in the fourth year of the reign of Vespasian. Wars, B. 7, C. 9, S. 1—"So these people died, nine hundred and sixty in number, with this intention, that they would leave not so much as one soul among them alive to be subject to the Romans. This calamitous slaughter was made on the fifteenth day of the month Nisan." They chose ten men by lot out of them, to slay all the rest. And when these ten had slain them all, they made the same rule for casting lots for themselves, that he whose lot it was should first kill the other nine, and then should kill himself. This was done rather than to fall into the hands of the Romans. Now run back seven years, from the fifteenth day of the first month Nisan, which was the fourth year of Vespasian, A. D. 72, and we shall reach the fifteenth day of the first month Nisan, A. D. 65, the very day the gate opened of its own accord, and in the twelfth year of Nero. "When the people were come in great crowds to the feast of unleavened bread, in the month Nisan, the eastern gate of the inner court of the temple, which was of brass, and vastly heavy, was seen to be opened of its own accord. But the men of learning understood it, that the security of their holy house was dissolved of its own accord, and that the gate was opened for the advantage of their enemies."—Josephus.

So we see, if one Jesus, son of Ananias, did die, in less than a month before the city was subdued, it does not prove that the war had ended, because a man had died.

A SERMON.

LOVING OUR NEIGHBORS.

C. E. BARNES.

"But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbor?"—Luke 10: 29.

The christian religion, our religion, is to be manifested in two ways: In love to God, and in love to man. While all religionists inculcate the necessity of love and veneration toward God, many are lax in regard to their obligations to their fellow men. Some indeed feel bound to cherish feelings of love and benevolence toward their own kindred and friends, but extend their charities no further, and still others seem to have no clear, defined ideas as to the common claims of humanity, but live as though self, and self alone, were the only worthy object of love and regard.

Now it was to point out our duty in this particular, that the parable of the good Samaritan was spoken. Let us then examine it, and learn therefrom our duty. And in the examination, we will notice first, the character of the lawyer who questioned our Savior. From his evil motive in addressing him (v. 25) we may conclude he was a fair representative of the Pharisees. They were proud, conceited, selfish, bigoted and unfriendly. They were willing to give alms when it could be trumpeted abroad, but never did they give and not let their left hand know what had been done by their right. They pretended to shun the company of the vile, yet indulged in the grossest wickedness; yet, notwithstanding their hypocrisy, they esteemed themselves to be the special favorites of heaven. And this lawyer who now questions Jesus, is undoubtedly possessed of these same characteristics.

To instruct him, and at the same time to administer a rebuke, Jesus utters the parable: —A man falls among thieves and is robbed, and is left by the roadside half dead. First a priest, who above all others ought to have been ready to assist the needy, passes by, not deigning to notice him. Next a Levite, who also ministered in holy things, passed the place, and he too refused to assist the needy and suffering man. But after these two have gone on, "a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was; and when he saw him, he had compassion on him." Had he been disposed to continue on his way, he might have found excuses as the priest and Levite had; but instead of querying as to his nationality, or as to the special claims he may have had upon him, he gives place to no such thoughts, but with a noble generosity and tenderness of heart, he at once dismounts from his beast, and seeks to relieve him. In the suffering object before him, the Samaritan sees neither Jew nor Greek. He beholds suffering humanity, a fellow creature in want, and to aid, and relieve him, he considers himself and his all to be at his service. "Now," said Jesus, "Which of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor unto him that fell among the thieves?" The lawyer was forced to answer, "He that showed mercy on him." Then said Jesus unto him, "Go, and do thou likewise."

The duty here inculcated, of loving our neighbors as ourselves, is made essential in obtaining eternal life. vers. 25-28. My readers, have you any clearer notions of this duty than the lawyer had? His ideas of it were based on selfishness; he would be benevolent if men would praise him; he would return an act of kindess to one to whom he might be indebted, but beyond this his ideas of love did not extend.

Now how do you feel? Is there a nationality you would pass, if such were in distress? Is there an individual you would pass by? If so, you have yet to learn what the spirit of the gospel is. Your neighbor is not merely your next-door friend, nor your fellow-worshiper, who meets with you in prayer; nor the one who is kind and friendly to you; but every individual in the human race is your neighbor, and especially so when in distress and needing aid, whether in former times he may have been kind or unkind to you; whether black or white, rich or poor. And if one of the least of earth's little ones is passed by, when in trouble of any kind, by you, and you have power to assist, God will not hold you guiltless. And yet how much of this selfishness we see—and in the church too!

The different sects act as though all their love were to be confined to the narrow limits of their party; as though neither man, nor child, outside of their borders, had any claims upon them. But the Spirit of our Lord is not thus confined; sad indeed would be the condition of poor humanity if it were thus limited; but it is not, and all who are under its influence will feel their hearts touched, and sympathies awakened, at the woes and griefs of all with whom they come in contact.

When any one who has the Spirit of Christ abiding in him, meets another in sadness or trial, he will not ransack the history of the past to ascertain whether their relations have been friendly or otherwise; he will not first inquire into his religious connections; no, no; all minor considerations will be lost and swallowed up in the one present fact, that here is a man, a fellow creature, in want, and, like the Samaritan in the parable, he will regard himself and his all to be at the other's disposal.

Recognizing this principle as being a just one, under what a condemnation is the world! In early times, when nations waged war with one another, forgetting or not knowing of this principle, the victors made slaves of the vanquished; and in all times since, nations have been guilty before God. And among others, our own America, the land of enlightenment; that declared all men to be free and equal, is guilty. Professing to worship the God of heaven, she trampled his creatures in the dust. For two centuries she kept in the most bitter and galling bondage, those whom she should have fostered and protected. For two centuries she traded in flesh and blood, buying and selling human beings as drovers do their herds and cattle. During this time the dearest ties were ruthlessly severed, and cruelties indulged in, till it is a wonder the judgments of God were so long withheld.

And not only is the nation guilty, but the church is guilty also. Those who professed to follow the example of Jesus, who went about doing good and relieving the oppressed, upheld and encouraged it. True, they teach and do differently now, but a few years ago they did not. To be an Abolitionist now, is to go with the multitude; but once it was different. Men's minds have undergone a great change on this subject; they have become enlightened, and the bond-man is free; slavery is no longer a reproach, and our country is indeed a free one.

The greatest deed done in America was not by Columbus, although he discovered it. It was not done by Washington, although under God, he wrought its independence. It was not by Gen. Grant, although he was instrumental in performing it, but Abraham Lincoln performed it. Never did sword effect so great and noble a work, as did the pen which wrote the "Proclamation of Emancipation." And the principle therein contained is but an exemplification of the lesson taught in this parable—a principle that is not only to be manifested by nations toward their subjects, but is also to rule individuals in their intercourse with one another.

This principle of love to man, is further illustrated in the lives of missionaries who leave home and friends, and native land, to devote their best years of manhood and womanhood in educating the ignorant and degraded heathen. Selfishness never yet led a man to enter upon such a work; nothing but a vivid sense of their needs, and a yearning for their welfare, ever constrained the missionaries to thus forego the pleasures of home and its sacred associations, to spend a life of toil and hardship among such creatures.

Also in the life of Paul we can see the workings of this same element. Educated, influential and able, he turns his back upon all the bright prospects which had allured him in his youth, to enter the ranks of the despised followers of Christ; and in Christ's cause, and in behalf of his fellow men, that they might be made better, and thereby be saved, he endured hardships, suffered persecution, nakedness, hunger and thirst, and finally death itself. What but a fellow feeling could thus have led him? What principle but that of love to his neighbor, even as to himself, could thus have urged him onward in their behalf?

But that example which most beautifully illustrates this love, is to be found in the life of Him who urges it upon us. What but love in its highest degree could have induced the Lord of glory to tabernacle in the flesh with men? What but a love that counted self as nothing, that fallen humanity might be raised, could have led him to divest himself of the glory he had with the Father before the world was, and to humble himself and be made in the likeness of men?

In these instances we see a love for others exceeding love for self; and this love which has been possessed by others, may be possessed by us; yea, it must be possessed by us. We must be so much in sympathy with God, so deeply imbued with his Spirit, that the wants and weaknesses of our fellow creatures shall awaken the sympathy for them in our own hearts, that their wants shall outweigh all other considerations; that their extremities shall be considered as our opportunities to fulfill the law of Christ, by bearing one another's burdens. We should have the Spirit of our Master in such a degree that to us there would be but one nation, the earth; but one family, the human family; and but one common claim, the claim of humanity.

But notwithstanding the importance of this principle, it is, however, too much neglected and forgotten. Let me, then, notice a few of the opportunities where we can exemplify it.

If we look out upon the world we can see multitudes in as bad condition as the man in the parable. We can see opportunities for all to do good. None need be idle because they cannot visit prisons after the manner of the celebrated Howard. None need be drones, because the way does not open for them to enter the missionary fields in foreign lands. None need remain inactive because their borders are limited; no, what is needed is a disposition to be active in your own sphere, whatever and wherever it may be. This is the disposition that will please God—a willingness to work just where we are; a readiness to discharge faithfully, the duties that lie in our path. This is all the Samaritan did, and this is all that is required of us.

In your neighborhood there's a sick person. Perhaps you have never called there; then go at once and inquire after his or her welfare. Go and talk about the comforts of your religion. Speak of the promises of God; of his love, his faithfulness and constancy. In so doing, you will be ministering, not merely to the suffering one beside you, but to Him who has said—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done in unto me." Matt. 25 : 40.

You can show this love by bearing with the weaknesses of your fellow men. It is in the trials, and perplexities, and provocations of life that an exhibition of your christian principles is specially called for; and in your intercourse and dealings with your fellow creatures, whether in church relationship or any other, a spirit of love and kindness should mark your every word and act. Be not so ready to take offense; be considerate and remember your own weaknesses. Be ready to make proper allowances for them who may have trespassed upon your supposed rights. Try to cultivate that spirit which actuated our Savior when he said—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Luke. 23 ; 34.

If we have this love to man within us, we shall have a lively interest also in the spiritual welfare of those about us. We shall not mingle with them day after day, and still be indifferent to their condition. Our interest will be aroused, and we shall be led to make repeated efforts to bring them to Christ.

We need not go to heathen lands to find objects for our solicitude; they are about us on every hand; yea, even in the midst of christian households there are those who will inevitably be lost unless they are brought to find an interest in our Savior's blood. And this condition of the greater portion of our fellow men should awaken our sympathies, and stir us all up to more vigorous action in their behalf. It is no use to sit with hands folded and wish your children or friends were converted, God does not bless wishes; he blesses actions.

The want of the christian church to-day is not orators; is not college-learning; is not a larger number of communicants; she is not deficient in these; but she does want good Samaritans, men and women who are not anxious about great things, but who are ready to do the little deeds of kindness and love, as the opportunities are presented.

Who will thus labor? Who will thus pattern after Jesus, who was ever ready to assist the needy, to sympathize with the sorrowing, and to tell unconverted men of a Father who so loved them that he gave his only begotten Son to redeem them?

Brethren and sisters, this parable is as instructive to us as it was to the lawyer. Learn from it your duty: that while humanity is suffering and is calling for your aid, it is your duty, whenever and wherever you have opportunity, to pour the oil and wine of consolation into their wounds, and then, at the return of Jesus you will hear his loving words—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Salem, Mass.

WHENCE SUCH MISAPPREHENSION?

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

We are led to ask this question, after reading the various conflicting (and many of them sophistical) interpretations of the prophetic word. After some thirty years' experience in the Advent faith, I think we should have made some progress in our understanding and knowledge of prophecy; and have learned that the "sure word" of prophecy is a "light" shining upon the pathway of the just, intended to shine "more and more unto the perfect day." While we believe this has been the result with some of the household of faith, others seem to have taken the back track into confusion and darkness, as their application of some important predictions clearly make manifest. I think there is no one point in the Advent faith, but some one of its professed believers has attacked, and to his own satisfaction demolished. While this has been true of the general principles, it is emphatically true touching those points connected with the prophetic periods. I believe this action betrays a condition of awful backsliding, and consequent darkness, blindness, and unbelief. Is it not time to awake to a more careful and prayerful study of the prophetic word in general, and the prophetic periods in particular? There is an importance attached to the prophetic periods, that we may not ignore with impunity. Their very connection with the prophetic outline of events makes it self-evident that they were given to be understood. And any interpretation of the prophecy to which they belong that mystifies those periods and renders them unintelligible, should not only be looked upon with suspicion, but be rejected as dangerous poison.

At the time of the general awakening to the great subject of Christ's immediate coming in 1840–4, the coming One proceeded to do a marvelous work among the people, even causing the "wisdom of the wise men to perish, and the understanding of the prudent men to be hid." Because the "vision" had become to all as the words of a book (or letter) that is sealed, that was delivered to the learned to be interpreted; but their answer is, it is sealed; and then the book is delivered to the unlearned, and they refuse to interpret, because they are not learned. The Lord regards such action as this hypocrisy; and the lip service of such people, without the heart, will be brought to nought, and the scorner will be consumed.

The marvelous work and the wonder the Lord has done, has been to cause the light to shine out of obscurity, and out of darkness. The "vision" has been written upon "tables," and made "plain," and many have "run" as they have read it, and communicated to others the glad tidings, causing "the meek to increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." This work of the Lord aroused the learned doctors to "seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord," by turning "things upside down," by putting darkness for light, and bitter for sweet, in interpreting the prophetic vision falsely; applying it to events more than two thousand years in the past, thus strengthening the hands of the wicked, both in and out of the church, and grieving the hearts of the godly that love the Lord's coming.

This work of falsifying prophecy by the learned D. D.'s and our Rev. divines, has resulted in infidelity, pride, corruption, and worldliness, to an extent without a parallel in the history of the world, as a multitude of astounding facts abundantly prove. While this work has been in progress, God has been calling out a people to witness to the truth of his immediate coming, and to confront the infidelity and corruption of this age, by bringing out the true light from the sure word of prophecy, by proving its fulfillment almost to its last items, and by indicating what and when those will be accomplished. But even now, after the long tirade of attempted impeachment of prophecy in the past, by the popular and learned clergy, we see even among ourselves persons arising, and speaking "perverse" things to draw away disciples after them. And the spirit of unbelief is now manifest among those once distinguished as leaders in the great Advent movement, in their endeavoring to overthrow the very principles of the interpretation of prophecy, adopted and defended by them in the past; and while nominally associated with us, are engaged in teaching, if not damnable heresies, they are paving the way to such. And such a contrariety of views and applications of prophecy as are advocated among us, must be suicidal to the faith of such as are not established in the truth.

The great principle of interpretation of symbolical prophecy, adopted and applied by the late Wm. Miller, cannot, we think, be much improved. The more it is scrutinized and applied, the better it appears, and if we want sound interpretation and healthy action to obtain among us, we had better learn more from the old landmarks, and less from the multitude of decoy lights that now confront us from every quarter. Let us now apply this principle, briefly, to the eighth chapter of the prophecy of Daniel.

First, let us turn our attention to the grand scope of the prophecy,—to what the prophet saw in a vision.

1. He saw a ram with two horns, and then the ram pushing in three different directions, that no life or living might stand before him.

2. He saw an he-goat, with a notable horn between his eyes. He also saw the said goat moving with great velocity towards the ram; and then "smote the ram, and brake his two horns," and overcame him, and none could deliver the ram out of the power of the goat.

3. After the goat had waxed very great, the great horn between his eyes was broken, "and for it came up four notable ones, toward the four winds of heaven."

4. Out of one of them "came forth a little horn that waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and the east, and toward the pleasant land. And it waxed great even to the host of heaven, and cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yea, he magnified himself even to [or against] the prince of the host, and by him [or from him] the daily was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down. And an host was given him against the daily, by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered. Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint that spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily [or continual] sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed," or justified.

After Daniel had seen all the movements of the symbols presented to him, the question was asked (by Palmoni, or the numberer of secrets, or the wonderful numberer—margin), How long the vision?" The reader will take notice that this question relates to the duration or continuance of all that is embraced in the vision. The interpretation of this vision by Gabriel shows that Persia, Grecia, and Rome, and their several changes, till Rome the last power presented is broken without hand (or human agency) at the coming of Christ to judgment, is the meaning of those symbols; and the period of time designated measures their entire history. The "question" is not concerning the daily sacrifice, as our translators would have us understand; because the words "concerning" and "sacrifice" are not in the original, but are supplied words; but the question relates to the daily, or continual transgression, and the transgression of desolation. Persia, Grecia, and pagan Rome, are the daily, or continual transgression; for each of them were pagan idolaters, opposed to the true worship of God; and each of them in turn have oppressed and trodden under foot the people of God and their inheritance. But the transgression of desolation (the same as the abomination that maketh desolate) represents papal Rome, whose history answers to the intensity of the transgression, in its opposition to God, in its attempts to crush the truth out of the earth. If the Jewish worship is what is meant by that supplied word—sacrifice—in Dan. 8 : 11, 13, as some tell us, we would like to ask such interpreters of prophecy why that supplied word is nowhere to be found in the original? Is it because there is no Hebrew word agreeing to the English word sacrifice? It would be well for such to examine some three hundred texts from Genesis through the Old Testament Scriptures, where the word sacrifice occurs as the equivalent to the Hebrew word zeh-vagh, or zah-vagh, before jumping to such rash conclusions. Either of these original words was at hand, if the word sacrifice was required in the text. The word sacrifice, then, is not required to give sense to the passages under consideration; but really falsifies their meaning. The word daily, as a proper name, occurs only in the book of Daniel, and in each of the five places in which it is found, the word sacrifice is in italics, implying that the original would not authorize its insertion, but that the translators introduced it to express what they supposed to be the sense of the passage.

The infidel position of our D. D.'s in the past, in endeavoring to apply the little horn of Daniel eighth to Antiochus Epiphanes, a Syrian king, who persecuted and destroyed many of the Jews, and interfered with their worship, by taking away (as they say) the daily (sacrifice) one hundred and sixty-eight years before Christ, is no more absurd than that of some among us who apply the "daily" to the taking away of, or causing to cease, the "sacrifice and the oblation" by the Romans in A. D. 70, by the destruction of Jerusalem.

Both of these positions are manufactured to destroy the true import of the prophecy; especially the prophetic period connected with it. But all such labor is futile, and will be so regarded by all who love the Lord's coming. None loving this event can be persuaded to believe that the 1335 and the 2300 days are to be understood as literal time; the scope of the prophecy commencing with the "pushing of the ram," that no life, or living, might stand, referring to the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, the fifth king of Persia, B. C. 426, in which year he signed the death warrant of the entire Jewish nation; from this event commences the 2300 years. The first part of this period, namely, the seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety years, the period through which the transgression must be restrained, brings us to A. D. 65. Here ends the restraint put on the transgression, and the Jewish nation must now be destroyed. From A. D. 65 we have eighteen hundred and ten years more to complete the 2300, which carries us to A. D. 1875. Here end the powers embraced in the vision; namely, Persia, Grecia, and Rome, that were to tread under foot the sanctuary and the host; this period ending by the removal of those powers, and the justification of the sanctuary.

Even if Christ does not come in A. D. 1873, and the sanctuary is not cleansed (or justified) in 1875, the literal day theory cannot be correct, because of certain great facts presented in the prophecy connected with those periods of time; namely, the continuance or duration of the powers which those periods cover cannot be compressed into a period of from three to six years, the amount of those periods literally understood. The 2300 days, as a prophetical or symbolical period of time, i. e., each day representing a year, or 2300 years together, as the period of time covering the history of Persia, Grecia, and Rome, from the pushing of the ram, is perfectly natural and consistent, and the only consistent application. Again, the language of Gabriel to Daniel—"I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation." "For at the time appointed [i. e. 2300 years] the end shall be"; the end of human history in its present relation to the earth. And then immediately explains the symbols, implying that their duration is covered by the period of time designated; then after explaining them (except the 2300 days) he says—"Wherefore shut thou up the vision, for it shall be for many days." "Many days" must have a longer range than about six years, unless we charge Gabriel with folly, and impeach the divine instructor.

Again, when Gabriel visits Daniel the second time, recorded in the ninth chapter, he explains the remaining symbol, i. e., the 2300 days. He says—"Seventy weeks are determined [should have been rendered "cut off"] upon thy people and upon thy holy city.' What are those seventy weeks cut off from, if not from the 2300 days? Gabriel says—"I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. . . . Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision"; carrying the prophet's mind right back to his former communication, recorded in the eighth chapter.

These seventy weeks, then, are a part of the 2300 days; the events included in the seventy weeks make it impossible for those weeks to be literal time, and they are generally acknowledged to be weeks of years, being four hundred and ninety years. If those seventy weeks are really 490 years, and they are "cut off" from the vision of the eighth chapter, then the length of the vision must be 2300 years, because we cannot "cut off" four hundred and ninety years from 2300 literal days, any more than we can cut off four hundred and ninety miles from 2300 inches. All these facts prove beyond a doubt that these several periods of time are symbolical; i. e., a day for a year; and there is no mode of reasoning that will prove to the contrary; and I pity the person that attempts it; for I believe the time is not far distant when such will mourn over their rashness, in detracting from and belittling the sacred oracles of divine truth. We are hastening rapidly to the day of final reckoning, when every man must give an account of himself to God, for the influence he has exerted for or against the truth, with every other act. Solemn thought! May the Holy Spirit impress it on every heart. Amen.

THE WORCESTER CONFERENCE.

FARE REDUCED.

We have arranged with the Boston and Albany R. R., so that the friends who go over this road, to attend the meeting held at Worcester this week, having paid full fare one way, will be furnished at the Chapel with free return passes to the various stations on the road that they may have come from, good to Feb. 12th inclusive. G. T. A.

SAN FRANCISCO.

We are now (Jan. 16th) enjoying as delightful weather, as beautiful spring scenery, as we ever have in New England the first weeks of May. The sky is clear and cloudless, and the air is so soft and balmy that we sit without a fire, with windows open, while the gardens and yards are adorned with very bright green grass, petunias, roses, Egyptian lilies, and other flowers, and very handsome evergreens, which present a most charming sight to the eye of the beholder. In some yards the grass is a foot high. The winter is warmer than last year. It is truly a "Summer Land." The rainy season appears to be over. The grain and fruit prospect was never better for this coast.

Our meetings are continually increasing in interest. Some have just started in the service of the Lord, and others are under conviction, and almost persuaded to be christians. The Spirit of the Lord is with us in all our meetings. Bro. and Sr. Fassett, Brn. Howell and Wilson, are giving efficient aid in the good work. We have a pleasant and commodious house, which has been very much crowded, and some had to go away for want of room. People of the first rank in society come to hear the glorious truths of revelation. Some popular ministers and religious papers speak against us, but we feel certain that the Lord is our helper. He blesses us with abiding and "perfect peace." Pray for us.

PREACHING THE TRUTH.—We are pleased to know that ministers are rising up in all denominations to preach the immediate coming of Christ in glory. Recently, Dr. Lyman, pastor of the Trinity (Episcopal) Church in San Francisco, preached that we are in the "last days," amid the "perilous times" that are to close this dispensation. The reporter says: "His emphatic and eloquent announcement of literal and immediate Second Advent views created a genuine 'sensation' in his immense congregation." Similar tidings are now becoming common. The Spirit of the Lord is stirring up the minds of the ministry and people more and more on this subject. Let us renew our efforts to awaken the people to this great truth.

OWING to the blockade on the Pacific road, and the consequent delay of the mails from California, we are not able to give our readers the usual correspondence from the Editor. Shall hope to make up the deficiency next week.

ADVANCE OF CRIME.

That crime is rapidly increasing is a fact too well established to admit of candid controversy. Life, virtue and property are in peril in these last days of Satanic rule. The stream of iniquity is swelling rapidly, and a freshet of wickedness is rushing through the world. But little restraint is felt through the influence of civil or mob law. One would hardly expect that in the quiet state of Indiana, society would be in a condition as indicated by the Louisville Ledger, Nov. 27th, 1871. The writer says:—

"The devil seems to be having it pretty much his own way over in Southern Indiana, if one may judge by the number and atrocity of the crimes recently committed in that section. Hangings, murders, burglaries, and highway robberies follow each other in rapid succession, and good citizens cannot but feel the tremors of fear when they reflect what apparent insecurity there is to life and property. There was the murder of the Woodward family in Orange County, in which four persons were mercilessly butchered with an axe; the attempt to murder an entire family in Lawrence County, a few miles from New Orleans; the butchery of a mother, her little son and an infant daughter, near Tell City, in Perry County; twenty-five or thirty murders of single individuals; the outraging and murder of an old lady near Clear Spring, in Jackson County; the hanging of two men from a bridge in Orange County; the hanging of the three Renos and Charles Anderson in the New Albany jail by the Seymour mob; the taking of citizens from their beds in Harrison, Crawford and Lawrence counties, and beating them nearly to death with clubs and switches; the deliberate grinding of a butcher knife by a woman, and her subsequent use of it in cutting into tit-bits the body of her sister-in-law, in Washington county, and dozens of other almost as shocking barbarisms, crowned with the massacre of the Park family in Clark County; and all these would indicate the fulfillment of the prophecy of the Revelator of Patmos, that Satan would be loosed for a season."

The days of Sodom have returned, as foretold by the Savior. The cup of iniquity is about full; the harvest is nearly ripe; and soon the heavenly reapers will descend to begin their great work of separating the wheat from the tares. It is a solemn hour in which we are living; yet but few realize how near we are living to the end of the present dispensation. It is time to be wide awake, gazing from the watch-towers for the first glimmer of light from the dawn of the eternal morning. Let us be all ready to depart at a moment's warning.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

When at Bro. Billings', in Chicago, we gathered some important facts concerning a noted spring, called the "Waukesha Bethesda Mineral Springs" of Waukesha, Wis. These springs are about eighteen miles from Milwaukee, and fifty from Madison, the Capital of the State. This water is said to cure Bright's disease and diabetes. Physicians have believed the former disease incurable. It proves fatal to the kidneys, causing death by starvation of the blood. The water of the Waukesha Springs has a remarkable healing effect upon diseases of the kidneys and liver; especially those already named. This spring was discovered by Mr. Richard Dunbar, who had been suffering some two years with what appeared to be an incurable disease, known as saccharine diabetes. He had consulted the most eminent medical men in this country and Europe, without receiving any perceptible benefit. We will let him give his account of the healing power of this Spring in his own language:—

"Being called to attend the funeral of a friend, his excessive thirst led him to a spring near by, when tasting the water, and finding it palatable, he indulged freely in drinking several glasses, when to his surprise he found himself in a copious perspiration for the first time for over two years. Retiring at the usual hour that night, he slept undisturbed for the first time during his illness, having been invariably disturbed, at intervals, as many as eight or ten times during the night, with a continuous thirst, and drinking freely. In addition to the foregoing benefits, his constipation was relieved, whereby all medical preparations were dispensed with. These results being so marked and striking, led him at once to repeat the use of the water, and in a few days thereafter left for his home in Brooklyn, New York, believing himself to be cured. This occurred in 1868. During January following, he had a relapse of this distressing disease, which led him to consult his medical adviser, Professor Willard Parker, M. D., New York City, who advised him to visit the spring in Wisconsin, from which he derived so much benefit before, and note specifically the result attendant on the use of the water, and report to him the result frequently, during his stay at the spring.

On this, his second visit to the spring, he found his condition as follows: Specific gravity of urine marking 45°, densely saccharine, dryness of the mouth, gums, tongue and lips, with insatiable thirst and constipation of the bowels, with acute pains in the region of the kidneys and left hip, weakness of limbs, languid feeling, and uncontrollable discharge of urine, and a general prostration and emaciation of the whole system.

The result. A few days' use of the water resulted in producing a perfectly normal condition of the whole system, all traces of sugar removed, and specific gravity that marked 45° was reduced to 18°. This wonderful result induced him to give it extended publicity, being satisfied himself of its curative properties, and sustained in his opinion by eminent medical men."

From facts gathered, we are convinced that the water from the Waukesha Springs is the best known remedy for the terrible diseases named. For this reason we have spoken on the subject. The water can be sent any distance, without losing its healing properties. Those wishing information, can address E. P. Dunbar, Waukesha, Wis. He is the general manager at the Springs. We learn the water can be obtained at 153 Bunker Hill St., Charlestown, Mass., for $1 per gallon.

HOSPITALS IN THE SPIRIT-WORLD.

The demons tell some strange things about matters in the "spirit-world," which is a world not once named in the Bible. Such a world might do for "disembodied spirits," who would need no tangible place for a residence. In the Banner of Light, July 8th, 1871, we find a record of the following conversation with a spirit:—

"Q. Can the intelligence tell us how many spheres there are in the future state of existence?

A. Just as many as there are different states of mind requiring different spheres; indeed, they are numberless.

Q. I heard it stated last night that there were asylums—insane hospitals in the spirit-world.

A. It is so.

Q. Why do they have to have them there?

A. Because there is a necessity for them."

We would like to know of what materials the hospitals are composed. Are they built of wood, stone, brick, or iron? We conclude they must be very tight, or the disembodied insane ones would get out, greatly to the annoyance of the sane ones.

☞ IN the first number of Sr. Willard's "Story of Grace," the order of the article was broken, by the blind paging of the Ms. The true ending is what refers to pious teachers. That which follows should be read after the second paragraph in the article.

UNWORTHY.—It appears from a communication received from J. A. Cleaveland, A. S. Balch, W. B. Peck, and G. W. Ferry, of North Hyde Park, Vt., that the Rev. David Wyatt, traveling with a woman whom he claims to be his wife, is wholly unworthy of Christian confidence.

BRO. C. GOUD wishes to say to the brethren and friends,—"By excessive labor and exposure I am down sick, and have been confined to the house, and nearly all of the time to my room, since Jan. 18th, but am now gaining slowly, and hope by the blessing of the Lord to be in the field again in a few weeks. I request an interest in the prayers of the saints that sick or well I may be the Lord's wholly."

"THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS."

1 CHRON. 16: 29.

The Bible speaks emphatically of the "Beauty of Holiness." Seen in the light of God's truth sin is hateful, and impurity is loathsome. Just to the degree that grace renovates and sanctifies, it impresses beauty upon the soul and life. When fully washed in Jesus' blood, the child of the great King "becomes all glorious within." Then the inward beauty exhibits itself in the countenance and manners, and inscribes excellency upon the conduct. Purity, humility, discretion, and unselfish devotion to doing good, and making others happy, give true and superior loveliness. This gospel holiness fits one for an acceptable and happy performance of all the duties of life. O Lord, inspire thy people with an intense desire for this grace! O for a general struggle for its purity, its meekness, its divine and clustering beauties! This holiness with all its power and beauty, is provided for every one of God's children. Jesus has purchased it, and the Holy Spirit is ready to sanctify us now. Let us sorrow and mourn for it, let us consecrate ourselves to it, let us seek it with all the heart, yea, let us draw near to Jesus, and just now trust in him, as our full Savior, and, his precious blood will cleanse "soul, body, and spirit," and the Holy Spirit will fill us with love, and seal holiness, with its beauty, upon our hearts. We are little and unworthy, but it is the good pleasure of our God to thus fully save us; so that we may always truly represent Christ and his religion in the beauty of holiness, until our great and arduous life-work is done, and he calls us to go and dwell with him. Amen.—American Wesleyan.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M., PREBENDARY OF CORK. Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, M. D., of Yale College. 8vo. 68 pp. Price 40 cents.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject. We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—1 copy, 40 cts.; two copies, 75 cts.; three copies, $1; one dozen for $3.50;—all sent by mail, postpaid. "THE UNDERWORLD OF SPIRITS."

A friend who believes in the "underworld of spirits" propounds the following questions:

1. Why are the dead said to come from mnemeios, thanatos, and hades, to judgment? John 5: 28; Rev. 20: 13.

2. Why is Christ's body said to go to mnemeio, and his soul to hades? Matt. 27: 60; Acts 2: 31.

3. Did Christ go down into the abyss? Rom. 10: 7.

4. Was the Son of man three days and three nights in the heart of the earth? Matt. 12: 40.

5. Did Christ go into the same place that the devil is to be bound in? Rom. 10: 7; Rev. 20.

6. Did Christ go into the same place where the rich man is said to have lifted up his eyes? Acts 2: 27, 31; Luke 16: 23.

7. What was the faith of the Jews in regard to hades and sheol?

8. 1 Pet. 3: 18–20—"And he [Christ] died in body, but lived in spirit. And he preached to those souls which were detained in hades, which were formerly disobedient in the days of Noah, when the long-suffering of God commanded an ark to be made in hope of their repentance, and eight souls only entered into it, and were kept alive in the waters."—Syriac Testament.

9. Was the gospel ever preached to the antediluvians? 1 Pet. 3: 19, and 4: 6.

10. Are all men to be judged by the law and gospel? Rom. 2: 12, 18.

11. Could they be judged by the gospel unless it was first preached to them? John 15: 22, and 3: 19.

12. Why are we said to be judged according to deeds done in the body?

REPLY.

As the questions are numbered, our answers will bear corresponding numbers.

1. Because they are unjudged while there; but mnemeion, thanatos, and hades, are not three distinct places, because (1) if this were so, it would involve the division of man into three distinct parts at death; one to go into mnemeion, one into thanatos, and one into hades; but (2) the occupants of hades are said to be "dead," as well as those of mnemeion; "hades delivered up the dead," not living spirits; so these two terms bring to view the depository of the "dead"—one place called by two different names; while thanatos is here personified as an agent that captures and imprisons his victims in hades, his prison-house. If hades is really an "underworld of spirits," they must be "dead"—not alive.

2. While it is said by Matthew that Christ's body went to mnemeion, and by Peter that his soul went to hades, the term soul is here used in the sense of person, hades being the receptacle, or state, of the "dead," and not of the living. Both witnesses speak of the realm of death. That hades is not an "underworld of spirits," in a conscious state, is evident from this statement—"There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in sheol"—Gr. hades. Eccl. 9: 10. If hades is a realm of disembodied spirits, they are certainly void of "knowledge" and "wisdom." We read, "Thy pomp is brought down to sheol," where "the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee." Isa. 14: 11. Do the "worms" thus cover disembodied spirits, or the real men that die and are buried? The very beings that go to sheol or hades enter into this condition. Jesus escaped this state of decomposition in hades, as he was "not left there" to see corruption.

3. Christ went into the abussos as a "dead" person, not as a living soul. "Who shall descend into the deep (abussos)? that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead."

4. Of course Christ was three days and three nights in the "heart" of the earth, as a dead personage, but not in the centre of the earth as a living being, in a disembodied state. Jonah was not in the whale's belly in a disembodied state, but physically there.

5. Christ went into the abussos (the deep), and the devil's bondage is located in the deep (abussos); also the "beast" came out of the "bottomless pit," or abussos. Did he come out of the "underworld of spirits"? Rev. 9: 11, and 17: 8.

6. Christ went to the same hades that the rich man went to, which we have seen to be a realm for corporeal men, where worms cover them; a realm of "dead" men; a realm where there is no "knowledge nor wisdom"; a realm where men are unjudged, for hades is to deliver up its dead to be judged; consequently sight, speech, and feeling, can be attributed to the dead rich man only on the principle of personification,—representing inanimate matter as seeing, feeling, and talking,—to teach a lesson to the living.

7. The faith of the Jews before their captivity was that there was "no knowledge" in sheol or hades, and that it was the place to which corporeal men went at death, for Jacob said, "Then shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to sheol"; and it is certainly the physical man that wears "gray hairs." After their return from captivity, a part of them adopted the heathen notion of transmigration of souls, or an entrance into an unseen cavity in the ground, in a disembodied state. Their corrupted faith was denounced by Christ.

8. Whether the "spirits" spoken of by Peter are in the hades prison, or some other, they are "dead," because "for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead." 1 Pet. 4: 6. They were alive when the gospel was preached to them, but they are now "dead"—not as disembodied spirits, but as persons, synechdochically called spirits.

9. The gospel was certainly preached before the Christian era, for Paul in speaking of the times of Moses, says—"For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them." Heb. 4: 2. Also we are told that the gospel was preached "to Abraham." Peter speaks thus of the prophets: "The spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand." 1 Pet. 1: 11. On this principle the gospel was preached to the ancients, not excluding the antediluvians.

10. All men are to be judged either by the law or the gospel, except a class mentioned by Paul, who "are a law unto themselves" in the absence of the perfect law.

11. They could not be judged by the gospel unless it had been first preached to them; but it must be preached to them in the body, and not in a disembodied state, in order that they may be judged for "the deeds done in the body." If a part are entitled to preaching in an "underworld of spirits," so are all; then why not abandon preaching till we go down into the cellar of disembodied men?

12. We are said to be judged for the deeds done in the body, because no deeds are done out of the body. If the real doer of deeds lives out of the body for hundreds of years after death, will it do no deeds good or bad? If so, will it not be judged for them? Where do we read anything about it? The expression, "done in the body," does not indicate that they are done by a distinct person living in the body, any more than the statement Christ was "put to death in the body" means that it was a distinct person inside of him that died. It simply means in person, in both cases. W. S.

TIME.

NAAMAN GRANT.

After having studied on the same for eight or ten years since 1843, I came to the following conclusions, viz.:—

1. That the 2300 days would end in the year 1880, and then will commence the cleansing of the sanctuary.

2. That the 1335 will end in 1873, when probation will end, and the resurrection of the saints take place; there being just seven years between the two events, of which I will speak again. From the 2300 there were four hundred and ninety cut off upon the Jews as a nation, and the holy city, Jerusalem; this was destroyed in the year 70. 1810 more will bring us to 1880.

The "seventy weeks" have been most wofully mutilated by some, by mere assumptions, and without any authority. I see no good reason why the sixty-two and sixty-nine weeks, and the one week, are not the identical "seventy." It is held by many Adventists that Christ was crucified at the end of the sixty-two weeks. I find no such statement between the lids of the Bible; it is not so, but after sixty-two; how long after? This is indefinite as to time; events have proved it so.

Again, there were to be sixty-nine weeks unto Messiah the Prince. We are told this ended at his birth; there is no authority for it; he was not born a Prince, but there is good proof to the contrary, for the wise men said, "Where is he who is born King of the Jews?" He was king while he lived; he died a king. Pilate said, "Shall I crucify your King?" Then where shall we find Messiah the Prince? Messiah is one thing, Messiah the Prince is another; a name given to the same person holding office as such.

Now let us take the seventy weeks as stated in Daniel, ending with the holy city. The sixty-nine reach to Messiah the Prince, one week short of the seventy; "and he [who? a man, in all probability] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." You are aware of what Josephus says about a certain man at a feast four years before the war, who went forth crying, "Wo! wo!" to everything concerning Jerusalem. And this person continued for seven years and some months. This reached to or near the taking of the city. (Where do we get seven years for the war? Only three and a half years.) Did not this man confirm the covenant with many for one week? Josephus says the wise took these signs as a warning from God. Now it is plain to me that Christ held the office of a king up to that feast, and then gave up the office of king (margin)—"And they shall be no more his people"; and he then became, as the Revelator says, "The Prince of the kings of the earth." Rev. 1: 5. He then became Messiah the Prince. Here ended the sixty-nine weeks; then the one week of confirmation; and in the midst of this week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease.

Does not Josephus say that immediately after the army sat down around the city, there was a mighty famine and pestilence? Would not this famine cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, for want to do with? And who was the cause of this? Why, the Roman army, or Titus; he caused it to cease.

Now to find where the sixty-two ended, we will go back eight weeks, and we come to the year 14, or end of the sixty-two weeks, and find that Christ was crucified in 33; that is, two weeks and four days after sixty-two. It is evident that the 1260, 1290, and 1335, did begin at the same time—at the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate, which was in 538. The 1260 ended in 1798, when his dominion was taken away. The 1290 did begin at the same time, for Daniel says in chapter 12, at the eleventh verse, that it commenced with the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate. The 1290 reach down to 1828. About that time the second coming of Christ began to be preached. The 1335 reach to 1873, when Daniel will stand in his lot. Here are seven days, or years, from 1873 to 1880.

There are several prophetic periods which fill exactly this space of time. Matt. 24: 37, "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." This was spoken with direct reference to the days; not to what was done in those days, as in the following verse. Noah was taken into the ark seven days before the wicked were destroyed by a flood. May not the coming of the Son of man be seven days, or years, before the wicked are destroyed? Amos (8: 11) speaks of a famine of hearing the words of the Lord. Will not this be after the righteous have gone into their chambers? Then there will be none to preach the words of the Lord. So it was after Noah went into the ark. Rev. 8: 1—"There was silence in heaven about one half hour—seven days—of no preaching of the words of the Lord. Here come in Noah's seven days, Daniel's time of trouble, the prophet's famine; the saints are gone; none to preach the words of the Lord; the wicked are left to meet the judgments of the seven trumpets.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 7.

Since my last, I remained and preached in Cartersville, Ga., till Jan. 16th. On Sunday the Episcopalian minister dealt out a big dose for us, but no Bible in it; said that the man who meddled with prophecy was taking a dangerous leap into the deepest darkness, and that the agitation of this new doctrine in the South was "all babble, babble, and nothing but babble," and ought not to be countenanced by the people. I see that the Southern religious papers are giving us their severe thrusts of late. In spite of all this, many of the people will come to hear for themselves. My meetings are said to be attended largely by a class of thinking men that do not usually go to church.

There are three colored churches in this place and two of them have requested me to preach in their houses; but not having time now, I had to put them off till other arrangements were filled.

I have requests to visit adjoining towns. I leave with the strongest requests for an early return, after having been in the city two weeks, during which time I have preached every day. Bro. Franklin (formerly a Methodist minister) says that every sermon has been a great blessing to him. He is greatly animated with the new light he has received, and will have to preach it. He is sending publications to distant friends to open their eyes. A strong force will stand for the truth in Cartersville.

Reached Long Island, Alabama, near midnight, Jan. 16th, our engine having run off the track on the way, thus detaining us; but no injury was done. Being much fatigued, I passed one day without preaching, to get rest. Jan. 18th, commenced meetings at Long Island, Ala. Eld. Smith, a Baptist minister holding our views, lives a few miles distant, but was present to aid in the services. A worthy Baptist, Bro. C., about six miles from here, holding our views, has already gone to preaching the faith in earnest, having held several meetings near home. He is a man of mind, of firmness, and kindness. I formed his acquaintance when I first came to Ala., and had previously sent him publications which helped him into the light. He is out clear.

Have just received a pressing letter to visit and preach for a Baptist minister twelve miles from this point, in Ala., who is coming into the faith, and incurring persecution for it. He has read my recent work, and adopts the faith, and has begun to preach it. In spite of opposition, truth is getting a foothold in various directions.

Jan. 19th. Although we have had an abundance of rain and mud, I preached to a small congregation, who listened with interest. I find this is the worst season of the year to reach the people in the South, owing to the weather and roads, it being the rainy and muddy season of the year. Southern people seldom hold a series of meetings here in the winter, their time being in early fall, beginning about the first of July, and ending with the last of September. This is the most leisure season of the year with them, besides being good weather, and warm enough. This is their revival season, like the winter months in the north. It is about impossible to hold a series of meetings at this season of the year without having them partially broken up by the rain and mud. By the time a revival interest is started, serious ones are kept away several days by a bad state of weather and roads. And thus the interest is destroyed, yet truth is fastened on many minds.

Jan. 20. In spite of the bad weather, bad roads, and cool house of worship, we had a respectable gathering of earnest listners. After sermon I called for volunteers, but though evidently deeply impressed, none were quite ready to move. Owing to the coldness of the house, it has been decided to move the meetings to the "Macedonia" meeting-house as soon as Tuesday night, in an adjoining town, about seven miles distant. It is thought that house is warmer; if not, it will bring a new class of hearers, in part, to hear the truth.

Sunday, Jan. 21st. The Methodist circuit preacher had an appointment for the forenoon at the house I have been preaching in. When he came, he insisted that I should preach in his place. I gladly complied with his request. But the people suffered with the cold before I could finish my sermon. The house is warmed by a fireplace in one end of the house, leaving those in the opposite end of the house to sit in the cold.

Sunday evening I had a very free time, and at the close of my sermon I called upon sinners and backsliders to come to Christ, when about thirty arose for prayers. After a season of prayer, we closed without further services owing to its being uncomfortably cold. One night more here, and we change for more comfortable quarters. I find by conversation that much interest is being felt on the different topics of truth presented, the immortality question and kindred themes, as well as the nearness of the Lord's coming to reign on earth. Many will investigate. W. S.

ENCOURAGING.

I find the brethren are responding nobly to the "Perplexity" article. It is both encouraging and instructive to read the letters sent in either with back pay, or a full explanation and acknowledgment of tardiness. One half acknowledge the ability and willingness to pay, but have kept putting it off. It is some satisfaction to learn there is more honesty in many than promptness. Others have stated their poverty, and pay a part, giving their true situation, and when they will pay the rest, or report again. This is as it should be. Then the Office knows what to depend upon. Some of the letters are spiced with astonishment that they should be dunned for pay, when the preacher who got them to take the paper told them they could have it, pay or no pay, and gave the preachers' names. This accounts for part of the perplexity.

Now, preaching brethren, we ought to help the Office to spread the light in a different way than this. It costs over two hundred dollars a week in cash to issue the paper. Many good persons do not know this fact. When they do, they will feel, as many have expressed by letter, that something ought to be done to stir up the brethren by way of remembrance. Let us all work together to sustain our Advent papers, or we break the main shaft, and the machinery must stop for want of a motive power. Some are doing well, others will soon see it necessary to act, we hope, and pay up, or tell why they do not. All preachers ought to act as agents, by stirring up, and informing about the tardy, poor, etc. HIRAM MUNGER.

FROM Bro. J. T. DIXON.

I have just returned from a few days' visit to Cedarville, N. J. a village some forty miles below this city. It has four churches, embracing three Protestant sects, and though so near Philadelphia I found a people who had never heard our views, only as a beloved Bro. Merrill, a physician in the place has talked to them when able. He moved there recently, heard our views, preached at Vineland some two years ago, and with joy embraced them. I went by Bro. M.'s urgent invitation. The opposition was strong and manifested itself in ways not very creditable to christians and some ministers. I could not obtain a small Hall (always open to Spiritualists and strolling minstrels), but the Lord inclined a Baptist family to open their dwelling house, and though quite unwell while there, we had a triumphant time in the Lord; much prejudice was dispelled, especially at the last meeting (held by invitation in another house half a mile from first place); it was crowded; some in for first time, regretting they did not attend the precious meetings; were hindered by Priests and prejudice. They wished a longer visit.

An elderly gentleman, not a professor, but apparently an excellent man, with whom I stopped last evening was deeply interested and convicted, believed he had heard the truth, promising to seek until he found. He is a man of means, and wants me to come again without fail when the weather will admit of outdoor meetings. Some others were convicted, one young man, son of the Baptist family. Why I write this is, I find at this late day that there are numerous populous villages and small cities, all over our land, where they never have heard the message and sound of Jesus' soon return, and yet there are plenty of churches and watchmen; but oh, how blind! Can nothing be done to reach more of them? In every place some receive the word gladly, and it is attended with converting power.

My visit to Philadelphia and Camden of some five weeks, I feel has been mutually profitable. I unexpectedly came in the absence of their Pastor, and was solicited to tarry awhile. We have been permitted to hear impenitent ones express their desire for salvation. In Camden intelligent men in other churches are embracing the truth. The congregations have steadily increased. Bro. Burbank, their Pastor, is a man of God, much beloved and respected, and a genuine Adventist, well able to handle the immortality question; and each Sabbath of late is receiving members to his flock of such as I trust will be saved. God bless Frank and his people for their christian kindness to me.

It is duty to add that these churches are not non-resurrection churches; the Elders and members generally being strongly opposed to said views; neither does Bro. B., though himself a "Life" believer so-called, preach those view, among them. There is a mutual forbearance, so far as he is concerned, on both sides. They called him as their Pastor, esteeming him for his works' sake.

"THE SEALS OPENED: OR, THE APOCALYPSE EXPLAINED."

BY ENOCH POND, D. D.

Professor in the Theological Seminary, Bangor.*

We are very glad to see this new effort to expound this portion of the Sacred Word, especially as it comes from the post-millennial side of the Second Advent question, and by a man of acknowledged ability in the Orthodox school. It is evidently true that Dr. Pond has obtained much light on "Revelation" since he wrote up a review of Mr. Miller thirty years ago. In the preface of his book he says:—"Years ago I flattered myself that I might interpret the first five chapters and the last three; but all between seemed dark and mysterious. In the midst of unexplained visions and symbols I was confounded, and could see nothing clearly."

When the Jesuit and German method of interpreting the book was published in America, and endorsed by Prof. Moses Stuart, of Andover College, it fully aroused the Dr. to "a new and earnest attention." We remember it to have produced the same effect upon the minds of many others; and it is not strange that Mr. Pond should feel alarmed for the safety of Orthodoxy when such a strong man in its school as Mr. Stuart, who forty years before wrote a warning to the American churches against "German Neology," had now come to endorse it himself in order to meet the pressing scriptural arguments of Second Adventists. The Dr. speaks in high terms of Prof. Stuart, as his friend and associate, and then enters at once upon the work of refuting his labored and absurd comments on the Apocalypse, as also those of Prof. Cowles, which by the way is scarcely worthy of notice. Many of our striplings have done this over and over again. It is gratifying, however, to see how easily Mr. Pond demolishes the efforts of Mr. Stuart, who places the writing of the Apocalypse and the fulfillment of all its predictions and its symbols prior to and at the overthrow of Jerusalem and the Jewish polity.

The position claimed for this book is, that, "avoiding the theories of Rationalists and Roman Catholics on the one hand, and of the Adventists on the other, the plan of interpretation which we have pursued is the same which has been held by the great body of evangelical ministers and christians in America and in England for the last hundred years." With this start, we might expect to find the Adventists' views avoided or demolished; but to our surprise, we find their views on the principle of interpreting symbols, their application of them, heartily endorsed, and much history quoted to show the fulfillments of the events of the "seals," "trumpets," and "vials," so similar to the positions of Advent publications that one would incline to take him for an Adventist. On the trumpets, he is very clear, applying the first four to the calamities on the Eastern Roman empire—very familiar to our boys and girls. The fifth and sixth trumpets he applies to the conquests of Mohammed and the Turks, adopting and defending at length the year-day theory, giving its use in Dan. 7, 9, and 12, and giving a partial interpretation of those chapters. Thus the Dr. "runs well for a season," and his book, we think, will do a good work among Orthodox people in enlightening them on many points they have much neglected.

We find, however, that Mr. Pond has not given special attention to the chronology of the world. He says, in computing the times of Daniel and John, that the papal beast "arose about A. D. 756, and 1260 years added to this will make the millennium to commence in A. D. 2000, or, in the six-thousandth year of the world." Here he adopts Usher's Chronology, which has been shown by Messrs. Miller, Clinton, Bliss, Dr. Hales, and many of the English and American writers, to be quite inaccurate.

There are some very curious opinions in the book, as, that the four beasts (living creatures) of Rev. 4: 6, are cherubim, and that "the cherubim is a superior class of angels," and that "holy angels are redeemed souls." See page 40. Spiritualism, really. There is much valuable matter in the book. The two chief errors which perplex its author and lead him to "see men as trees walking" are, that the dead saints are in heaven, in the full enjoyment of reward, where they are to live forever, instead of being raised from the dead to reign on the new earth; second, that Christ is to reign in spirit and not in person in the millennium. A careful reading of the book will cause the Bible doctrine to shine the clearer. I. C. WELLCOME.

PROPHECY.

BISHOP A. C. COXE.

Bro. J. B. Cook, writing from Rochester, N. Y., some months since, says of Bishop Coxe and his work:—

"This Bishop of Western New York has written and published on 'Prophecy and our own Times—Two Lectures,' 1871—price 25 cents, as given in a note at the end. He is the President, I am told by his bookseller here, of the Society for promoting Protestantism in Rome. He has been in Rome, and has also seen Dr. Dollinger, and given in his 'Signs of the Times' some special information, though I have not yet read this last named work—fifty-six pages octavo.

On 'Prophecy' the Bishop gives proof for the nearness of the second advent. He makes most of the 1260 year period (p. 17), and gives the epoch of the apostasy both East and West (in a note p. 21), A. D. 609, and three years later. True, in adjusting the whole, he fixes on A. D. 610; and then the 1260 would reach 1870. But again he gives the date of his writing, 1871; and still further, he adds three years to 609, which will carry it on to 1872. Then he embraces an expansive view of the crisis as the prophets specify the varied classes of mankind—'Jew, Gentile, and the Church of God.'

However, I am glad to get this testimony. It may arrest the attention of many whom we cannot reach. I got it the date of my writing, at evening, yet I did not sleep till I had read its seventy pages. My desire was to see if the Bishop had any more profound and comprehensive grasp of the grand sum of prophecy, than others in our more immediate circle; but my conviction is that he does not grasp one tithe of the Bible testimony that Dr. Barbour gives in his "Midnight Cry"—and with far more simplicity, directness, and power.

It would be easy to point out the secret of this wondrous difference as to the character and amount of scriptural proof that the two writers have furnished; but I forbear to give more than this matter-of-fact statement, as I am thankful for each. It is whispered that the Bishop is preparing another more extensive work on the general theme."

REPORT OF CT. A. C. QUAR. CONF.

Conference met at New Britain as per appointment. Preachers present:—B. Hitchcock (Pres.), G. L. White, W. S. Campbell, S. C. Hancock, H. Rockwell, W. Ripley, A. Elliott, R. K. Stark, O. D. Woodruff, L. S. Ludington. Delegates:—P. W. Jones, of Winsted, E. M. Ripley, Pleasant Valley, H. P. Bradley, Bristol, Edson Woodford, of Collinsville, E. B. Lewis, New Britain, G. W. Denny, and Bro. —— Bunnel, of New Haven. The usual formalities were observed, and the several committees appointed; one of which only is it necessary to mention, viz., the "Mission Tent Committee." This committee consists of Brn. B. Hitchcock, W. Durand, and G. L. White. Individuals or churches desiring the use of the tent when the proper season opens, should address the committee through the chairman, B. Hitchcock, Bristol, Conn. It is understood by the conference that all parties employing the tent will also employ their own chosen preachers.

The reports of preachers and delegates were rather more cheering than those of the Annual meeting, some of which I will give in brief. Bro. G. L. White reported that he had visited and labored four evenings in Sharon, where there was but one Advent sister. Meetings commenced with thirty hearers, and ended with seventy. The people seemed kindly disposed, and manifested an interest to hear more. Bro. A. Elliott reported (among other good things) that there had of late been an awakening at his place (Camp's Mills, I think), and an addition of nine young people to the church, and among them his own son, who is a school teacher. Bro. H. Rockwell reported having gained access to a Baptist church, and an attentive audience; among whom or in which the spirit of inquiry had been aroused. Bro. R. K. Stark had found a hearing ear in some new places.

Bro. H. P. Bradley (delegate) reported a rising interest, and a flourishing Sabbath school in Bristol. Brn. G. W. Denny and —— Runnel reported the church in New Haven as waking up. It has forty or fifty members, and a large Sabbath school. Also, that they have more additions to the church from the Sabbath school than from all other sources. They earnestly recommend Sabbath schools as the nursery of the church. Many others reported, and their reports were mostly of an encouraging nature.

The conference was opened, conducted, and closed in a spirit of love and harmony. It was voted to call the next meeting of the conference at Southington, on the 17th of April next. L. S. LUDINGTON, Sec.

Correspondence.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—Saturday, Jan. 27th, I took cars for Hampton, N. H., to spend Sunday and break to them the bread of life. I found on my arrival that there was a meeting appointed in the Chapel for the evening. At the appointed time I went to the place of meeting, found a good congregation of brethren and of the people assembled to hear the "gospel which is the power of God unto salvation" to the believing, and soon it was evident that the Lord by his Spirit was among them.

They have a new, convenient Chapel recently erected, which is paid for, and they seem to appreciate the goodness of God in conferring upon them this great favor. There is much religious interest among them. They love to hear the good news that He who will destroy death, and give eternal life, is soon coming. A number have been converted, some reclaimed, and the good work of the Lord is prospering with them. It was soul-refreshing to enjoy the meetings. The worshipers seem to be of the old-fashioned stamp, that are not satisfied with shadows, or fables, but must have the "sincere milk of the word," that they may grow thereby.

Sunday, the house was well filled, crowded in the evening. Freedom in Christ was enjoyed; and it was a precious day for the cause of truth in Hampton. The Lord is with this people. All seemed deeply interested. Some came a long distance to hear the gospel of the coming kingdom.

The Lord does favor those who make sacrifices for him and his cause. I have never known where the disciples have harmoniously united in building a house for the Lord, and have it free for all to come and worship, but the Lord has prospered them with special favors. I hope the brethren unitedly will continue to sacrifice for the preaching of that gospel that will save from the world and separate men from it. Labor together with Christ and the preacher; bear one another's burdens, and strive to advance Bible truth and save men from death in Hampton.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

BRN. AND SRS.:—I am impressed to still give you a brief account of some meetings held in this part of Maine. The first of January went to the (Borrough) in Chesterville, to help Bro. Rhodes in a protracted meeting. Found Bro. Rines with him laboring to spread the truth. It was very cold, only few attended. Some froze their faces. We enjoyed a good season with the few. Truth is gaining in that place. A few months since the doors were shut against us and we kneeled together in the wood-shed asking our Father's blessing upon the people, that truth might find way to some honest hearts. Thank the Lord that some are rejoicing in the light. This place was where I first held meetings fifteen years ago. What changes since! Many sleep, others live to fill up their days in sorrow while reflecting on the past. One incident I will relate to show how the Lord will work if we obey his calls.

While at work some eight miles from the above-named place, the Spirit told me to go and hold a meeting that evening in the Borrough school-house. I laid down the axe, went into the neighborhood, commenced to give out the appointment, gave notice in two schools, called on one sister who was anxious for me to stop. A lady was at work, much displeased because she could not be waited upon by her mother. As I left asked her if she enjoyed religion. She said no. I asked if she did not wish to. She said she did. I told her to come to meeting and obey the Lord.

We met in the evening. I preached and gave liberty. Some confessed their wanderings. I asked those that felt the need of salvation to arise. The first one was the lady above referred to. We knelt in prayer that evening around the family altar. She asked God to have mercy on her. He answered prayer. As we arose I sang, "Homeward bound." She shouted glory to God, and warned her brother to flee from the wrath to come. Next morning I left. Have not seen her but once since, but learn she is still striving for the kingdom. To God be all the glory. How true are the words of the Lord—"The wrath of man shall praise Him." It is "hard to kick against the pricks."

Our next meeting was held in Litchfield. Many came from abroad to this meeting. Preaching brethren present during the meeting — Totman, Damman, Reed, Doughty, Jaques, Rhodes. Our house was rather small for the people, but we found noble hearts and open doors, and felt it was good to be there. Eighty-nine gave testimony for Jesus, Sunday morning. One young man started for the kingdom. Others were convicted. The truth is gaining in this place. I am satisfied the truth is what is needed, and the truth due this generation is Jesus' soon coming. Oh! may we as teachers have the wisdom of the serpent, with the harmlessness of the dove.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—For some time past I have thought of writing a few lines for the Crisis, so that you may know I am still endeavoring to proclaim the last message of the gospel to the world—that the King whose right it is, is to take the Kingdom, put down the usurper, and give the kingdom and dominion to the saints of the Most High, also to give to those who seek for it, immortality, or eternal life. What a boon! What an event! What a change!

We have entered upon another year; perhaps it may be the last. Are we ready to meet the great change? Is the King about to come? Are we prepared for that great event? Are we able to stand before the Son of man? Let us work while the day lasts,

> "For soon the reaping time will come,
> And angels shout the harvest home."

Have we been too neglectful of our duty to our friends, brothers, sisters, fathers, mothers, children, and an ungodly world, going on with railroad speed to the judgment? Let us beware, lest we with others be found to say that "the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." There is no time for idlers in the vineyard now. Every one that enters the vineyard can work, some in preaching in the pulpit, some in writing, others in scattering tracts, and all in praying for the Lord to sustain those that do labor, and by helping in various ways. Soon we shall have to give an account of our stewardship.

I have by the grace of God been trying to do what I could, in my weak way, to stir up some little churches to duty, and hunting up the scattered ones on the mountains, isolated and alone, and scattering the good seed in new places, both by preaching the word and scattering tracts and books, and hope that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. We have tried to sow morning, noon and night, and have left it in the hands of the Lord, and for the judgment to see what the result may be. We have the past year preached in twenty-four different places; ten in Penn., thirteen in N. Y., one in Canada West, attended three grove meetings, and one campmeeting. I have had the privilege of attending ninety-one social meetings and discourses given by others, preached one hundred and seventy times, baptized three souls, assisted in building a house for my family, so as to be near my aged parents in taking care of them in their old age during the long days of summer. Have been trying to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and trying to get others to do likewise. As to manual labor, I am fearful that it is done. My fall in Brockport, N. Y., last October has injured me, and I am still at the present date (Jan. 16th, 1872) unable to use my arm in undressing; but thank the Lord, my reasoning faculties were saved, and though I suffer every day and night of my life, yet I am thankful that it is as well with me as it is.

My labor has been scattered and among the poor generally; sometimes not even getting a "God bless you"; and in other places a liberal hand has been opened. I am now in another new place, where the doctrine never was preached, and quite an interest to hear. Pray for us, that the word may take deep root in the hearts of the hearers, and bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

Beaver, Pa.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. D. MERRIAM writes:—"The past four months have been to me the most sad and afflictive of my life. It has caused deep heart-searchings, and led to earnest, importunate prayer. The result of it has been, to draw me nearer to God than ever before; my earnest, constant prayer has been, that I might learn all the lessons my kind heavenly Father designs teaching me in this sad affliction. I doubt not his loving hand is in it; and though I know not now why it should be thus, yet I believe all things work together for good to them that love God. And I find it is working for good, by leading me to a state of constant submission to his will. 'The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?'

The blessed hope of the coming of Jesus, to raise the dead, and change the living to immortality, affords comfort, such as earth cannot give. Soon, soon Jesus will come,

> "Robed, robed, in honor and glory,
> To gather his ransomed home."
> "Then, waiting brethren, let us sing—
> He will not tarry long,
> And fill with love the hours that bring
> The glory of our song."

BRO. C. H. HURD writes—"A series of revival meetings have been held at the Central Methodist church in Lowell, for several weeks past, and as the result of the effort, nearly three hundred sinners have professed to be converted. Infidels, drunkards, and one man who had not been to meeting for twenty years, are among the number. Mrs. Van Cott, a licensed preacher in the Methodist church, has been the instrument in the hands of God of bringing about the good work. She is an earnest and powerful speaker, and well qualified for the work.

The Advent society in Lowell have recently organized a Sabbath school, with Bro. Daniel Churchill as superintendent.

The Advent society at West Parsonsfield, Me., are now regularly supplied with preaching one half of the time, by Bro. Mark Stevens, who has lately moved into the place from Brookfield, N. H. The new chapel which has been building at that place by our brethren, and those in sympathy with them, for the most part, will be ready for dedicatory services early the coming spring, it is thought."

SR. B. ALLARD writes:—"Many thanks to you for the gift of the Crisis the year past. It has been a great favor to me and others. My paper gets read at the post office, and then I lend it. Many will read it who dare not take an Advent paper. And then events are so occurring that some of the most intelligent are looking with interest at these things. We have taken from one to three Advent papers ever since 1842, but now, from age and infirmity, we are unable to pay."

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.—It has now stood the test of time, and received in approval not only that popular verdict which in the United States has called for over fifty million copies of the Webster series, but the thorough endorsement of our best scholars, as put forth individually, and in the pages of the authoritative periodicals. It is not only, to quote Professor Stowe, "in many respects the greatest literary work which America has ever produced," but it is in many respects the greatest literary work produced in any nation or age.—New York Mail.

BARBAROUS ATTACK ON JEWS.

Constantinople, Feb. 2. A barbarous attack has been made on the Jews in Ismalia, on the Suez Canal. Several were killed and many wounded, and all who could—men women and children—fled from the place to save their lives. The fugitives have been kindly received by officers of the Porte.

SPAIN.

QUIET PREVAILS.

Madrid, Jan. 31. A dispatch from Barcelona says that stringent measures have been adopted for the prevention of further riotous disturbances. The crowds who assembled Tuesday burned the houses where Octroi duties were collected, and fired on the troops. The latter replied with such effect that two of the rioters were killed and another seriously wounded. The place is now quiet, and, owing to the precautions of the authorities, no further trouble is expected.

Feb. 3. A mass meeting of the radical party was held yesterday. Seven thousand people were present. Senor Echegaray delivered an address, in which he alluded to the reported atrocities in Cuba. He declared that there was good reason to believe there was some foundation for these accounts. He had incontestible evidence that children had been shot, and demanded a stop put to such outrages.

The speakers generally called for extensive reforms at home and in the colonies. Among them were the abolition of capital punishment and slavery; the reduction of taxation and the privilege of trial by jury. All advocated the continued possession of Cuba, and the maintenance of Spanish authority in the Antilles.

FRANCE.

THIERS LOST FAITH IN THE REPUBLIC.

London, Feb. 1. In a recent conversation with General Billott, President Thiers is reported to have said: "I am sincerely in favor of a moderate Republic, and long thought it possible, but I now see that I was mistaken, and that a republic cannot exist even with my aid. I am compelled to seek the happiness of the country elsewhere.

PARIS, Feb. 5. Great interest is felt here in the discussion of the Alabama claims in England, and the result is awaited with much anxiety.

BELGIUM.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 5. The Archbishop of Cologne has ordered four Professors of the University to subscribe to the dogma of Papal infallibility, the penalty in case of refusal being excommunication.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE ALABAMA TREATY.

London, Feb. 3. All the leading morning journals on the Alabama claims are criticising the American case with great severity, and urging the Government to declare its opinion and purposes in regard to the demand for indirect damages.

The Times to-day declares that England must immediately give notice to the Geneva arbitrators and to the American Government, that if such action has not already been taken, that it the American case is reformed arbitration may be happily concluded.

The Daily Telegraph reports that negotiations to that end have been opened, and that the British representations are not received in a friendly manner.

The National Religious Convention.

PROPOSED RECOGNITION OF GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Cincinnati, Jan. 31. The National Convention to secure a religious amendment to the Constitution met to-day at Thorn's Hall. About two hundred and fifty delegates were present from different States. The Convention was called to order by Prof. Stoddard of Wooster University. Judge W. B. Hogans of Cincinnati was chosen President.

Letters were read from Judge Strong, of the Supreme Court of the United States, Prof. Seeley of Amherst College, and others, expressing regret at their inability to attend. Mr. Abbott, editor of a Toledo paper, advocated free religion, and asked leave to utter a remonstrance against the objects of the convention, which was objected to, but was finally requested to reduce the remonstrance to writing and present it to the Business Committee. The Committee on Resolutions reported a series, which were laid over for discussion, recognizing the necessity of inserting an explicit acknowledgment of God and the Bible in fundamental law, and stating that the proposed religious amendment is directly opposed to the union of the Church and State. Adjourned until to-morrow.

Feb. 1. The Religious Constitutional Amendment Convention discussed the resolution relative to the Bible in the schools to-day. The remonstrance of Mr. Abbott is that the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Constitution would establish aristocracy of Christianity, and tend to ruin the country.

Rev. A. D. Mayor replied to Mr. Abbott's protest against a constitutional amendment recognizing God and the Bible. Pending the taking of a collection for the purposes of the Convention, Rev. Chauncy Barnes of Athens, Ohio, took the stand and proceeded to show by a chart the principle that belongs to the practical government of Christ. One of the peculiarities of this was that preachers should have no salary. He was called to order.

Professor Sloane said the chart was an absurdity.

Mr. Barnes said he hoped that the spirit of prejudice would be cast out of the Convention. He was speaking of what God had him to do. The Rev. Mr. Barnes has built a Spiritualist temple in Athens county. If the Spirit of God, which actuated that man in Athens county, could move the hearts of those present, the contributions would be more liberal.

A voice—"What church do you belong to?

Mr. Barnes—"I do not belong to any of your earthly man-given governments. I believe in the government of the Lord Jesus Christ. I want you to understand that I am talking against the spirit of prejudice."

The chairman called him to order, and at this juncture a scene of great disorder prevailed and cries of "Stop him," "Put him out," were heard. When quiet was restored Mr. Barnes said he had been excited; and as Paul said, he had been caught up and would now come down. (Laughter.)

Extracts from a paper prepared by Professor Taylor Lewis of Union College, New York, on the impossibility of State neutrality in morals and religion, was read and well received.

The Convention closed its session to-night.

Feb. 2. At last evening's session of the Religious Convention several addresses were made, and the following officers elected: President, Judge William Strong; Vice Presidents, Gov. Washburn of Massachusetts, Gov. Harvey of Kansas, ex-Governor McClurg of Missouri, Lieut. Governor Cumback of Indiana, Judge Murray of New York Supreme Court, Charles G. Nazro of Boston, Bishops Easton, Cummings, Morris, Kerfoot, Simpson, Huntington, Scott and McIlvain, President Miner, of Tufts College, Mass., Prof. Seeley of Amherst, and others; Secretary, Rev. Dr. McAllister. Adjourned sine die.

THE SNOW BLOCKADE.

Omaha, Neb., Jan 31. Three eastward bound trains on the Union Pacific Railroad arrived at Cheyenne during last night, some of the passengers claiming to have been sixteen days on the road from Ogden. They report that when they got through the drifts the wind blew the snow back into the cuts and refilled them. Rawlins station reports that the wind is blowing and the snow drifting. Two trains going west got to Copper Lake, and remained there until to-day, when they started west with snow-plows and a large force of men. A passenger train starting at Sidney station was run into by another passenger train to-day, and one passenger was injured.

Feb. 3. The Pacific Railroad at last accounts was blocked between Laramie and Rawlins, and also west of Rawlins. The snow was still drifting, and the prospects of the road getting clear were as bad as ever. A train left Ogden yesterday for the East, composed of Central cars, as there were no Union cars west of the blockade. This last eastward train is probably now with others in the drifts at Creston.

COLD WEATHER IN THE NORTHWEST.

Chicago, Feb. 1. Reports now coming to hand from the Northwest show the change in the temperature on Saturday night and Sunday to be much greater than first stated, and that there has been great suffering and some loss of life on the plains.

A dispatch from Sioux City says that several deaths occurred near that city from exposure. Two men, father and son, named Patrick and Michael Jordan, were frozen to death on Percy creek, ten miles north of that place.

When found, the bodies were within twenty rods of a house. They had come six or seven miles for a load of wood, and were overtaken suddenly by the storm, when they became bewildered and could not reach a shelter. Three men, Hollanders, names unknown, were frozen to death on Rock river, Sioux county, Sunday.

A dispatch from Vermillion, Dakota, says that several persons perished from cold in that valley. Two boys were caught in the storm near Lodi. One was frozen to death, and the other had his arms and legs badly frozen. They will be amputated. Two men are reported dead from the cold in Turkey Creek, in Dakota, about fifteen miles from here, and several other deaths are reported, the particulars of which have not been received.

The storm was of unprecedented severity and will be long remembered. A train on the Illinois Central railroad, due at Sioux City Saturday, is lying at Lemars with no prospect of getting through. It will probably not reach there before to-night. The road is completely blocked. The snow is packed very hard and will have to be shoveled.

SEVERE WEATHER IN THE WEST.—The Cheyenne Leader of Jan. 24th says that the weather has been so severe at Sherman within the past three days that the men employed to clear the road could not be kept at their work more than a few minutes at a time. Neither money, threats, persuasion, nor revolvers would avail to keep them out. The wind blows a hurricane all the time, and the thermometer ranges at from ten to twenty degrees below zero. If the wind would subside it is the opinion of railroad men that the road could be opened in twenty-four hours. At Cheyenne, on Tuesday afternoon, the wind suddenly rose to a tempest. The air was densely filled with snow, which whirled and twisted in all directions. So dense was the mass of snow flakes in the air, and so powerful and irresistible the wind, that one could not see a yard in advance, even on the side-walks, where the street was sheltered by a continuous row of buildings. A person was liable to be lost in the most familiar localities, and some citizens who happened to be out lost their way within half a block of their own houses, one lady becoming bewildered when almost inside her own door-yard. The children at the public school had to be taken to their homes, as it would have been utterly impossible for them to have made their way alone through the storm. This terrible squall continued until after midnight. The morning was one of the coldest ever experienced in the city, the mercury indicating twenty degrees below zero.

THERE was a remarkable auroral display in this city early Sunday evening. Instead of being in the north, as usual, the display was mainly in the south and southeast. The horizon was so brilliantly illuminated as to lead some to suppose that a conflagration was in progress in the suburbs. The colors were bright crimson and green.

In Brief.

—— The proof sheets of the Mormon Bible are said to be in possession of Major Gilbert of Palmyra, N. Y., who superintended its printing and proof reading. The manuscript which was furnished him by the Smiths was without punctuation, or division of chapter and verse.——Three sections of the International Society are in operation in Washington.——Three Italian scientists are about to make some pendulum experiments in the Mont Cenis Tunnel for the purpose of determining the gravity of the earth.——A letter from St. Petersburg says that the course of Catacazy met the approval of his associates in the Foreign Office. Secretary Fish is severely criticized.——The Euphrates Valley Railway will soon be an accomplished fact. A through line from Constantinople to India is one of the imperative measures of the day.

MINISTERS talk too much themselves, and are poor listeners. It helps a human soul more to say five sentences out of its own wants, sorrows, deficiencies, and lights to the pastor in a religious direction, than to hear him talk a whole hour. Good listening in the household visit is rarer than good talking, and more instructive to pastor and people.—Liberal Christian.

VERMELIA—WAKEMAN. By Eld. G. W. Stetson, Sunday, Jan. 28th, at the Second Advent Christian Chapel, Fairfield, O., MR. R. DWIGHT VERMELIA and Miss ALICE WAKEMAN, both of Fairfield.

Notices.

A SPECIAL CONFERENCE will be held in the Second Advent Chapel on Central St., Worcester, Mass., to commence on Tuesday, Feb. 6th, at two o'clock P. M., and to continue every day and evening through the week and over the following Sunday. The special object of this conference will be to examine the evidences relating to the time of the Lord's coming; to get more fully prepared for that event, and to lead sinners to Christ before he comes to close up the scenes of probation. A cordial invitation is extended to all, and especially to all the preaching brethren.

> "The more that come with free good will,
> Will make the banquet sweeter still."

By unanimous vote of the church.

DR. H. W. BUXTON, W. F. COLLIER, E. G. HIGGINS, } Committee.

A QUARTERLY session of the Mass. Conference will be held in Brimfield, Mass., to commence Feb. 20th, 1872, evening, and continue through the week and over the following Sunday. Meetings morning, afternoon, and evening. This is a place where they need help. They have a Chapel, and give us an urgent invitation to meet with them in conference. All that attend will be welcomed and cared for. We hope the brethren in all that region will make an effort with sacrifice to attend the meeting. Come, if possible, at the commencement, and stay through. Let the preachers who can be present, that more interest may be given to the meeting. C. H. BARNES, Sec.

BRO. COUCH may be expected at the Conference, Brimfield, Mass.

THE NEXT session of the Maine Ministerial Bible School, will be held at Kennebunkport, commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, to continue as long as may be thought best.

The object for which this school is called is that ministers, by study and interchange of thought and discussion upon passages hard to be understood, may be better qualified to go forth as teachers in the great school of Christ. All clergymen are invited.

W. H. MITCHELL, Teacher.
J. ALBERT LIBBY, Secretary.

A SPECIAL conference will be held at West Poland, Me., Free Chapel, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 22d, to continue over the following Lord's day. Bro. Albion Ross is engaged to be with us, and all the brethren and sisters in the vicinity are cordially invited.

J. ALBERT LIBBY.

THE SECOND quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held with the church at East Rochester, commencing Feb. 21st, at half past seven P. M., to hold over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is extended to all. Come, brethren, with the armor on.

T. W. PIPER.
J. G. SMITH.
C. H. FLETCHER.

THERE will be a protracted meeting in the Union meeting-house, at Little White Creek, Washington Co., N. Y., commencing at half past six o'clock, Tuesday evening, Feb. 13th. Brn. Pike and Flagg will assist in preaching the word.

R. L. HARRISON.

A PROTRACTED meeting in So. Rochester, N. H. (at the chapel) will commence Feb. 13th, at seven o'clock P. M. A general invitation is given to all to come and labor for sinners. Bro. Wells and others will be present to preach the word.

J. L. CHUTE.

☞ NOTICE is hereby given that the Alton Bay Campmeeting Committee have made arrangements with J. D. Swain to build tents for all who wish to hire them built the coming year. We recommend him as a good practical carpenter, who can be trusted with the business. All who wish his services, correspond with him immediately, as he can procure lumber at this season to better advantage. Address J. D. Swain, Portsmouth, N. H., Box 1445. J. COUCH.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—By Bro. Geo. T. Adams, from the brethren and sisters in Worcester, Mass., $12; A Steward, $5; I. W. Brooks, $2; A Sister in Vermont, $2; H. B., 75 cts.

We return many thanks for so kindly remembering us, and we pray our heavenly Father may bless you and reward you abundantly.

S. A. INGHAM.

THREE years ago this winter, some brother or friend living in the State of New York, wrote to Bro. S. C. Raymond, of Illinois, concerning one hundred and sixty acres of land which he owned on the Mississippi river bottoms in Illinois, near Kinderhook, in either Adams or Pike Co.'s. If this should meet the eye of that person now unknown to me, if he still owns the land, and if he will address S. C. Raymond, 300 W. Van Buren St., Chicago, Ills., he will hear of something to his advantage. S. C. R.

ELD. JOHN COUCH is pastor of the Second Advent Church in Chelsea, Mass., and all communications relative to supplying the desk must be directed to him hereafter.

HAVING completed my engagements with three churches, I am now at liberty to fill new calls more extensively, and devote my time to the work of an Evangelist and Missionary. As there are no means raised for that purpose, I hope those who wish my labors will write to me the prospects for good, and the interest to sustain, that I may arrange to save time and expense. Do not delay to write. Address Peter S. W. Deyo, Charles City, Iowa.

"GEORGE NEWMARK'S HYMN."

Leave God to order all thy ways,
And hope in him, whate'er betide;
Thou'lt find him in the evil days
An all sufficient strength and guide.
Who trusts in God's unchanging love,
Builds on the rock that nought can move.

What can these anxious cares avail—
These never ceasing moans and sighs?
What can it help us to bewail
Each painful moment as it flies?
Our cross and trials do but press
The harder for our bitterness.

Only your restless heart keep still,
And wait in cheerful hope, content
To take whate'er His gracious will,
His all discerning love hath sent;
Nor doubt our inmost wants are known
To him who chose us for his own.

He knows when joyful hours are best;
He sends them as he sees it meet;
When thou hast borne its fiery test,
And now art freed from all deceit,
He comes to thee all unaware,
And makes thee own his loving care.

Nor in the heat of pain and strife,
Think God hath cast thee off unheard,
Nor that the man whose prosperous life
Thou enviest, is of him preferred;
Time passes, and much change doth bring
And sees a bound to every thing.

All are alike before his face;
'T is easy to our God most high
To make the rich man poor and base,
To give the poor man wealth and joy;
True wonders still of him are wrought,
Who setteth up and brings to nought.

Sing, pray, and swerve not from his ways,
But do thine own part faithfully;
Trust his rich promises of grace,
So shall it be fulfilled in thee;
God never yet forsook at need,
The soul that trusted him indeed.

THE HARMONY OF SCRIPTURE ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

(From the Rainbow, Eng.)

The truths contained in the views of Origen and Augustine reconciled by the earlier doctrine of conditional immortality.

AN ADDRESS PREPARED AT THE REQUEST OF A RURIDECANAL CHAPTER.

BY THE REV. SAMUEL MINTON, M. A.

(Concluded.)

DEATH.

If this be so, it follows, as a matter of course, that the death, which is the wages of sin, must be the loss of that physical life; a conclusion which is supported by the strongest corroborative evidence that could well be conceived.

In the first place, there is no other death which can be inflicted on impenitent sinners in the day of judgment. What is death? The cessation of life. There are various kinds of life, and therefore there are various kinds of death;* but death, regarded as an act, is the cessation of life, and nothing else. Regarded as a condition, it is the state of anything from which life has departed. We speak inaccurately of dead matter, meaning only that it is without life; but, properly speaking, nothing is dead that has not died, and nothing can properly be said to die that could not have been said, in some sense or other, to possess life. The first question therefore is, What kind of life will the wicked possess in the day of judgment to be deprived of? If they are then to suffer death, it must be by the deprivation of some life which they then possess. What can it be?

Spiritual life they lost in Adam, and have never regained. They are already dead in "trespasses and sins." In that sense "they have no life in them," and therefore have none to be deprived of. They are already "alienated from the life of God," "children of wrath," "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel," "without God." It cannot be therefore the loss of holiness or of God's favor that will constitute "the second death," to be inflicted on them at the final judgment.

Neither can it be the loss of peace and joy and happiness; for these they do not possess, and therefore cannot be deprived of. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." "Man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upwards." "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." Some of them, no doubt, enjoy "the pleasures of sin for a season;" but many are debarred even from these, and pass whole lives of unredeemed misery from their cradle to their grave. To talk of their possessing any thing in the way of happiness, which could be called life, and the loss of which could be called death, is simply absurd. That divine power would be able to make them still more wretched than they are, of course we admit. But it would be an utter abuse of language to call that taking away their life, or inflicting death upon them. We are waiving the question, whether happiness in itself, apart from holiness and the conscious enjoyment of God's favor, could ever properly be called life; and we are also waiving any consideration of the intermediate state—or else we should ask, What life does the rich man in hades now possess, that can be taken from him when he is cast body and soul in gehenna? The state of the wicked in this life is quite sufficient to decide the question. And we ask, What life do they possess, that can be taken away or destroyed, except their natural life, which consists in the possession of a reasonable soul and body? What other death can they die, except physical death?

The Augustinian theory is, that the second death will merely be a continuation of their present spiritual death, that is, alienation from God, with a vast addition to their unhappiness both in mind and body. But this is not the view that Scripture gives of it. Scripture tells them they shall die, and not merely that they shall continue dead under circumstances of aggravated misery. It represents God himself as inflicting death upon them, casting them into hell, and destroying them body and soul. And God never inflicts spiritual death upon any one. They destroy themselves spiritually, and therefore God destroys them in some other way. What other way is there, except by depriving them of the only life they have left?

And was not this manifestly the death threatened to Adam if he disobeyed? Does any one seriously believe that he could possibly have understood the words, "Thou shalt surely die" to mean—either, Thou shalt incur the penalty of everlasting misery,—or, Thou wilt have to undergo corrective discipline for thy restoration to holiness? Could he have imagined it to mean any thing but that he should become like "the natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed," and should "utterly perish?" And is it conceivable that the Creator, when placing him in a position of such tremendous responsibility, would fail to put before him with the utmost clearness what would be the consequence of failure; or, that he would veil the terrific prospect of eternal torment under the simple word—die? Unless the wages of sin has since then undergone a radical and unspeakably awful change, it must surely be—death. And that it had not undergone any change, at least to the time of Moses, is evident from St. Paul's adducing the death of infants, "who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression," as an instance of the penalty incurred by Adam's sin. It was not spiritual or figurative, but literal, bodily "death" which "reigned over them."

* "The word death, however, has remained true to its original in its various applications. Thus, we have in Scripture the expressions 'dead to sin—dead to the law'; in our Catechism we have the phrase 'a death unto sin;' in ordinary life we speak of persons as being dead to certain passions or affections. All such expressions are derived from physical death, and are true to its original sense. They imply the departure and non-existence of relations and feelings which once were living and strong—their death. To the sense imposed on death in all times and by all nations there is one exception, that given to it in the theology of a portion of Christendom; compelled by a terrific creed of punishment, death is made to mean its direct opposite—life—some condition of being or existence."—"The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment." * Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork. Longmans. A most masterly and conclusive pamphlet.

Dr. Johnson gives ten meanings to the word death; the last of which is stated thus: "In theology—damnation, eternal torments." In other words, theology is compelled, as Mr. Constable observes, to make death mean its exact opposite—namely, everlasting life—in torment.

"THE TONGUE CAN NO MAN TAME."

J. B. CLARK.

This is the language of inspiration, and experience has proved it to be the language of truth. The tongue is the most untamable thing in nature. "For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and of things in the sea, is tamed and hath been tamed of mankind; but the tongue can no man tame." Jas. 3: 7, 8. Who among the sons of men ever yet tamed his own tongue? A person can bridle his tongue. Mark Anthony, it is said, tamed lions and drove them, harnessed to his chariot, through the streets of Rome. Had he tamed his own tongue, it had been a greater wonder still.

There are unruly tongues which produce "a world of iniquity." Some are "full of deadly poison." Such, too, is the deceitful tongue, "whose words are smoother than oil; yet they are drawn swords." There is the sly, whispering tongue, and the babbling, tattling tongue, each of which "separateth very friends." "The words of a tale-bearer are as wounds." He wounds others thereby, and himself too. An impertinent, meddling tongue makes bad worse. When Job was afflicted, the busy tongues of his friends were a sorer plague to him than all his boils. And thus it often happens, that a person under misfortunes suffers, as well from the busy, meddling tongues of supposed friends, as from the malicious tongues of enemies.

There are fiery tongues. "The tongue is a fire." Such is the tongue of the passionate man or woman, whose mouth, foaming with rage, casteth abroad words which are as "firebrands, arrows and death." Such also is the tongue of the slanderer and backbiter, which being itself "set on fire of hell," puts whole neighborhoods and communities in a flame, and setteth on fire the course of nature. How many friendships have been severed by the fiery tongue.

What, then, can be done with such an unruly member, which doeth so much mischief? It is a mighty member. It is like a helm to a ship. Though the ships be so great, yet are they turned about with a very small helm. Even so the tongue is a little member, and doeth a world of mischief. So is the tongue among our members.

First, correct the heart—the fountain, and keep that with all diligence. The foolishness of the lips is first uttered in the heart. Next carefully bridle the tongue; keep the bit upon it at all times; and if you are a christian, you will obey the holy injunction of the apostle—"If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?" No. "Who is a wise man? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom."

As it is of the utmost importance that we rule our own tongues, so, on the other hand, it is of no small importance that we be guarded against the unruly tongues of others. And here I will lay down one caution, and commend it to the particular remembrance of all. Beware of close intimacy with those whose tongues are ever calumnious toward almost every one except the present company, to which they are ever smooth and fair. For he that commonly indulges himself in calumniating, or ridiculing the absent, plainly shows his company what it has to expect from him after he leaves it.

WILL YOU COME TO JESUS NOW?

L. J. ADAMS.

Will you come to Jesus now, my friend? You are lost and perishing, a wanderer in the intricate labyrinths of sin, exposed to the rude storms of life, far from the sheltering arms of the good Shepherd. He came to seek and save just such as you. He loves you and wants to save you. Will you let him? Your feet are treading a dangerous path; it leads to death. You are not happy. There is an aching void in your heart, a longing for something that never comes, a reaching out after something that always eludes your grasp. Your anticipations of the future seldom become present enjoyments. You are restless and dissatisfied, and long for peace, happiness and rest. You may find them all in Jesus. Listen to his pleading voice—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Grieve no longer his loving heart. Trample no longer upon his kindness and forbearance.

"O, sweet soul! but once behold Him,
With the glory-crowned hair;
And those eyes, so strange and tender,
Waiting there;
Open! open! once behold Him,
Him so fair."

He is waiting to speak peace to your troubled heart. Will you let him? With his smile will come happiness, and "joy unspeakable and full of glory."

"The peace that Jesus gives us is worth a life of pain,—
The martyrs bore its impress encircled by the flame;
The choicest gem of heaven he twines around the heart,
No sweeter could be given—no richer could impart."

Doubtless you intend to come to Jesus sometime; intend sometime to break away from the fetters that are binding you to the transient pleasures of the present; intend sometime to leave the broad road for the narrow; intend sometime to test the power of Jesus' blood to wash away sin. Why not now? What if that sometime should never come? What if the cold waves of death should roll over you ere you reach that indefinite point of time as they have over thousands of others? "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." Do not wait. Come now, and "though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool;" and peace and happiness such as you have never felt in the enjoyment of the pleasures of earth, such as the world can neither give nor take away, will fill your heart. Turn, oh, turn from sin's alluring pleasures, and give your heart to Jesus, or you will never reach the land of life.

"There no rose will be tinted with the blood of the slain,
Or the spotless lily bend o'er the foul crimson stain;
And the air will not be burthened with grief's softest sigh,
Or tears ever sparkle in the immortal eye."

Never hear the Master say—"Well done, good and faithful servant . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord;" never bear the palm of victory; never wear the crown of glory, nor the spotless robe; never rest in the Father's house of many mansions. Can you bear the thought? You cling to this life though here joy is mingled with sorrow. The flowers that to-day blossom around your pathway to-morrow may fade and die. The loved ones that to-day gather smilingly around you may lie cold and lifeless in the enemy's embrace, ere again the sun shall gild the eastern horizon. You too are passing away from life, and when the shadows of death thicken around you, where will be your hope? Will you come now? "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."

You say it is hard to start; that some will laugh at you and some oppose you. I know it. But it will be harder to meet the condemning glance of the Master and hear him say—"Depart from me;" . . . I know you not." And think of what you will lose if you do not come. Eternal life and happiness, beyond the reach of sorrow and suffering, in the paradise of God, surrounded by fair and fadeless scenes. It will not pay to be ridiculed or frightened from the path of duty. Everything may depend on the decision of this hour. Oh, if you only knew how much Jesus loves you, it seems to me that you would not, could not, stay away any longer.

"Rest, dear soul, he longs to give you."

Will you let him? Will you come to Jesus now, my friend?

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 5.

R. S. WILLARD.

Heart-searchings—A Pruning—Heart yearning for Mission Life—A Field of Labor—Commence with the Children, and through them reach the Parents—Pastor's help—Church constituted—Pastor called—Long tarry of "Evangelist"—Household converted.

During these years as with a lighted candle did the Lord show me my heart. A sense of vileness in his sight rested upon me. To such declarations of the divine Spirit as the following I could fully subscribe—"The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it?" Jer. 17: 9. "For I know that in me [that is, in my flesh] dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not. For the good that I would I do not; but the evil that I would not, that I do." Rom. 7: 18, 19. My conflicts were fierce; but, bless God, I was not always the vanquished. As the rays of the morning sun gleaming through the foliage of the wood cheers and charms every beholder, even so struggled the light of the Spirit of God in my heart, dispelling the damps and darkness of sin, and giving place to the "Sun of righteousness [to] arise with healing in his wings."

I had just passed through a season of severe pruning at the hand of the Great Husbandman in the decease of our infant daughter, whom I was enabled to yield to God. She was not wrested from me, but my will acquiesced in the will of God; and what cordials did he administer to my bleeding heart! Such as this—"Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance and my God." Ps. 42: 11. Then to console me in her sufferings, the sufferings of the Son of God were so used of the Comforter to show me, as I never before saw it, the loving hand of my heavenly Father in giving his Son for me and for my suffering child. Oh, said I, can I doubt such love? and now if he ask my child, can I withhold it? Lord, not my child only, but myself, and all that I have, I felt to be a poor oblation.

"I want Thine own hand to unbind
Each tie to terrestrial things,
Too tenderly cherished, too closely entwined,
Where my heart so tenaciously clings."

Now, perhaps, as never before, the language of my heart was, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? There was at this time a special interest in the church in behalf of Foreign Missions, and my young heart yearned to spend its life-long energies upon this altar in making known a Savior's dying love which had so availed for me.

Under the patronage of the Baptist denomination, my husband was at this time active in the purchase of lands for the erection of a Theological Seminary at Covington, Ky., just opposite Cincinnati on the banks of the Ohio river; and being appointed their agent, his presence was required to superintend the work. Thus, in the providence of God, we were led to remove thither. This was the field appointed us in the wisdom of God, instead of a foreign mission; and our work, as it proved, was to be instrumental, with noble helpers, in the planting of a church and the salvation of some souls, as we humbly hope it may prove in the day of the Lord Jesus. My heart burned within me to do God's will, to win souls to Christ. My zeal in after years may have been more according to knowledge, but never was the flame more intense and enduring than during our five years sojourn in this a border State of the "sunny South."

We found this our new field "white already to harvest." The youth first claimed our attention. And with the assistance of Bro. J. W. Jones, a true yoke-fellow in the Lord, we soon gathered the children together in a large room in his house. Great tenderness was manifested by the children, and a willingness to learn of Jesus and the way of salvation; and in a little time our members so increased that our room became too small, and we deemed it best to get a larger room in town, as we were out a short distance. In this we were successful, and had the pleasure of seeing seventy-six pupils in attendance on the first day. Two evenings in the week were devoted exclusively to the youth about us in Bible readings and instruction, and many cheering tokens were given that our labor was not in vain in the Lord. We next turned our attention to the parents; some of these had been professors of religion, but had become indifferent and worldly. The long winter evenings were spent in visiting from house to house, in conversation and prayer with this class, encouraging them to duty in family and social prayer; prayer and conference meetings were appointed, and an interest awakened.

Our pastor frequently came over and preached to us, which greatly encouraged us and aided our efforts. On one of these occasions of evening preaching, we were urgent that he tarry with us during the night, fearing lest from the lateness of the hour he be under the necessity of crossing the river in a skiff. But to our entreaties he trustingly rejoined in the language of another—"Do you not know that I am immortal until my work is done?"

In time, the way was opened for the gathering together of the scattered members and bringing them into gospel order as we then understood it. Our pastor, Eld. J. B. Cook, officiated, assisted by Dr. S. W. Lynn, pastor of the Second Baptist church in Cincinnati, who gave the right hand of christian fellowship to my husband, in behalf of the infant church of nineteen members. This was an occasion of special interest and thanksgiving to our God, who had so graciously worked here to the glorification of his own great name; and in one month from this date nineteen more were added. Thus the Lord was pleased to cheer and comfort the hearts of his people. The church in time became so strong as to give Elder Cook a call; to which, after due consideration and prayer, he responded in the affirmative. At the close of the first quarter, husband invited our dear pastor with his family to share a home with us, as the easiest way to support him without incumbrance to the church during its infancy. Thus was our home made like the house of Obed-edom, where the ark of God rested.

In this condescension of our pastor and his wife to forego the comforts of their own home and share that of another, I saw the love of God to me, for I had arrived at a period in my christian experience when I needed this intimate association and long tarry of "Evangelist" with us.

In this our new home, added to the many tokens of his love from without, we were not left destitute of God's loving favor within the family circle. We had the happiness of seeing our entire household, consisting of husband's aged mother, the nephew and the two foster children before mentioned, buried with Christ in baptism before the organization of the church in Covington. What a glorious season was this, to hear from the eldest to the youngest a confession of sins and a profession of faith in our Lord Jesus Christ as their Savior; never can I forget it. As I thus saw prayer answered, and the labor of years crowned with such blessing, I felt that I experienced something of my Savior's feelings where it is recorded of him, "He rejoiced in spirit." We praised God together, and prayed for renewed strength to go on as living examples to our family of the grace of God.

IN MEMORIAM.

L. R. B.

Mrs. LUCY E. BATES, wife of Samuel Bates, first Deacon of the Advent Christian Church of Winona, Minn., after four years of suffering and pain, fell sweetly "asleep in Jesus," Jan. 16th, 1872, aged fifty years, four months and fourteen days.

Sister Bates was a native of New England, and found Christ precious to her soul in her eastern home. In company with her husband and niece, Marietta Bates, daughter of David Bates of Blandford, Mass., who has since fallen asleep, she was baptized, Feb., 1854, by Elder Miles Grant, at Russel, Mass. She came with her husband to Minnesota, May 3d, 1855. They made them a pleasant home in the valley of the Rolling Stone, several miles from Winona, where they have since resided. She was among the first and most earnest to contend "for the faith once delivered to the saints," in this new State, and at all times and under all circumstances "adorned the doctrine of God her Savior by a well-ordered life and a godly conversation." She loved the house of God and the place of prayer, and ofttimes traveled many weary miles when this country was new, to meet with those of "like precious faith," and listen to the preaching of the Word, which was as manna to her soul.

Four years since she was visited by a very trying and lingering sickness, which served to bring out and develop every christian grace with such perfection and beauty that all who were privileged to meet and converse with her felt that she had been with Jesus. Four years in suffering and trial she walked through the "valley and shadow of death," leaning upon the arm of Jesus, never repining, but speaking of his goodness, and talking of his power to her companion; moulding the mind of her daughter and sons; a blessed light to the church of which she was a member, and a living witness of the efficacy of the religion of Christ to sustain its possessor in cheerfulness and holy joy under the most trying circumstances. Our ablest Advent preachers when visiting this part of the State, felt their visit was not complete without an interview with this suffering saint. She received great comfort and consolation from the visits of Eld. O. R. Fassett and wife, when in this State, and often referred to his last visit at her home. She was deeply attached to our beloved Eld. Edwin T. Hines, recently deceased, who often visited her, and administered the Sacrament to her in her home. The last effort she made was to prepare something to send him in his sickness. "I am so tired I cannot say but little for him," said she, "but tell him 'God bless him'."

Her husband started to visit the Elder, his hand was upon the latch, when she said:—

"Samuel!" He turned, and saw she was dying. She realized it, and said:—

"Lord Jesus, receive me!" and was no more.

Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, when words of comfort agreeable to her request were spoken by the writer. Address from Rev. 14: 13—"Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." As many as could of the Winona Church were present and followed her remains with the relatives to the place of burial; and as with neighbors and friends they surrounded that open grave, united in singing—

"Sister, thou wast mild and lovely."

"WHERE ARE THE DEAD?"

GEO. THOMSON.

My attention has been called to an article with the above caption, published in the Zion's Herald of Jan. 4th, 1872, designed as a criticism on my exposition of the parable of the "Rich man and Lazarus," as published in the Crisis. As the article seem to be addressed to me in the shape of a question, and a series of questions, I will let God's word answer the question at the head of the article, and then endeavor to answer the others.

"Where are the dead?" "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave [sheol], whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10. In this passage sheol is the same as the Greek hades, in which the rich man was located after death. Our brother may also consult the following passages at his leisure:—Eccl. 9: 4-6; 3: 19, 20; Ps. 115: 17; 146: 4: Isa. 38: 18, 19.

Before answering the other questions, I would state that I deduce two logical inferences from his questions: 1. That he believes that Christ did endorse the Pharisees' faith, or doctrines. 2. That consequently he believes their doctrines were true. We shall see.

1. "Did not the Pharisees believe that the unrighteous dead were consciously suffering in hades, and that the heirs of promise were as consciously happy?"

"The Pharisees are those who are esteemed most skillful in the exact explication of their laws, and introduce the first sect. These ascribe all to fate [or Providence] and to God, and yet allow that to act what is right, or the contrary, is principally in the power of men, although fate does co-operate in every action. They say that all souls are incorruptible, but that the souls of good men only are removed into other bodies; but that the souls of bad men are subject to eternal punishment." Josephus' Wars, B. 2. ch. 8, sec. 14.

"Now for the Pharisees, they live meanly, and despise delicacies in diet, and they follow the conduct of reason; . . . they also believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them, and that under the earth there will be rewards or punishments, according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life, and the latter are to be detained in an everlasting prison, but the forms shall have power to receive and live again." Josephus' Antiq., B. 18, ch. 1, sec. 3.

Here we have the faith of the Pharisees from a reliable authority. Summed up, it is as follows: A belief in fate; the immortality of the soul; the transmigration of good souls; eternal punishment of the wicked; the final resurrection of the saints; the non-resurrection of the wicked. Does our brother endorse those doctrines as true?

2. "Did they not call the home of the departed righteous, 'Abraham's bosom'?"

I know of no evidence that they did. It is true that Josephus calls a department of hades by that name, but it is by no means certain that Josephus was a Pharisee; indeed, their belief in the transmigration of good souls would seem to indicate that they recognized no other receptacle for the good than other bodies. But if it be granted that they did recognize such a place in their theory, they did not locate it in heaven, but under the earth; and their believing it, would not make it true, unless it can be proven that the Savior endorsed it.

3. "Did not Christ apparently endorse their faith, and if it were not true, was he not guilty of 'deceiving the people'?"

To this question we give an emphatic No. In my explanation of the Parable I took the position that the Savior employed that parabolic form, based upon precedents found in the Old Testament writings, without any reference to the faith of the Pharisees. Any other idea would indeed involve an apparent endorsement of their doctrines. But the Savior never contradicted himself. There were two things which the Savior positively condemned in the Pharisees: 1. Their doctrines. 2. Their practices. "Then Jesus said unto them, Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees." Matt. 16: 6. The 12*th* verse explains the leaven to be doctrine. "For I say unto you that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5: 20. Would the Savior at one time condemn their doctrines, and at another time endorse them?

4. "When have the Pharisees desired that the Gentiles should alleviate their sufferings?"

Frequently since their dispersion among the nations, and their reduction to a state of misery and suffering. One or two historical extracts will suffice. "Almost all the modern Jews are Pharisees, and are as much attached to tradition as their ancestors were. . . . In Germany they have endured many hardships; they have been banished from Bohemia, Bavaria, Cologne, Nuremberg, Augsburg, and Vienna; they have been terribly massacred in Moravia, and plundered in Bonn and Bamberg. . . . They have repeatedly, but in vain, attempted to obtain a naturalization in England, and other nations among whom they are scattered."—Buck's Theo. Dic., Art. "Jew."

5. "When have they desired that the Gentiles should preach the gospel to the Sadducees, Essenes, Samaritans, Herodians, and Hellenists?"

Suppose I should ask my brother who were the literal "brethren" of the rich man, and what were their names? There is an old proverb about asking questions, but I will not apply it. But I would call attention to the request made of the great Apostle to the Gentiles, by the Jews of Rome, which probably embraced all the sects. Acts 28: 22—"But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest, for as concerning this sect we know that everywhere it is spoken against." In addition to this, it is a well known fact that there are missionary enterprises operating exclusively among the Jews, and numbers are being converted to Christianity annually. Constant appeals are also being made by Jewish converts, to have the gospel preached to their brethren.

In conclusion, I would ask the writer of the above named article to carefully and candidly investigate this subject. Let him, or any other person, attempt to reconcile a literal interpretation of the "Rich Man and Lazarus," with the invariable teachings of Scripture, on the time of confessing rewards and punishments. While I have admitted that the popular theory has been the "faith of the church for centuries," I have not admitted that it has been the faith of the church for all centuries. We challenge the proof that it was such in the first and second centuries of the Christian era.

VICTOR HUGO should have waited to see 1871 before he called 1870 "the terrible year." For earthquakes, pestilence, fire, famine, tornadoes, and an extraordinary number of disasters and calamities have made this year a terrible one the wide world over.—N. Y. Evening Post.

WALKING.

An ingenious contributor to this paper recently argued that in the progress of mankind the use of legs was being evolved out of existence, and by consequence the organs themselves would finally disappear. We are half-inclined to favor this theory when we see how little favor the primary method of locomotion finds among many people. A person who walks when he could ride is almost as wonderful in their eyes as a man who could fly. But for ourselves, we hope that legs and the use of them will last as long as we shall abide on this planet.

Seriously, we think in the modern rage for artificial modes of exercise, too little time is devoted to that which is the oldest, the simplest, and in many respects, the best. That which is often objected to in it—that it takes time—should be a recommendation. To be kept in the open air for hours every day is itself almost better than any mere use of the muscles. If walking seems tame and wearisome, it is generally a sign of a vitiated taste for excitement, or of exceptional bodily weakness. A good walker—and almost any one may become such by practice—finds a pleasure in the play of his muscles like that which the rider or oarsman enjoys.

In the country, especially, the habit is favorable to the cultivation of that love of nature which gives more pleasure than almost any other taste. There are few finer conditions of body than that induced by a vigorous walk in our bracing American atmosphere. How many of our readers treasure among their choicest remembrances glorious days among the Alps? One great element of the pleasure there was due to the combined effects of the air and the bodily exertion of walking or climbing. If any one says he enjoyed Switzerland and did no walking, we tell him he missed one of the great sources of pleasure there. The soul is never so sensitive to every form of enjoyment as when its medium, the body, is tense and clear. It is then that the sense of beauty is keenest, and the play of all the nobler faculties freest. Nothing is at once so conducive to this and so easily within the reach of every well person, as a long, free, fast walk.—Christian Union.

DR. SANATERE.

We had been talking, my friend (Dr. Sanatere) and I, and somewhat, as was natural, of the weaknesses and ills of life, when he suddenly exclaimed: "I should like to bring up a family of children."

"Nothing easier, doctor," I began to say, referring more to the attempt than to its success, when an expression on his face checked me. I knew the history which had darkened life to him, and driven him to forget himself and live for others.

"No," said he, "not that; but I should like to try if ordinary care and common sense might not save children from so much suffering and make them better in mind and body."

"Well, doctor, suppose you give me some rules; for though I have not any children to bring up just now, yet the knowledge might not be amiss.

"Oh!" said he, "I would give them good milk, which should furnish material for bones and teeth. And not too much sugar, which turns acid too readily, and which furnishes heat, but not nourishment.

"And when the time came for more solid food, I would not starve them on superfine flour—all very well in its way, only it does not give all the material they want. Many a child is cheated out of bones and teeth by being denied coarse flour, corn-meal, oatmeal, the coarser food which helps on the teeth and bones.

"And my children, especially girls, should have their clothing not only warm, but well-fitting and easy. Boys are not so much abused, but girls have little freedom of motion. Their shoulders are tied down, and their waists are screwed up, and just when they are growing and need expansion, they are cased in bony casings which stiffen them up and take away both elasticity and ease.

"It is not a mere question of taste; it is a matter of health or disease, of comfort or suffering, of life or death. In order to perfection, you must have full development. Imagine a race-horse with his head checked up like many of our carriage horses.

"Support? No; they don't want support. How is it in the book of Job? 'Thou hast fenced me with bones and sinews.' That does not imply any special need of support.

"They should keep early hours, should secure quiet sleep, if possible, and should not be waked, if I could help it. As we stop eating when we have enough, so with healthy sleep, in a pure atmosphere, we stop sleeping when we have slept enough.

"They should sleep in a cool, dark room. Many a child's brain is stimulated, especially in these days of gas, by having a bright light in the room after it has gone to rest.

"One word more; my children should not be tilted up on heels. It is foolish enough in older people—merely for a fashion. If that had been the proper way to walk, we should have had a bone growing down on the heel, or walk on the end of the toe like a horse.

"Miss T—— caught her heel, going down stairs, and fell, and was disabled for weeks. I wonder if she ever thought she brought it upon herself, and repeated of the needless care and trouble her sister had in waiting on her.

"But, as I was saying, it is positively painful to me to see the slender ankles of children rolling this way and that on little points of heels. They hardly can wear them straight, and it is so thoroughly unnatural."

"Well, doctor, said I, "your children will be terribly mortified if they can't dress like others."

"Never mind; I will try and console them, and make it up in some other way. When it is a matter of conscience, I can't give way.

"Well, they shall have regular meals; the stomach must have rest. I have seen children who are eating all the time. I have heard of 'digging one's grave with one's teeth.'

"Which reminds me they shall brush their teeth at night, and go to bed with them clean. If there is no chemical action going on at night, the day is not of so much importance.

"And they shall never sleep at night in a single garment worn through the day. If the clothes are to be worn again, they should at least be aired.

"And I will try to teach them the benefits of cold water. I am not precisely a 'water cure man, as you know; but I have great faith in water. People talk of 'tonics,' not half knowing what they mean. One of the best tonics I know is to drink some cold water before breakfast. It seems to give the stomach tone and vitality, and set it right for the work of the day.

"And they shall use it for bathing. Of course, one should never be chilled, but I think there is a sort of electric power in a dash of cold water. If you are weary, a dash along the spine, especially the lower part of the back, is like a shock of electricity, and restores the nerve-power like the sleep of hours."

KITTY AND HIS BOTTLE.

When the little gray kitten was three weeks old, the old mother-cat died. What was to be done? It seemed very hard to drown the poor little thing; but it would not do to let it starve; and it cried so loud, "Mee-ow, mee-ow!" that Aunt Lizzie, who has a very soft spot in her heart for dumb creatures, could not bear to hear it.

She tried feeding him with a spoon; but kitty did not like that at all; he choked and squirmed, and most of the milk ran down on his neck and breast, and made him very wet and uncomfortable.

At last she said to herself, "Babies suck milk out of bottles, and why should not kitties?" She got a small bottle, filled it with milk and water, and put a little piece of sponge in the top like a cork. Then she put it to kitty's mouth. Oh, how pleased he was! He held the bottle fast in his two little fore-paws, and sucked away until all the milk was gone.

Then Aunt Lizzie wrapped him up in a warm cloth, laid him a deep box, and he went to sleep as cosily as could be. In a few days he learned to know the bottle, and would seize it and draw it up close as soon as he caught sight of it.

Everybody who saw this funny sight laughed heartily; and kitty and his bottle had to be brought up to the parlor to be admired almost every day. He was fed in this way for more than two weeks, until he could lap milk out of a saucer; and, as he never knew any other mother than Aunt Lizzie, we sometimes thought he took her for the old cat.

And what do you think this kitty's name is? He was born about the time of the Princess Louise's marriage; and his name is Marquis of Lorne.—The Nursery.

EVENING HYMN.

I hear no voice, I feel no touch,
I see no glory bright;
But yet I know that God is near,
In darkness as in light.

He watches ever by my side,
And hears my whispered prayer;
The Father for his little child
Both night and day doth care.

THE SAME GOD.

A lady was once visiting her friends in Boston, and as she was making arrangements to return home, a friend asked if she would take her little boy with her; as she wanted to send him to visit his grandparents near whose house the lady was going, on her way home.

She readily consented to take charge of him, and found him to be a bright little fellow, and a very pleasant companion.

If was before rail-roads were made, and they went in a stage; and as it was quite a distance, they had to stop one night on the way. The little boy was tired; and when the lady took him up stairs she thought as the room was cold, she would not ask him to say his prayers till he was in bed.

When she had got him snugly tucked up, she asked him if he did not want to pray.

"No," he replied.

She was surprised, and asked,

"What, don't you want to say your prayers?"

"No," was his decided answer.

"Why," said she, "Papa prayed this morning that the Lord would take care of us, and he has taken care of us; and now don't you want to thank him?" He started up, and asked earnestly,

"Is it the same God here, that my papa prays to at home?"

Being assured that it was, he seemed to feel quite at home, said his prayers, and thanked the Lord for taking care of them on their journey, and then wanted his friend to pray, "Because," said he, "it is the same God we have at home.

When the lady went down, he told her she might take the light, for he was not afraid since God was there.

Our little friend was not the first person who supposed that in leaving home he had left his father's God. Even Jacob when departing from the tents of Isaac, was astonished at the visions of Bethel, and said, "Surely the Lord is in this place and I knew it not." Gen. 28: 16. And older persons who have seen in a clearer light the glory of the omnipresent God, often act when on a journey as if God was left behind. Blessed are they who, in every condition, are assured of the presence of 'the same God,' and who "pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath or doubting,"

"Well knowing that Jesus resides everywhere,
And can in all places give answers to prayer."

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

REDEMPTION IS NEAR.

S. S. BREWER.

Arise! thou fair virgin, Christ's coming again
On the new earth in glory, forever to reign;
Bright shining myriads his pathway attend,
When from heaven's vast portals the King shall descend.
With throne veiled in glory, wheels rolling in fire,
Harpers pealing their anthems, saints with them aspire,
In loud sounding chorus that will make heaven ring,
"Alleluia" forever! Immanuel is King!

Behold, thou fair virgin, redemption is near;
The Bridegroom is soon coming, the signs speak him near;
Gird up thy loins then, let thy garments be white,
Take oil in thy vessel, have thy lamp burning bright.
The day will soon dawn, and the day-star arise,
The veil will be rent, then we shall see with our eyes
The Bridegroom with glory in triumph descend,
And establish the kingdom that never shall end.

Rome's blood-crimsoned harlot, thy dread ancient foe,
Is doomed to perdition with fiery o'erthrow;
Soon like a great millstone that's cast in the sea,
Old Babylon will sink, and shall never more be.
Rise! Bride of the Lamb, for thy glad nuptial hour
Hastens to greet thee, when the Bridegroom in power
Is returning with myriads to swell the sweet strain—
"Hallelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigns."

"1873."

F. A. BAKER.

I saw a Pamphlet published in the Crisis, called "The Midnight Cry," which is said to give the "true time for the Lord's Coming," namely, 1873. The book is before me. I find the chief dependence is upon the chronology therein footed up, which the writer seems to think shows the six thousand years to end in A. D. 1873, "without fail," and Christ to come. Now I wish it plainly understood that I do not deny the possibility or even the probability that the Lord may come as soon as Bro. Barbour claims, but I think I see serious flaws in his chronological argument. In the first place, he assumes the very position to be proved, namely, that the ages of patriarchs and the reigns of judges and kings, as presented to us in the Bible, were given to show the exact time of the Second Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the second place, while the round years of patriarchs, judges and kings are given to us without mentioning months and days, although none can doubt that such fractions existed, it is presumed that some of the ages and reigns fell short of that named in the Bible, as much as others overran so as to make the round numbers exactly the truth. Now if the first position could be proved, there would be some plausibility in the second; but while it would be true to say that Adam was one hundred and thirty years old when Seth was born, if he was several months more than that, it would not be the truth to call him one hundred and thirty years of age if he lacked some months of that. The same of all the rest of the ages mentioned. And while it is true that David reigned forty years and six months (2 Sam. 2: 11; 5: 4, 5,) it is correct to say he reigned forty years (1 Kings 2: 11); but if he had reigned but thirty-nine years and six months, it would be false to say he reigned forty years. This argument will hold good in every reign of the judges and kings.

In the third place, I notice the reigns of two kings in the regular line are thrown out entirely; namely, Jehoahaz and Jehoiachim; the former three months, the latter three months and ten days. Now if the dates of other kings' reigns are to be taken as the basis of a chronology, in round numbers, because no fractions are mentioned, on what authority does the writer of the "Midnight Cry" strike out entirely these months and days which are mentioned, and not even name the two kings?

But the chief error to which I wish now to call attention is in the reign of the Judges. Forty-five years are given as the period from the sending of the spies, when Joshua was forty years old, to the "division of the land"; then four hundred and fifty years until Samuel the prophet. Bro. B. begins the four hundred and fifty years thus—"The anger of the Lord is kindled against Israel, and he sold them into the hand of the king of Mesopotamia, eight years." Judges 3: 8. These eight years of Mesopotamian captivity are made the first eight years of judgship; whereas the first judge was Othniel, whose reign is made to date from the end of these eight years. Again. Is it reasonable to suppose that the children of Israel were delivered into the hand of the king of Mesopotamia the very day the land was divided? Paul's language is referred to as proof that the four hundred and fifty years commence at the end of the forty-five, or at the division of the land. "And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot, and after that he gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet." Acts 13: 19, 20. Paul says—"After that" he gave them judges; and "about," without even professing to be exact. He does not say how long after the land was divided by lot until he gave them judges; but we know the four hundred and fifty years did not commence at the division of the land, even by Bro. B.'s reckoning; for he makes the eighty years of Mesopotamian captivity to be the starting point; but we find Joshua to have been forty years old when he was sent as one of the spies, and forty-five years span the time from that till he received his inheritance. Joshua 14: 7–10. This makes Joshua eighty-five years old at the division of the land. Was the anger of the Lord kindled against Israel that year so that he delivered them into the hand of the king of Mesopotamia? If so, that eight years' captivity took place in Joshua's lifetime; for he lived twenty-five years after the division of the land. Joshua 24: 29—"And it came to pass after these things, that Joshua, the son of Nun, the servant of the Lord, died, being an hundred and ten years old." Verse 31—"And Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that outlived Joshua, and which had known all the works of the Lord, that he had done."

It is plain, then, that in order to make 1873 the time of the Lord's coming from chronology, the judgeship is claimed to be exactly four hundred and fifty years, instead of "about," as Paul calls it. The king of Mesopotamia is the first judge, instead of Othniel, as the Bible says; and the captivity commences at the division of the land; whereas Joshua lived amid the piety and prosperity of Israel twenty-five years after the age of eighty-five, at which the land was divided; and "Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders which outlived Joshua."

My prayer is, "Come, Lord Jesus," but a theory which cannot be sustained without misapplying the Scriptures and violating one's common sense, is not very reliable.

"QUESTIONS FOR ADVENTISTS TO ANSWER."

ANSWERED BY AN "ADVENTIST."

In a recent number of the Crisis certain questions are asked of "Adventists," to which an "Adventist" should be allowed to reply. The questions with the answers appended in each case are as follows:—

"1. Do the Holy Scriptures furnish the church of Christ with sufficient instruction to thoroughly qualify her for every good word and work?"

Ans. They undoubtedly do. To speak differently would be to impugn the wisdom of their Author.

"2. If the Holy Scriptures are a perfect rule of faith and practice, and thoroughly furnish the church unto every good word and work, should any one add to or take from this most sacred arrangement or counsel?"

Ans. No, they should not. But it does not follow, however, that because the original Scriptures were in writing, and written, probably, upon parchment, that we should confine ourselves to Hebrew or Greek sheepskin manuscript copies. The Scriptures leave some things to common sense.

"3. Has God ever called, or claimed and authorized any man or woman to go and organize churches and call them 'Advent churches?'"

Ans. I think he has. If I did not I would leave the Advent church and Conference, of which I am a member. I believe, from the bottom of my soul, that the Advent movement was and is of God. Any man or woman who doubts it had best disconnect themselves from it. And right here let me ask, Has God ever called or authorized any man or woman to go and organize churches, and call them "Christian" churches? If so, where? chapter and verse.

"4. Did the apostle Paul, who preached the whole counsel of God and kept back nothing that was profitable unto the churches, ever name the doctrine he preached 'Advent doctrine,' 'Adventism,' and organize 'Advent churches?'"

Ans. That Paul organized at least one Advent church, let who can doubt after reading the epistle to the Thessalonians. There is as good evidence that he called it Advent doctrine, or Adventism, as that he ever termed it "Christian" doctrine or "Christianity."

"5. Should any one be approbated in adding 'ism' to any part of God's arrangement for the salvation of man, or in naming such as have become obedient to the faith—'Advent brethren,' 'Advent ministers,' 'Adventists?'"

Ans. It is not "adding" to any part of God's arrangement to use the terms referred to. It is perfectly right to call any portion of the doctrine of the Bible by a fit name, to distinguish it from falsehoods, or more especially counterfeit doctrines. And if any body hold and uphold truths of God neglected or impugned by other professed followers of the Lord, it is their right and privilege to assume or receive a name expressive of their position. The only question of right or wrong is in regard to what they teach. If they teach error, their sin lies not in their name, but in their doctrine.

"6. If it is the duty of ministers now to preach the gospel of God and call it 'Adventism,' and name churches 'Advent churches,' and christians 'Adventists,' why did the apostles overlook this necessity and neglect this duty? They preached the second coming of Christ and kindred doctrines, but minus isms, ites, and ists!"

Ans. It is not the duty of ministers to preach the gospel and call it 'Adventism'; but in view of the fact that certain portions of the gospel have been neglected, ignored, and perverted, and the further fact that these portions concerning the second advent and its related events are, to say the very least, in this age the most important portion of the gospel, it is the duty of all who understand these truths to proclaim them. Experience shows that if they do this faithfully it will lead to either their expulsion from all existing churches, or to their bands being so tied that they cannot labor effectively. They will then have two alternatives—to become silent, or form a new sect. Hence, I say, Adventists are fully justified in being a separate people. They can satisfy the convictions of conscience in no other way. They were not compelled to take the particular name—Adventists; but they have as good a right to it as to the name Christian.

"7. If it is right for one minister to concoct a name for the church and christians, have not all ministers precisely the same right? And then what becomes of the unity of the church of Christ? Is it not a misnomer?"

Ans. Names neither give nor prevent unity. Names come after divisions are made, not before they exist. I believe there are a few instances where divisions have been made for purely personal ends, and a name arranged previous to the split. But such things are rare. It was not until the Adventists had been thrust out, pushed out, hustled and kicked out, excommunicated, from the existing churches, that they began to draw together for mutual sympathy and support, and so a new sect arose. They would have (previous to such developments) preferred to have remained with the churches to which they belonged. I repeat it, names do not usually make divisions, but divisions make names.

"8. Has any minister of Christ any right whatever to slice off from the body, or church of Christ, a section and call it an Advent, Methodist, Presbyterian or Mormon body, or church? Would not this materially defile the body of Christ?"

Ans. It is the duty of every minister of Christ to tell the truth about Jesus' advent, and what is then to occur, so far as he knows it. And if as a result he is sliced off, as multitudes of us have been—and the work of slicing off is still going on—it is no defilement of the "body of Christ" for those of "like precious faith" to associate themselves together, being rejected as Orthodox Christians, and Evangelical Christians, and Church of God Christians, and "Christian" Christians, as Advent-Christians. God has blessed those who have done it, and will be with them so long as they continue true to him and to each other.

"9. Is there a man on earth who can give even one good scriptural reason for doing this work of supererogation? If so, let him give it. I am exceedingly anxious to cast my entire influence on the side of truth, righteousness, and union. If I am in error, do instruct me out of God's word; I will most willingly bow to its supremacy. I want to be right in everything."

Ans. Is there a man on earth doing the work described in Query 8? If so, let him be exposed. There are men trying to "slice" the Advent body by agitating the "name" question. Whether they will succeed remains to be seen. The doctrine that unity is in a name, and that name is "Christian," has made more strife, bad feeling, barrenness and misunderstanding among us, than all the use of the words Adventist and Adventism since they were introduced.

"10. When a bride and bridegroom are to be married, would it be judicious for the officiating minister or magistrate to interpose and insist on introducing his own name with the bridegroom's? Would not the sanctity of the marriage covenant be defiled at once? and would not the parties demur and sharply rebuke such an insult? Christ is jealous over his bride with a godly jealousy."

Ans. It is high time this sophistry about the name of Christ was exposed. "Christ" is not a name of our Savior, but his title. It is no more a part of his name than "Honorable" is a part of the President's name. It is merely a title. Jesus Christ means—Jesus the Anointed. Now if we are to take the Savior's name, we should call ourselves JESUITS—which means followers of Jesus, and is derived from his name, and not from his title. Moreover, I have little patience with such sophistry, when a moment's thought will show that neither Jesus nor his apostles ever used any name in any such relation as is intimated in the above query. If Paul and John and Peter, as well as Jesus, had habitually called his followers Christians, and impressed upon them that that was their name, then there would be some reason for such a question. But they never use it once in the sense of endorsing it as a cognomen. It occurs as a name given by the populace; as the title of an offence; as a scornful epithet: and that is all. If those who agitate this name-question will please give us a God-given name which he has made obligatory upon all his children, we will accept it. The fact is, the agitation of this "name question" has always resulted in the formation of new sects, and it will have that result among us, if the friends of the movement persist in pressing it.

11. Do not the names Advent, Adventists, and all sectarian names, as well detract from the purity, beauty and simplicity of God's arrangement, scatter a demoralizing influence in society, and wake up the enemies of the cross of Christ to speak reproachfully of our holy religion?"

Ans. No, they do not. It is not the fact that churches have different names that cause reproach, but that they hold different opinions; and chiefly the spirit in which they maintain those opinions. Sectarianism is not a name, but a feeling—a condition of the mind.

"12. Does not the introduction of unscriptural names multiply sects, creeds, divisions, schisms, contentions, strife, jealousies, and sectarian bigots, and a host of other evils?"

Ans. No, they do not. As I said before, the name never arises until after the division, except in case where division is caused by strife about a name, as in the effort to force the exclusive name Christian upon the church. In that case I admit it has.

"13. Paul says—'Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing.' How can this be accomplished so long as some are determined to be Adventists, Methodists, Baptists, etc., etc., and utterly refuse to stand on a scriptural basis? Are the inspired words of the apostle to be credited and sustained by word and deed? or shall we override them and resist the Spirit's teaching and influence?"

Ans. How can we stand on a scriptural basis and be anything but Adventists? I would not remain in an Advent church or conference a moment after I was convinced it was on an unscriptural basis.

"14. Do not those who are so tenacious of the names Advent and Adventists violate their covenant obligation, when they covenant to take the 'Holy Scriptures as their only rule of faith and practice'? Do they not say one thing and practice another?"

Ans. No. And if they did, it is not for those who insist upon all being called "Christians" to "cast the first stone," but, rather, after due thought, being convicted of their error, to pass out, leaving Adventists free from jangling about names—a question to no profit.

"15. Is it not a thousand times better, after all, to stand fairly and fully on the original scriptural platform, where the devil cannot rebuke us for our sins, than to be meddling with matters from which God excludes us, as he excluded Adam from the forbidden tree?"

Ans. A very fine sentiment, but with no bearing upon the subject at issue. God never excluded us from being called Adventists, nor commanded us to be called Christians.

"Says the Adventist, 'Are you ashamed of your name and faith, and therefore ignore it? By no means. Any name that my heavenly Father has seen fit to confer upon his dear children in his blessed word I cherish most ardently, and rejoice and glory in the midst of such endearing appellations. But I am most heartily ashamed of all sectarian names under heaven, because they divide my heavenly Father's family, and destroy the mutual love and friendship of its members. The history of the past demonstrates the truthfulness of this position. I am not ashamed of my faith, no part of it. I love to publish it better than I love to eat, drink, or sleep. Past labors justify this remark."

Ans. God has never conferred a special, distinctive, or obligatory name upon his people, either by precept or the example of his inspired holy men. Let us not be wise above what is written, or teach "untaught questions." We are Adventists; we cannot help ourselves, and there is no good reason why we should try to. There are causes of difference enough among us. Let this of names, which has been forced upon us within a few years, be dropped, and we shall be at least one step nearer "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

THE 1260, 1290, AND 1335 DAYS.

WM. NICHOLS.

BRO. GRANT:—I was very much pleased while reading the remarks of Brn. White, Price, and Cunningham, in the Crisis of Jan. 31st. I always read with care all that comes within my notice upon the subject of time. I will quote from Bro. Price's article—"If papacy is the abomination that was set up, and the year 538 the correct date of its being set up, the 1290 must run till 1828, and the 1335 end in 1873. * * * If the dates above are correct, and papacy is the abomination that is spoken of by Daniel, the 1335 days cannot go beyond 1873. For myself, I cannot see any thing in the shape of dates or figures beyond 1873. As for any great events to take place as proof of the ending of the 1290 years, the angel does not give us a hint of any, although it is natural to suppose that some great event might take place, to note the ending of so important a number."

Now the remarks of the brethren respecting the papacy being the power named as "the abomination," I have no doubt, and that it was set up in 538, I also believe; and that it lost its power to war against the saints in 1798 is beyond successful controversy. So far we all agree, I think. But did any event mark the ending of the 1290 days in 1828? I say yes; it was the opening of the book that was sealed until that time. Since then the visions of Daniel are understood as they never were before. My brethren are witnesses of that fact. The strongest arguments used by Adventists in endeavoring to rouse a wicked world, and a proud, drowsy church to prepare for the great scenes of the judgment day, are drawn from the book of Daniel. If they are correct, surely the book is not now sealed. But the question is, did the proclamation of the near coming of Christ begin about 1828? Let us examine the subject impartially.

I believe it will be conceded that Mr. Wm. Miller was about the first in our land whose mind was drawn to the great subject now so dear to the Advent people, and so momentous to the human race. We read from the Memoirs of Wm. Miller, published at Boston by J. V. Himes, of Mr. M.'s conversion about the year 1816, from which time he was a pious, faithful Bible student until his death. We find that his mind was drawn to the Second Advent as early as 1828. Under that date, on page 92, we read—"He continued to make the Bible his daily study, and became more and more convinced that he had a personal duty to perform respecting what he conceived the Bible to teach on the nearness of the Advent. These impressions he thus describes: 'When I was about my business it was continually ringing in my ears—Go and tell the world of their danger. This text was constantly occurring to me—'When I say to the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die.' Ezek. 33: 8, 9. * * * He continued—I did all I could to avoid the conviction that anything was required of me, and I thought that by freely speaking of it to all, I should perform my duty, and that God would raise up the necessary instrumentality for the accomplishment of the work. I prayed that some minister might see the truth, and devote himself to its promulgation; but still it was impressed upon me—Go and tell it to the world. Their blood will I require at thy hand. The more I presented it in conversation, the more dissatisfied I felt with myself for withholding it from the public. I tried to excuse myself to the Lord for not going out and proclaiming it to the world. I told the Lord I was not used to public speaking; that I had not the necessary qualifications to gain the attention of an audience; that I was very diffident, and feared to go before the world; that they would not believe, nor hearken to my voice; that I was slow of speech, and of a slow tongue. But I could get no relief."

Thus we see the mind of this good man was illuminated with the light beaming from the book of Daniel, feeling his weakness and insufficiency to proclaim it to the world. But soon in the providence of God an opening was effected, and it has been and is being proclaimed throughout the world. The preachers now are numbered by hundreds, and the membership by thousands, sending forth the solemn warning—"Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." And the sound is fast spreading; and it all commenced about the year 1828. Surely the seals must have been taken from off the book.

Let us take a glance at the twelfth chapter of Daniel. The prophet sees the great Prince of God's people rise up, and a time of great trouble, such as never had been before. The resurrection takes place, all whose names were written in the book; the wise shining as the brightness of the firmament in everlasting splendor. He was told to shut up the words and seal the book to the time of the end; that many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased. His attention is then directed to two celestial beings on either side of the banks of the river. And one said to the man clothed in linen upon the waters of the river—"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand to heaven, and sware by Him that liveth forever, that it should be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." I understand this "power" to be the same mentioned in chapter 7, verse 25, and that 1260 years were allotted to it—to scatter the power of the saints, and finish its bloody work. Then says the prophet—"I heard, but understood not. Then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?" He tells him—"Go thy way, for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified, and made white and tried, but the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." What will they understand? Why, what is closed up and sealed till that time. I ask, is it now understood? It seems to me all who have given it attention must say that the visions of Daniel are now understood.

The articles we see from Bro. Cunningham and others, are conclusive proof that we are past the great tribulation caused by the great persecuting power, called "the abomination of desolation," in the prophecy of our Savior, and that it was numbered and finished in 1798. But the prophet tells us there shall be 1290 days from the time of the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate; consequently it must run to 1828, when what is mentioned in the tenth verse takes place. Many "purified, made white, and tried." I think we who have been so long waiting the return of our absent Lord know something what this means.

The 1335 days begin also at the same date with the 1260 and 1290. The one reaches to the end of the persecutions; the next to unsealing of the vision; the last to the resurrection of the dead, when Daniel will stand in his lot, and all these great things will be finished; and I can say with my Bro. Price—"For myself I cannot see any thing in the shape of dates or figures beyond 1873."

The teachings of our Savior in Matt. 24 and 25 to me also are conclusive evidence that we are now on the eve of the great event which is so dear to us as a people. For want of room we will only mention something we find in the last of the twenty-fourth and beginning of the twenty-fifth. He tells us there would be two classes of servants disputing about his coming. That at that time a class would take their lamps and go forth to meet him; of his delay, etc. This we surely have seen; having for many years been looking for his return; and it has all transpired since 1828.

It is now about thirty-four years since I embraced the truth of the near advent of our blessed Lord, and have seen its working among the people; and while the great mass of professed christians look upon us as a weak or fanatical people, I still believe we are right in the interpretation of the prophecies, and that 1873 cannot pass without bringing the Desire of the nations of God's children. I know some look upon the whole subject as many did upon the preaching of the Baptist at the first advent—as a reed shaken by the wind. I still cling to the blessed hope of seeing Jesus, and being made like him. But oh! what a disappointment for many professing to love His appearing. As I understand Him, but one half of those who went out to meet him were ready to receive him when he came. I sincerely believe it not so much a knowledge of the time, that we as Adventists need, as it is a whole, unreserved consecration to God. Without this the time or events will profit us nothing. I do thank my heavenly Father for the sweet peace he gives to me through our Lord Jesus Christ. I can truly say I stand in hope of the glory of God. O, my dear brethren, let us heed the admonition of the apostle, and "cast not away our confidence which has great recompense of reward, for yet a little time and He that shall come will come and will not tarry."

I hope I have written nothing to cause offence to any. May the blessing of God attend every effort to spread his truth and prepare the people for his coming.

THE GOSPEL PLATFORM.

S. L. MANLEY.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them," etc. The doers of the word are likened unto wise men, who shall be blessed in their deeds. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." What shall the Lord's people do then? "Sell that ye have, and give alms." "Let your loins be girded about, and your light burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord." "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind;" for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Are we doing as thus enjoined? Jesus says—"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Again, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Also, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." Shall we be of that happy class, or numbered with Christ's friends, or be permitted to enter those pearly gates if we do not exemplify gospel faith, gospel works?

"These things I command you, that ye love one another." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to ye are my another." "The fruit of the Spirit is love." And, "We know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." How shall we exemplify this love? Not "by word, or tongue; but in deed and in truth." "But whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Our Savior says—"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." How shall we do this? The apostle Paul says—"Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing." Thus being redeemed from all iniquity, we show that we are his people by our zeal in good works. Again is the admonition—"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." What are we to do in this case? "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate," and "I will receive you." Can we remain in fellowship with secret, oath-bound societies, and expect the Lord will receive us? And "I will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Also, "Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Shall not intoxicating beverages and tobacco, or any thing injurious or filthy, be entirely dispensed with? Let conscience and the letter and spirit of God's word decide.

We are also admonished to "put off concerning the former conversation," and to "let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth"; "neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting"; and "for every idle word we must give an account." The apostle says—"Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

If we are members of this church, shall we not readily accede to all conditions of gospel rule? Again, there is the admonition not to be adorned with gold, or pearls, or costly array; but with "modest apparel." Shall we indulge in any of these superfluities, dear brethren and sisters, if we would be true followers of Christ and the teachings of his word? which declares—"For all that is in the world, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," is "of the world, and not of the Father." Vain, superfluous, or costly adorning, or costly apparel, is not sanctioned here. "And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Also taking heed to our Savior's admonition—"He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words . . . the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." Brethren and sisters, let us by the grace of God endeavor to meet the divine requirements so plainly given us, and then Christ will say to us in that day (which is very near), "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom."

ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION.

A. E. BENNETT.

Much has been said and written on this subject. Many finely woven theories have been presented us, the warp and woof of which are of such foreign material as to prevent its adaptness to home use. Gifted pens have treated the subject logically and philosophically; but the more of logic and theory it assumes, the more it is enshrouded in mysticism.

Probably no subject of such immense practical bearings, no theme fraught with such mighty results, has so little theory as the one under consideration. It is simple; it is practical; so simple, that many who have not the capacity to understand its theory, know it practically, and enjoy it in all its sweetness and purity. It can never be explained satisfactorily, it can only be experienced to be understood. Its beauties may be delineated, its power portrayed in a most vivid manner, but it is all Greek to the inexperienced heart; as much so as the birth of the Spirit was to Nicodemus.

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.

An awakened sinner, to whose view is mirrored a sense of his lost condition, in great distress asks us to show him the way of salvation. Without stopping to theorize, moralize, or philosophize, we in a most practical manner point him to the "Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world." He is shown that by repentance and faith, he will secure pardon and justification. He complies with gospel requirements, and is soon happy in the joys of pardoned sin. He is just as fully justified before God, as though he had never committed a sin.

Well, says one, is he not holy then as he may ever expect to be? We answer yes, so far as his past, actual sins are concerned. But let us look at him a little: His conversion is marked and clear, and he rejoices continually in his newly found treasure; and in the fullness of his heart he sings—

"Jesus all the day long is my joy and my song."

He is become in Christ a new creature. The things he once hated he now loves, and the things he once loved he now hates. By-and-by trial comes; temptation assails him, and some element of his nature is appealed to, which brings him into bondage. A fierce conflict ensues, and his soul is for days and even weeks the theatre of many battles with the enemy; and like Bunyan's Pilgrim, he gets "worsted" in the struggle, and before he gets through with it, he has fallen into condemnation; he has laid again the foundation for repentance.

He obtains pardon, regains justification, and goes on again quite a while. But by-and-by a scene similar in its results occurs; and all through his christian course these are of frequent recurrence. And although he learns some lessons, and gathers some strength, in his varied phases of experience, yet the general tenor of his life is sinning and repenting, sinning and repenting; till at length, weary of the many conflicts and conquests, he groans in spirit before the Lord to know if there is not a more excellent way,

A HIGHER CHRISTIAN LIFE,

Where victories are more permanent, conflicts less frequent, and proclivities to sin less powerful. The Spirit and the word agree in telling him it is the will of God, even his sanctification. He learns there is not only a faithful and just God to forgive sin, but there is a power in Jesus' precious blood to cleanse from all sin. Believing, too, the altar sanctifieth the gift, he is enabled to lay all on the altar. Perhaps it has cost him considerable struggling and suffering to get the sacrifice on the altar; but it is there, and he is at its shrine, waiting in faith for the fire to come down and consume it. Soon the work is done, and he stands perfect and complete in Christ; and whereas a sweet river of peace used to flow into his soul, he is now lost in the ocean, without bottom or shore; lost and swallowed up in God. He has entered into rest, perfect and abiding; a rest which means more to him than he ever conceived of before. It is rest from sorrow, rest from trial, rest from fears, rest from conflicts, rest from sin, and rest from every thing which can disturb or molest.

But, says one, is he never susceptible to these emotions again? Yes, to a certain extent; but not from the same source or cause as before; they may come from without, but not from within. Perfect love has cast out all tormenting fear; not a vestige of it remains. And instead of his holding on by main strength to keep what he has got, he rests; oh, so sweetly rests in Christ, for he has something which keeps him.

Let surroundings be as they may, let the elements about him be never so confused, he is unmoved, for he is kept; he is conscious every moment of the keeping power. Perhaps the circumstances which have been such a source of trial and sorrow to him in the past, stare him in the face, but he is not affected by them, he is not moved, for he is resting, and being kept.

THE BROTHER'S TEST.

Said a good brother, who has lately come into "this valley of blessing so sweet"—"I hardly dared believe I had received what I had for weeks been seeking for, till I found it had stood the test several times, [alluding to some trying occurrences in his business life.] Always when those instances occur, it arouses my sense of justice, and a feeling of indignation arises, which costs me quite an effort to suppress; and I have had to lift my heart to the Lord many times, to keep me from retaliating, or doing wrong in any way. But now as they occur, they do not move me at all. I am so conscious of the keeping power every moment, that I scarcely remember till afterwards, they were ever a source of trial to me."

This is but a faint outline, imperfectly delineated; but the practical details in this experience fill a picture, which far surpasses in beauty, richness, sweetness, and permanance any thing else ever conceived of. Glory be to God!

Worcester, Mass.

SMOTHER THE SPARK.—The tongue is a little member, yet it boasteth great things. It does a large business on a small capital; it raises a mighty storm on the most trivial occasion; it often leads the whole troop of a man's faculties to revolt against him and to make treasonable cause with his enemies.

Few there are, if any, who cannot recall seasons when this unruly bit of flame set on fire not only the whole course of nature in themselves, but also the passions of an entire neighborhood. A little impatience was the first spark, which a moment's silence would have extinguished; but the unfortunate utterance came, and with it misunderstanding and resentment. Every word that succeeded was a burning one, and as in a great city's conflagration, dwellings far apart take fire from the wings of the wind, so persons but distantly related to a wordy quarrel feel its hot breath and are suddenly ablaze.

Safety, as in the case of physical exposure, lies in prevention. It is dangerous to attempt to extinguish passion with words. Silence, like water upon fire, does most to allay the raging element, but it is oftentimes insufficient. Who has not seen an angry man grow still more angry because of contemptuous silence? But many an alienation might be prevented, many wounded feelings be spared, many occasions for remorse and bitterness and discontent be avoided, if men and women were more mindful to smother passion with silence while yet it is a tiny spark.—Christian Herald.

THE JAPANESE EMBASSY.

The people in San Francisco are making much ado over some Japanese Ambassadors, who arrived here Monday, Jan. 15th, from Japan. The Embassy contains five Ambassadors, the United States Minister, De Long, fourteen secretaries, fifty-four assistant members, sixteen attendants, eleven students, and five Japanese Princesses, who are to be educated in an American college. The Japanese government is becoming quite friendly to the American people, and in sending out this Embassy is taking steps to introduce into Japan whatever improvements may be found in the United States. This is considered a very important movement, and the American people hope to receive much financial benefit by opening new doors of trade with the Japanese. Japan is a rich country, but has been comparatively secluded from the rest of the world till quite recently. This Embassy comes endowed with high power to adopt from our nation and introduce whatever may seem to be an improvement on their present system.

"Iwakura; Envoy Extraordinary and Ambassador Plenipotentiary of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Japan, to the Treaty Powers, and Ou Daijin—Prime Minister of the Empire of Japan.

Okubo, Vice Ambassador, and Okura-Kio—Chief Minister of Finance of the Empire of Japan.

Yamaguchi, Assistant Ambassador, and Guimu-Talyu—Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs.

None of these Ambassadors are of second rank. The first named, Iwakura, is principal, and the other four assistants. They all belong to the highest nobility of the Empire, and represent the law-making and executive power and will.

In appearance they are men of intelligence, sagacity and keen perception.

They have in their attendance fourteen secretaries and sixteen servants. Two or more have been chosen from each of the various departments of Government, whose special duty it will be to examine into and report upon the foreign systems and their administration. These departments are as follows: Religion, Foreign Affairs, Judiciary, Public Works, Agriculture, Education, War and Navy, and Finance.

Five young ladies, daughters of Princes of the first rank, are also in their company.

The rest of the suite is composed of bright, intelligent-looking young men, who will be placed in our eastern colleges, as has been done with some of their young countrymen before them."

This is the first time that such a distinguished Embassy has been sent forth from Japan. They are sent out to inspect the institutions, manufactures, shipping, trade, religion, and all other things of interest, for the purpose of deciding what course to take in their future associations with the American people. The Hon. C. E. De Long, the American Minister at Japan, has done much to cause this Embassy.

SENSIBLE THOUGHTS.

It seems strange that sensible, intelligent, well-bred ladies should ever consent to follow such fashions as are adopted at the present time. The sight is truly disgusting to good taste and common sense. But, like other evils, it grows "worse and worse." One folly only leads to another. After a person has commenced to violate the laws of modesty and propriety, to be in the fashion, Satan gains the ascendancy, and will continue to lead them further and further from the christian standard of modest apparel. Even worldly people and secular papers express their disgust at the ridiculous fashions of the day. The following is from the San Francisco Bulletin:—

"How shocked would these ladies of our 'first society' be, if they knew that the torturing and ill-formed shoes on whose stilt-like heels they tilt and suffer, no Paris shopkeeper would ever offer to a lady. To suffer the excruciating pain of the Inquisition, to be crippled for life for the sake of playing the French lady, would be hard enough; but after such martyrdom to be only like the demi-monde of the boulevards, is too bad. For more than two years American women, especially young girls, have walked the public streets with conspicuous chains and lockets, or flaunting bows of ribbon, attracting the attention of every passing gazer to their bare throats and dresses open a cœur, solacing themselves for the exposition by the thought that it was 'perfectly French.' If so, it was a costume which no French lady would wear on the public pavement. The dress of the French lady is artistic, simple, faultless—faultless often because it is simplicity itself. She may wear brilliant colors in her drawing-room, and in her carriage; never on the street. When she walks she wears black or gray, and it never drags on the ground. When she goes to church she wears the same colors, is always attired in the simplest manner. This is true also of Italy. In the Sistine chapel, Rome, no lady can enter unless attired in black, with no covering on her head but a veil of the same hue. What a contrast to the church attire of American women! They are accustomed to think of themselves as perfect saints compared with Italian and French women, yet they enter the house of God as they would a theatre. They don their gayest plumage, hang on all their chains and lockets, take off their kid gloves to show their diamond rings in the sacred temple just as in the Academy of Music. Worse, they stare and comment on each other's costumes, and absolutely make the church of worship a place in which to study fashions—this is not French.

The same lack of fitness in dress is seen in the utter disregard to age, as well as occasions, in the adaptations of dress. The woman of thirty or forty may be as beautiful as a woman of twenty, by her own right, if there is no incongruity between her years and her attire. It is only when the woman of forty dresses like the girl of twenty that she looks absurd. We despise her, not for what she is, but for trying to appear that which so palpably she is not. A French married lady never wears a round hat; an English lady only in traveling; an English maiden never at church. Yet everywhere American matrons, with faces lined and scarred, may be seen with staring jockeys, set on their gray heads like helmets, beflowered and befeathered, and more fantastic than the ones worn by their little daughters of ten; while the little daughter of ten may be seen dancing at Dodworth's in brocade silks and lace collars, old and grand enough for their grandmothers. Flannel and linen and muslin are worthy of their princes and princesses abroad, but are by no means fine enough for the little princes and princesses American. All of which is not French, though to be 'perfectly French' has been the Alpha and Omega of our alphabet in dress. Plainly we must begin to learn it over again."

GRAND PEACE JUBILEE.

Mr. Gilmore, who got up the great Peace Jubilee in Boston, in 1879, has decided to have another this year upon a still more magnificent scale. The following will give some idea of Mr. Gilmore's plans:—

"The monster Coliseum is to be built of corrugated iron, near Columbus Avenue, Boston, at a cost of $500,000. The plan of this building is already in the hands of the Building Committee, and has been approved by them. Unlike its predecessor in Back Bay, this Coliseum is to be a permanent institution, and in appearance somewhat in the shape of the Paris Exposition building. The dimensions will be 822 feet in length and 422 feet in width, and the auditorium will accommodate 100,000 people with seats. Of the 20,000 singers half the number will be provided by Massachusetts alone, and the instrumentalists will number over 2,000, the grand orchestra being divided as follows: First and second violins, 450; violins, 150; violincelli, 150; contra-bassi, 150; flutes, 24; clarionets, 24; oboes, 24; fagotti, 20; trumpets, 24; French horns, 24; tenor and bass horns, 26; tubas, 12; drums, 24; cymbals, etc. The military bands will number about 1000 performers.

During Mr. Gilmore's absence in Europe he met with the most flattering encouragement—Strauss, Benedict, Radidegger, Sullivan and many other noted musicians having signified their intention to be present at the festival and to contribute original works. Godfrey's Guards Band from London, and military bands from all the principal cities of Europe, besides a vast number of singing societies from the same quarters, will attend. The Inman line of steamers will convey these visitors to Boston and home again free of charge. The choruses in different parts of the country are already hard at work rehearsing for this great occasion, and a colored chorus—100 voices strong—have applied from the South. Altogether the prospects are as rosy and bright as even the sanguine mind of Gilmore could desire."

We can afford to wait a little while for our Jubilee, till the Prince of Peace comes, when we may unite with all the pure and holy, out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, in celebrating the World's Peace Jubilee, to be followed by no more night of sorrow, or slaughter on the battle-field. Till then, war, famine and pestilence, with evil of every kind, will serve to make this life but a night of weeping.

COUNTERFEIT MONEY.

That the world abounds in deceivers, wicked men, and liars, cannot be denied. The love of money is truly a strong passion. Men will sell all right to eternal life for a mess of earthly pottage. The corruption of the present age is truly alarming. Virtue may well stand appalled at the sight. The tide of wickedness is rising at an alarming rate. Thousands upon thousands of professors of religion, with scores of ministers, are being swept into the black waters, to be drowned in perdition.

The following is a specimen of what is being done. It was sent to a business man, who was too honest to yield to the temptation:—

"GENTS:—I desire the services of a keen and reliable gentleman in your locality as agent for a business which cannot fail to yield a profit of at least five thousand dollars a month, if rightly managed. The capital required for a start is comparatively insignificant, and, as you are subject to no risk, you can make money as easily and as safely as in a legitimate business, and in ten-fold quantities. You were recommended to me by a traveling agent for a large commercial house in this city. He is an intimate friend of ours, and is engaged in the business himself; otherwise I should not have risked the confidence I now repose in you. I have on hand a large quantity of $1, $2, and $5 Treasury notes (Queer.) These bills are, without exception, the best ever executed in the country, and cannot possibly be detected, even by the ablest experts. They are of the same size as the genuine, and printed on first class bank note paper, and are correctly numbered. The engraving is incomparable. Indeed, no accomplishment in the art of engraving or of printing has been left untaxed to render you as safe in passing these bills as if you were passing good money. I put them up in packages containing different amounts. The price of a $500 package is $25. Price of a $1000 package is $50. Price of a $5000 package is $250. The money must be paid cash when you come on here, or be sent in advance by express. If it suits you better, I will send whatever amount you desire by express, and you may pay for it in the office when it arrives. Of course I will pack it in such a way that no one will suspect the contents of the box. If one of you can come on, pray do so. An interview would be very desirable on my part. You will then have an opportunity to examine our stock at leisure, and be enabled to form a better idea as to the quality of it, and the amount you desire to take away. Still, if your business engagements will not permit a visit, endeavor to send all communications by express instead of by mail. Letters relating to this business should not be sent by mail. We shall have no agent within five hundred miles of you; therefore, the express agent will never suspect the nature of your business. I think I have said sufficient. But I must urge you to keep this matter a profound secret. I deal on the square; and if you remain true to me, you will never have occasion to regret it. As for myself, I manage the business in such a way that the shrewdest detectives cannot get a clue on me. As long as you keep your mouth shut all will go well. As to detection in passing the bills, it is impossible; for my work is first-class, and is equally as good as the genuine.

Since writing the above, my agent at Omaha called, and, after examining the stock, took nearly all the $1 bills I had worked off. Still, I shall have plenty more in a week. Now, sir, if you take hold of this properly, you can make an independent fortune in a year or less. Read the following instructions carefully. They are simple, and if you act according to them, no mistake will be made:—

If you come on, and desire to examine the stock carefully, call at 73 Nassau Street, office No. 2, up stairs. This is my private office, and everything can be conducted here with secrecy and safety. Don't call in person at any other office. But, if you send money, or any communication by express, direct to my other place, as follows:—WM. B. LOGAN, No 15 Dutch St., New York."

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M., PREBENDARY OF CORK. Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, M. D., of Yale College. 8vo. 68 pp. Price 40 cents.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject. We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—1 copy, 40 cts.; two copies, 75 cts.; three copies, $1; one dozen for $3.50;—all sent by mail, postpaid. Please order freely. AG'T.

NEW TRACT.

We have just received a new tract of 24 pages, entitled, "The Coming Reign of Terror, or the Commune," by W. N. Pile. The writer shows that the "Reign of Terror" of 1792 was produced by the workings of Socialism, Spiritualism, Infidelity, Free-Love, and the Commune; and then reasons that as these elements are now at work everywhere, they must produce the same results. The tract treats of the living issues of the present, reveals the awful condition of society, and shows that we are on the verge of "the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

For sale at this office. Price, by mail, single copy, 7 cts.; five copies, 30 cts.; ten copies, 50 cts.; fifty copies, $2.00; one hundred copies, by express, $3.50. AG'T.

Also sold by the author at Springfield, Mass.

CARRIED BY ANGELS.

What part of Lazarus was "carried by angels?" And by what kind of angels was he carried? If we find that a "dead" Lazarus was carried, instead of a deathless soul, and that he was carried by messengers, instead of holy angels, and also carried to a graveyard, instead of being carried to heaven, we shall at once behold the fallacy of the popular view of this matter, and be prepared to see that the conversation attributed to these "dead" men (not to their souls) is on the principle of parabolic personification, a method of speech by which lifeless and speechless matter is represented as seeing, feeling, and talking, for the purpose of teaching a lesson to the living.

1. What was "carried by angels?" Not the soul of Lazarus, because (1) the record does not say so; (2) if this were its meaning, it would prove that a soul could not transport itself, and that it would require at least two angels to carry off one soul, thus proving that angels are very weak, or that souls are very heavy; (3) the record itself reads, "Died and was carried by angels;" so whatever was carried, previously "died;" if indeed the soul was carried, then it follows that the soul "died;" and there would be as much propriety in carrying a dead body, as in carrying a dead soul; besides this disproves the deathless nature of the soul. Lazarus himself "died and was carried by angels"—not his shadow.

2. By what kind of angels was he carried? There is no intimation here given that they were holy angels, or angels from the skies, but just the reverse, for (1) the primary meaning of the original word here employed, (aggelon) is messengers, regardless of character; and (2) there is not an instance in the entire Bible where the holy angels ever carried off a dead man,—and in this case, the only person said to be carried, had "died, and was carried"; first, he "died;" then he was carried." The term here rendered angels is often translated messenger, in its singular and plural forms, as in the following texts: "For this [John the Baptist] is he of whom it is written, Behold I send my (aggelon) messenger before thy face." Matt. 11: 10. "As it is written in the prophets, Behold I send my (aggelon) messenger before thy face." Mark. 1: 2. "And when the (aggelon) messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people." Luke 7: 24. "And he sent (aggelous) messengers before his face." Luke 9: 52. "Behold I send my (aggelon) messenger." Luke 7: 27. "There was given me a thorn in the flesh, the (aggelos) messenger of Satan." 2 Cor. 12: 7. "Was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the (aggelous) messengers, and had sent them out another way?" James 2: 25. Here John the Baptist, John's agents, Jesus' disciples, Paul's agent of Satan, and the spies of Israel, all have the same term applied to them that was applied to those who carried "dead" Lazarus, meaning messengers, and with this rendering the text is plain,—"Died, and was carried by messengers." This term is sometimes misunderstood, and fails to convey the true idea of the text when rendered "angels," as in the following instance: "Every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head.... For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head, because of the (aggelous) angels" (1 Cor. 11: 5, 10), or rather because of the messengers that came into their worshiping assemblies. Having learned that the only Lazarus that was "carried," was the very one that "died," instead of a deathless soul; and having also learned that the only angels that carried him were messengers, such as ordinarily carry dead men, we are now prepared to inquire,—

3. Where did they carry Lazarus? Not to heaven, for (1) the record does not state that he was carried there; and (2) it does affirm that he was carried elsewhere,—"to the bosom of Abraham." Well, then, where is Abraham? The Bible answers; "Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age.... And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah, in the field of Ephron." Gen. 25: 9. This was Abraham's graveyard. Lazarus is said to have been carried to the bosom of this dead patriarch, or to have been carried so near to him as to be recognized as his bosom companion,—but both Abraham and Lazarus are said to be "dead;" and furthermore, the third person, (the rich man) "died and was buried," just as Abraham was. Mark! all three of these men are pronounced "dead," and two of them are said to have been "buried," and the third was carried to the bosom of a man that was both "dead" and "buried," and therefore was evidently buried. While thus dead and buried, they are represented as seeing, hearing, feeling, and talking; not that "dead" men can really see, feel, and talk, but they are represented as so doing by personification—on which principle speech and feeling is attributed to inanimate matter—as in the case of a dialogue attributed to the trees (Judges 9: 8), and as in the case of King Pharaoh, (Ezek. 31), who while dead, together with his "dead" fellows, is represented as seeing, speaking, and feeling "shame" and "comfort"—all this for the purpose of making lifeless matter speak to the living for their good—these dead persons being here represented as speaking much as we might suppose they would talk if they could feel and speak in the grave; the righteous represented as feeling the comfort of hope, "for the righteous hath hope in his death;" and the wicked are represented as desiring relief from the tormenting flames of despair, and "a fearful looking for of fiery indignation;" and also as feeling anxious that living friends should be warned not to come to that place of hopeless despair—the hopeless prison of sinners—and the impassable gulf prevents any change in their condition.

The rich man's hopeless condition in death, is contrasted with the condition of Abraham and Lazarus who sleep in hope. The rich man is represented as prefering the condition of Abraham and Lazarus in death, to his own condition; and wishes his friends not to enter death unprepared as he had done, but rather as Lazarus did, a bosom companion of Abraham—a "friend of God." His condition in death is spoken of as a place void of hope—which is the real state of all sinners in death.

Yet it must be remembered that this is only a dialogue attributed to dead men (not to living ghosts), to teach a lesson to the living, by making the unconscious dead speak to them, as they would speak if they could feel and converse with each other about their own condition after death. It is further evident that no reference is here made to a conversation between disembodied conscious men, from the fact that the rich man, one of the parties engaged in this conversation, is said to be in hades while conversing, (here rendered hell), and that is a realm of unconsciousness, whether the realm of spirit-men, or body-men, "for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol," Gr. hades. Eccl. 9: 10 So whatever part of the rich man went to hades (soul or body) must have been void of knowledge and wisdom. David says, "Let the wicked be silent in sheol," Gr. hades. Ps. 31: 17. This settles the question, proving that the rich man could not actually speak while in hades, for the wicked must be "silent" there, and destitute of "knowledge." The Revelator informs us that hades is the depository of "dead" men, in an unjudged state, instead of living spirit-men, already judged; "hades delivered up the dead.... and they were judged." Rev. 20: 13. There are no living ones in hades. The rich man "died" before he went there, and he is "silent" there. So it is certain that this is a case of parabolic personification, in which speech is attributed to the speechless, sight to the sightless, and life to the lifeless, to make the dead express the feelings they would possess after the close of life if they could really feel; just as in the case of the king of Babylon—"sheol from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it stireth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations. All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou become weak as we? art thou become like unto us? Thy pomp is brought down to sheol, and the noise of thy viols; the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee." Isa. 14: 9-11.

Here reference is made to the very realm that the rich man went to (sheol or hades), and the "dead" who had become "weak" (not weak ghosts,) are represented as speaking to this king, and holding a lengthy conversation with him, just as the rich man and Abraham talked, on the principle of personification, the only principle on which dead men are ever said to talk, and that too without involving their consciousness; and only on this principle are they said to see and feel. The very conversation attributed to the rich man and Abraham recognizes them as being actually dead, and shows that it could not have been a conversation between two conscious ghosts. (1) "Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime [not in the lifetime of thy body, but "in thy lifetime"] receivedst thy good things." Here is an admission that in the "lifetime" of the person addressed had ended, thus proving that the address is not made to a deathless soul, but to a dead man. (2) The request to have Lazarus sent to living friends, was not to have a disembodied Lazaaus sent, but a resurrected Lazarus, thus proving that the Lazarus talked about was not alive, but dead—"But if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent," said the rich man. Abraham replied—"Neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." The conversation was not about sending a ghostly Lazarus, but a "dead" Lazarus, by having him rise "from the dead."

Thus the conversation here recorded shows that it did not take place between livings souls, but between dead men personified, or represented as animated, while really dead. This lesson is here taught—

1. The righteous, in death, are the bosom companions of "the friend of God—they "rest in hope."

2. The wicked, in death, are reserved, under the flames of divine wrath, unto the judgment, their condition being unchangeable after death, which fact would torment them if they could feel; and if they could really reflect, they would wish to caution friends against ending their lives in sin, or coming to a hopeless grave. "LIVING EPISTLES."—Such are genuine christians, and the eyes of men are upon them more than upon the Bible, and they are constantly being read. If we simply possess the form of godliness, and are void of its consecrating power, we are not epistles that rightly represent the Savior and his work. The grace of God should shine out through our lives. But our lives are mainly the result of an inward principle; so if our hearts are right, our lives also will be right. Men read us by our lives; hence, a pure heart will make us valuable epistles. We can so live as to be constantly read to God's glory. A pure stream will flow from a pure fountain, and a pure life will spring from a pure heart. W. S.

"HEART-CHANGE."—The term "heart" is often used to signify the affections of the mind, as in this statement: "Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel." 2 Sam. 15: 6. So a change of heart signifies something more than a change of the purposes of the mind; it includes a change of the affections; and a change that only enlists the purposes of the mind for the better, without securing a radical change of the affections, is only a surface work. The affections of the mind are essential to a thorough change—a step beyond the change of purposes. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 8.

In my last, I spoke of remaining one day longer at Long Island, Ala., and accordingly I gave my last sermon there, Jan. 22nd. At the close of my sermon, about forty arose for prayers who felt unready for the coming of the Lord, many of them being backsliders. After a season of prayer, several testimonies were given in. Many are interested to look into what is termed "the new doctrine," and are reading for themselves. Eld. Smith has paved the way for a candid hearing in this region, by scattering publications, many of which I have sent him in past days.

Jan. 23d, went to meet my appointment in the "Macedonia" church, owned by the Baptists, and put up with Bro. Clouse, a Baptist minister, who has recently embraced the truth, life and death included, and does not put his light under a bushel either. In the evening I preached to a goodly number, including one Methodist minister; and am to remain three nights longer. Recently a Baptist minister told me the following item about a Methodist circuit preacher in Alabama, to whom I have been sending publications, but have never seen in person. This Methodist brother came to the house of the Baptist brother, and found him reading one of our works. Taking the work into his own hand he said—

"I have been investigating this subject for some time, and I am satisfied that this system of faith comes nearer holding water than any other in the world; but in my preaching I have to touch these points very lightly, to prevent being stopped in my ministry; but if there were only an organization of this faith in this region, I would fully preach the sentiments, and then if they stopped my preaching, I could join this people."

I hope this conviction of truth in many cases will yet mature into a decision to fully defend it, in spite of consequences; and I doubt not it will before long. There will be a line drawn in due time. Truth is making its mark. But some must have time to mature their convictions. It takes time to think. I was a little amused at the remark of an honest man who had heard that we were preaching about the judgment from a chart, when he came to look at the chart for the first time. Said he,

"If a man has got to meet all them kind of animals at the judgment, he has surely got a hard row of stumps before him, and he had better repent before getting there."

Continued the meeting at Macedonia, Jan. 24th, 25th, and 26th. Although the weather was the coldest of the season, the congregation was fair, and the hearing interest excellent. Bro. Clouse is determined not to shun unpopular truth in his preaching, even if he should be arraigned for preaching it.

Jan. 27th, took cars for Stevenson, Ala., and was met at the depot by Eld. Cargile, a Baptist minister of promising talent, who has fully come into the truth, life and death included, and has commenced preaching it out squarely to his people. His term has expired as pastor of the church here; and he told them plainly that if they re-elected him as their pastor, he should fully preach his views of truth. But they insisted he must serve another year. He thinks the whole church will embrace the truth within the year. He has not embraced it hastily, but has taken time to fully investigate. The first publication he ever saw on the question was my "Sermon on Hell," a tract of sixteen pages, which was lent to him by a soldier. After reading it he tried hard to get it of the soldier to keep, but he would not part with it; so Bro. Cargile wrote the whole tract in a blank book, and took time to compare it with the Bible faithfully. Since then he has read several larger works, and is now settled in the truth; and more than that, he has fully counted the cost, and is resolved to preach it if expelled for it.

Bro. Cargile was recently conversing with a Methodist minister on this question, and offered him a copy of my recent work, "Life Beyond Death." He replied that he had a copy at home which he got some months before. Bro. Cargile asked him how he liked it. Said he had not read it through. Bro. C. asked him why he had not read it. Said he dared not read it. Bro. C. asked him why. Said he was afraid he would have to believe it. Bro. C. told him if he was afraid to believe the testimony of the Bible, he had better stop preaching. Upon reflection, he said he would go right home and finish reading it. We await the result.

The editor of the New Era, a semi-weekly paper of this town, thus advertised my coming:—"Rev. Wm. Sheldon, one of the editors of the World's Crisis, and a writer of some note—(many of our readers have read his 'Life Beyond Death, or, the Home of the Holy')—has been preaching at Carpenter to well-pleased crowds for over a week, and will with Revs. J. A. Cargile and I. E. Douthett hold services at Bolivar next Saturday and Sunday, and at Stevenson Sunday night. Will continue longer if it seems profitable and is desired by the hearers."

After preaching Sunday, Jan. 28th, Bro. Cargile publicly endorsed my positions, which were radical Adventism. Though we are having the coldest weather of the season, we have as many hearers as we could expect under the circumstances, who listen with candor. After preaching Sunday evening, I went home with the editor of the New Era, who is a Baptist member, and seems much interested to hear what we have to say on these (to him) new themes. I remain longer. W. S.

MILLENNIUM.

Are there a thousand years between the resurrection of the righteous and wicked dead? Are all the dead awaked by the sounding of one and that the last trump? When we turn our attention to Bible testimony, we find it all on one side. The prophet Isaiah (26: 19) says—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust.... And the earth shall cast out the dead." This in its connection involves the resurrection of all the dead. Here must be both classes, the righteous and the wicked. No intimation here of time between the casting out of two kinds of dead. Dan. 12: 2—"And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here is the awaking of two classes at the same time for aught the prophet has said. He simply declares the many (multitudes) shall awake; and when they do, some will awake to life, others to shame. John 5: 28, 29—"Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Here all that are in the graves hear his voice. Does he speak but once? Do they all hear it? And do they all come forth? Could Jesus teach any doctrine more positively?

So in Matt. 13, the tares and wheat are gathered, and disposed of in the end of this world, age, or dispensation. The tares are burned in this world. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." No shining in the kingdom until after the tares are burned. Evil men and seducers, with all the unbelieving, rebellious race, find their pay-day when the Lord "shall descend from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance," when they will all be "punished with everlasting destruction." Here they find the day that shall burn as an oven, when "all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble," and be burned up. This agrees with and is chronologically the same event as described in Matt. 25: 31.

All nations are here gathered—called forth by the same "voice" which awakes the dead. They are all before him. Then he separates them one from the other, and they are disposed of. The goats in this chapter are the same as the tares in the thirteenth of Matthew. They all go into the same fire, and this is Peter's burning day—chronologically in the end of this world.

The harmony of these scriptural utterances, with many other positive declarations, forbid there being a thousand years between the resurrections of the two classes, the righteous and the wicked. The prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ, are all one in their expositions of the pending events. No thousand years' reign of Christ between the resurrections of good and bad, in which he is to subjugate his enemies. If so, where is it taught? I know of no intimation of this long space by one of the prophets, or by Jesus Christ himself, neither by the apostles.

Again, I find insurmountable difficulties in this theory." In Daniel 12, the question is asked—"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" The answer seems to be—one thousand three hundred five and thirty days, or years. Then these days plainly reach to the end of these wonders. They bring to a conclusion all these wonderful events. Among these wonders is the coming out of the graves of Daniel's dead, even those who awake to shame. The wicked dead cannot remain in their graves a thousand years after the end of these wonders. Daniel also finds his "rest" and stands in his "lot at the end of the days." This must be beyond Peter's perdition of ungodly men. "Wherein dwelleth righteousness," or where righteous men will dwell after wicked men are cut off, "recompensed in the earth," all things become new. Although I see that it will take a little time for this wonderful change, yet biblically it must be short. Isa. 63: 4—"For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." "The day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate; and he shall destroy sinners out of it." Isa. 13: 9. This will have its fulfillment—"And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, both small and great, and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 18. This brings the consummation. This brings the destruction of the corrupters of the earth. This is at the end of this dispensation. Here they drink the bitter cup. The wrath of God has overtaken them. The saints, the righteous "Abraham and his seed," are now rewarded, "and shine forth as the sun in the kingdom [kosmos] of their Father"; and this is at the sounding of the seventh angel. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

THE Tablet's (Catholic) New Year's survey of the condition and prospects of the Holy See is not cheerful:—

"Deserted by all the great powers of the earth, robbed of the patrimony of St. Peter, her Pontiff a prisoner in his own palace, her capital, with its glorious monuments, in the hands of ruthless despoilers who know no other law than that of their own passions—her most cherished religious orders persecuted, robbed of their own just and lawful possessions, ever used for beneficent and Christian purposes—the calm and hallowed retreats of learning and religion invaded by a lawless and godless soldiery, some of them converted into stables for the horses of the royal freebooter of Savoy! Everywhere the powers of evil arrayed against the Church, everywhere secret societies burrowing like moles in the dark depths below the surface of society, undermining the very foundations of virtue and morality, exciting the unwise and the unwary against religion, which they nickname superstition and tyranny—everywhere the spirit of revolt raising its hydra head, hissing forth blasphemy against God and his Christ, His Mother, and His saints—everywhere, the Church fighting single-handed and alone, the powers of earth and hell, in divers forms, holding aloft the banner of the cross, and wielding the spiritual weapons her God has given her, in defence of the faith once delivered to the saints, assailed on every side by an irreligious age."

LEXICOGRAPHY.—If we have not yet produced that great American novel to astonish the world—which, with Mrs. Stowe in mind, we do not so soon acknowledge—we have still enough to be proud of in that wonderful produce of American scholarship—Webster's Dictionary. There has before been no such dictionary of any language—not even as the result of those years of labor which the whole French Academy, a congregation of the best scholarship of France, spent upon the lexicographical standard of that nation.—New York Mail.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. McCulloch.

BRO. GRANT:—Our labors have been wonderfully blest of the Lord during the past two years that we have labored as pastor of the church in this place. The church has been steadily gaining ground, and many have become interested in the glorious truths of the Bible relative to the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and the "restitution of all things," and have been planted in the likeness of Christ's death, and cast their lot with the people of God, by uniting with the church. Still the work goes on. Last Sabbath three more came forward and united with the church, and received the right hand of fellowship. Many others are inquiring into these glorious truths, which so interest the people of God in this age of the world. There is a wide field of labor in this State, and but few laborers. O that the Lord of the harvest would send forth more laborers into the vineyard! We need men of God, to push forward this glorious work; men filled with the spirit of the divine Master, and then the ingathering will be the precious seed, that shall come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

The church in this place has done a great work in boldly yet kindly maintaining the truths of the Bible. She has indeed been "like a city set upon a hill, whose light cannot be hid"; and the result is that many have seen the light and been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and others acknowledge that this work is of the Lord. We feel that it may be our duty to enter upon a new field of labor this spring, if the Lord should open the way. May he direct us in all things, and finally bring us all to his eternal home.

From Bro. D. Cogswell.

BRO. GRANT:—Bro. N. Field, in Crisis of Jan. 24th, speaks of Geo. Storrs' new views. Now without wishing to controvert, or take sides in this matter for the sake of controversy, I do wish, however, to see men represented fairly, and then let their views stand on their own merits.

Is it not evident from the Scriptures that Abraham died expecting to receive the promises? and was not Abraham looking forward to the time when all nations were to be blessed in him (Abraham) and his seed (which was Christ)? and have all nations been blessed yet, or will they be before the end of this age? Will there not be nations on the earth when Jesus comes that have not been blessed in him? Were all the promises made to the fathers fulfilled when God raised up from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, as our dear Bro. Field would wish us to understand, if I do not mistake him? It seems to me that when Jesus comes the one hundred and tenth Psalm will be fulfilled. What are we to do with the fourteenth chapter of Zech., Jer. 30: 1-11, Dan. 7: 13, 14, and Rom. 11: 15, 25-29? Dear brethren in Christ, let us be careful not to stand filling out the antitype of the Jewish church that rejected the gospel age. May the Lord keep us all down at the feet of Jesus, learning of him.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. T. DIXON writes:—"I have been much surprised and pained while trying to collect the honest dues of the Crisis in different localities. I find some really poor and unable to pay at present, but how wrong in them to let their indebtedness increase to such an amount, and not promptly notify the Office, so it would know what to do in such cases. Others use tobacco and other superfluities, more injurious than beneficial, but cannot pay for their paper,—mean to sometime, though the debt is increasing, when a five cent piece taken from their superfluities weekly would more than pay for it. They want it continued, say it does them much good. Query. How, when they do not practice the simplest lessons of self-denial taught in its columns? O, when Jehovah is especially at this time speaking to the angry nations in the mysterious wasting pestilence, and increasing earthquakes; by storm, and flood, and fire; as the curtain rolls up for the last time, and reveals the closing scenes of earth's tragic drama, as delineated on the prophetic scroll with the antitype of Belshazzar shorn of power, forsaken by those he once could trust, proving by his impotent utterances that he has discovered the handwriting against him,—all, all, speaking in thunder tones that the end is right upon us,—oh, my brethren, how can you who are so careless of your promises expect to hear it said—'Well done, good and faithful servants,' especially you who have so much light, and profess to see the day approaching? Be not deceived; God is not mocked."

SR. E. TEEPLE writes:—"In the fall of 1844 I was led to a small grove, where a goodly number had assembled to hear what was then termed 'Millerite' preaching. As I drew near, I heard the voice of one who seemed to have so much of the spirit and power of God, that I felt a solemnity come over me. It was S. G. Mathewson, and wife, and Ira Morgan, and no doubt if their eyes rest on these lines, they will well remember the time and place. Such preaching as was heard in those days moved multitudes. But where are the multitudes that are moved at preaching in these days? It is one among the many evidences that we are very near the judgment, for the compelling message is in the highways and hedges, and but few are being compelled to come in. The spirit of Jesus followed me night and day, and I was soon among the 'Millerites' so called. I met with opposition on every side. Every earthly friend opposed me; but I read in the Word that we must forsake all to follow Christ, and I found out there was no heaven 'beyond the bounds of time and space,' and I had not got an immortal soul, but if I ever had immortality I must seek for it; and if ever saved in the kingdom which was to be set up under the whole heaven, I must strive for it. I saw a great work before me, and no time to be idle, and if others would not be persuaded to go with me, I must go alone. Thus I chose the pilgrim's fare. I enlisted in the army of the Lord, and I'll stay in the army; and if I die I mean to die in it; and I have ever been glad I was in the army. It has been some of the time rather hard fighting, for the Captain seemed to put me in front. But I have ever tried to obey orders and face the enemy. I have seen one fall at my right, and another at my left, and many have deserted, which at times was discouraging, yet no disposition to give up or to desert the ranks. But I have felt the past summer too much worn out to engage in many battles. But I am feeling much better, which I think must be owing to the prayers of God's saints. Praise the Lord for me, and with me, for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."

Bro. I. K. Lombard writes Jan. 6th:—"We were compelled to leave Machiasport, Me., on account of the health of my wife. But since we left there her cough, which had troubled her almost constantly for a year, has passed away, and she enjoys her usual health every way. We are situated at Wheelock, Vt., where are a few brethren. We expect to labor here a part of the time, and at St. Johnsbury, as it shall please the Lord. At the present, I shall probably spend every alternate Sunday in each place.

Here is work enough to do, with so much sin in the professed church as well as in the world. I have preached a few times, dealing faithfully with the sins prevailing in the church, which has made some stirring, heart-searching times here. I feel that my labor has not been lost in raising a warning voice against popular sins. We are too late in the world's history to be trifling with sin. If it is fearful for a man to be walking carelessly now, so near the end, how responsible the position of those who see his danger, and how fearful the neglect if we do not warn him. May God help us who see the way to walk in it faithfully, that the blood of others be not found on the skirts of our garments in the day of judgment so near at hand. I desire to be more humble, holy and faithful to the Lord, and labor more diligently in his cause."

Bro. A. S. Burnham writes:—"The object of preaching is to instruct and benefit from the word. All truth is not alike important. Many well meaning preachers err from not carefully considering the subject. They appear to judge from the stand-point of their own minds. The people may not have been led up to the point to grasp the truth as they see it. The temptation is to present subjects most familiar to themselves, or pleasing to others; while they may not be the most profitable. Time is short, and there is only time to present the most important. But few minds in any congregation can grasp and follow a labored line of argument. To the few it may be interesting and profitable; but to the many it is tedious and unprofitable. In the prophecies, present a few of the leading points; leave to books to give the labored argument. Above all, present Christ as the all in all. I heard a preacher of eminence say that all other subjects became dull and uninteresting.

Others, besides the Advent preachers, are sounding the message of the soon coming of the Lord. Elder J. C. Emery, of the Christian church, from time to time proclaims the message. A week ago Sunday night, with a hall well filled, he presented the coming of the Lord. Tears were in many eyes."

Bro C. C. Bragg writes:—"I believe time is very short. The day of deliverance for the saints, and of doom for the lost, is near. Do we realize that Jesus is coming soon? Do we realize the import of the words—'Watch, lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping'? 'Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation'? Every thing indicates that we are in the last days. As in the parable, the cry has been made. The Bridegroom tarries. If we slumber and sleep in respect to the exact year, day, or hour, let us not sleep as do others, lest like the foolish virgins we be left out at the marriage supper. Let us not be doting about questions to no profit, to the subverting of the hearers, but teaching the truth in its purity; and the Lord give wisdom to all who write for and read the Crisis.

I would say the tract on the 'Ten Virgins,' by T. M. Preble, is worth reading. I think he comes to very sensible conclusions on the coming of the Bridegroom."

Bro. J. T. Ongley writes:—"The good Lord was with us in our meetings yesterday (Feb. 4th.) Four dear souls were buried in the likeness of the Master's death, burial and resurrection, in the 'form of the doctrine,' and thereby became a 'kind of first-fruits of his creatures.' At the close of the evening services fifteen partook of the Lord's Supper. The meetings in this place (Buffalo) have been mostly sustained by Bro. J. P. Shaw and wife, and a few sisters, having commenced meetings at their house, and for the past fourteen months have hired a little hall at 383 Eagle street. The Lord is blessing his own truth. Others will come forward soon, I believe. Pray for us that we may not be ashamed of the gospel of Christ. We have labored with them in word and doctrine for the past five months, once in four weeks."

Bro. Geo. A. Streeter writes:—"The past year has been one of blessings to me and mine, while I have endeavored to preach a free and full gospel, wherever the way opened. The good Lord has blest in basket and store, and I can say 'my wants are well supplied.' I have found it safe to trust Master for pay in his own way, and at his own time. Sometimes it would look dark, but faith penetrated through, and at last the sun would shine, the heart would rejoice. I have seen the tears of the guilty; have heard the cries of the wounded and the wanderer, and the shouts of the victor when he triumphed over his foes. The old saints' hearts have been comforted. After wading through trials and temptations, with many tears, I can say 'All is well,' and feel like commencing the new year with renewed courage."

Obituaries.

Myers. Died in Bristol, Vt., Jan. 8th, 1872, Sr. —— Myers, wife of Bro. Edwin Myers, aged forty-nine years.

She leaves a husband and four children to mourn the loss of a discreet, affectionate, and faithful wife and mother. In her own family her christian virtues appeared most eminent, so that when she fell asleep, no doubts were entertained but that wife and mother slept in Jesus. Her physical sufferings were severe, but in patient submission to the will of God she cast her all on Him who tenderly cared for and gave her such peace and trust as the world can never impart. Of her it may truly be said she lived and died in the Lord, and "the memory of the just is blessed." Her funeral was attended in the Baptist church in B., by the writer, where a large concourse of people assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to one whose praise seemed to be upon their lips.

Sweet be thy rest, dear sister—
——"Till he bid thee arise,
To hail him in triumph descending the skies."

S. G. Mathewson.

Angell. Died in Barnard, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1871, Mercy P., wife of Daniel Angell, aged seventy-three years, three months, and four days.

Also, Jan. 8th, 1872, Daniel Angell, aged eighty-one years and twenty-four days.

For fifty-one years our aged parents lived together, and then peacefully fell asleep, leaving us the blest assurance that they would soon awake to everlasting life. They leave a family of seven children and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn their loss, yet not as those who are left without hope. May God sanctify this double affliction to the bereaved. They experienced religion about forty-five years ago, and in 1854 embraced the belief of Jesus' soon coming. They lived in cheerful submission to God's will, that though they should be called to sleep for a little season, they would soon awake to immortality.

Words of consolation to the afflicted were spoken by Eld. Z. T. Wood, from their chosen texts (Ps. 40: 1; Rev. 14: 13), and as we laid them away words of comfort were read from Hosea 13: 14.

D. E. Adams.

Smith. Fell asleep in Jesus in West Gardiner, Me., Jan. 30th, Bro. Hugh Smith, aged seventy-five years.

Bro. S. had long cherished the hope of immortality at the resurrection morn. He leaves a loved companion, with whom he had lived more than fifty years, and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. Appropriate words of comfort and warning were spoken by Rev. N. Preble, from Matt. 6: 21.

J. Thomas, Jr.

Frost. Died at Saco, Me., Jan. 22nd, Mrs. Jemima L. Frost, aged seventy-two years.

Sr. Frost professed faith in Christ some thirty years since, and lived and died in hope of eternal life. Sermon at the funeral by the writer, from Prov. 14: 32.

Joseph W. White.

We have received no correspondence from the Editor for our paper this week, and must again disappoint our readers. We hope by another week the mails will have been brought through. The blockade still continues on the Pacific road.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

FRANCE.

REPORTED ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THIERS.

London, Feb. 6. A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Paris says: "President Theirs was shot at last night, but not hurt. The assassin escaped."

Paris, Feb. 11. Information has been received from Ajaccio that slight disturbances in the interest of the Bonapartists have occurred on the Island of Corsica.

There is much agitation in Rouen and other cities against the proposal in the Assembly to tax commercial transactions.

GREAT BRITAIN.

London, Feb. 9. It is reported that Americans in Liverpool do not approve of claims for indirect damages.

The Times to-day declares that England has not revoked and never will revoke the Treaty of Washington. She is still ready and resolved to stand by it, but cannot and will not embark in an altercation specially designed to close the door on all hopes of a settlement.

Feb. 10. Great eagerness is manifested for the latest news from America. Everybody is anxious to learn how the action of England with regard to the Alabama claims was received. Several dispatches from New York and Washington to the press here and private telegrams to business houses are posted on change as soon as received, and the bulletins are surrounded by large crowds.

The Times says it is morally certain that the attempt to settle the Alabama claims before the Geneva Board of Arbitration will be a failure. We must therefore make efforts to prevent angry recrimination. If we are successful, the time is possibly near when more dexterous negotiations may settle all differences.

The Daily Telegraph asserts that the Treaty of Washington is regarded by Americans as one of unconditional surrender and shameful confessions on the part of England. Its terms, if the indirect claims are admitted, are such as a victor might impose. The pretensions of the United States are intolerably absurd.

The Standard and Post are silent on the subject.

GERMANY.

Berlin, Feb. 9. In the Diet to-day, during a debate on the education bill, Bismarck said that the Government was disposed to propitiate the Roman Catholics, but its patience was exhausted. He announced it as the policy of Russia hereafter to Germanize the Polish schools as France had Gallicized those of Alsace add Lorraine.

AFRICA.

London, Feb. 7. Advices from the Cape of Good Hope represent that the colony is crowded with strangers; that murders and robberies are of daily occurrence; and that the residents, whose patience was exhausted, have taken the law into their own hands, and are executing summary justice on offenders. A request has been made for an additional police force, and the next steamer will take out re-enforcements of trained men.

ITALY.

Rome, Feb. 10. The Mazzinians made a public demonstration to-day to celebrate the anniversary of the proclamation of the Roman Republic in 1849. The proceedings were orderly, and no attempt to interfere with them was made by the authorities.

AUSTRIA.

Vienna, Feb. 12. The Presse, in an article upon the claims of America before the arbitrators at Geneva, says that England has probably learned that the opinion of the Board will be unfavorable to the conduct of that nation during the civil war in America, and fears the consequences of her course toward the United States.

DOMESTIC.

WAR VESSELS TO BE BUILT.

Washington, Feb. 6. The House Committee on Naval Affairs this morning agreed to report, without amendment, the bill offered by General Banks some days ago touching the construction of ten or more steam vessels of war carrying ten or more guns of large calibre. The hulls are to be built of iron or wood, as the Secretary may decide.

PRESIDENT GRANT'S ATTITUDE.

President Grant has expressed himself very decidedly to those Congressmen and others who have conversed with him on the subject, and he will not withdraw or qualify any portion of the case as presented at Geneva. It is for the arbitrators to decide upon the questions of jurisdiction and liability, and when they rule out the demand for consequential damages the President will gracefully submit to the decision.

DEFENSIVE MEASURES.

Meanwhile, there will be suitable preparations for defence on land and sea, although no one in authority appears to apprehend war.

THE SNOW BLOCKADE.

Omaha, Feb. 9. Six passenger trains from the East arrived at Rawlins station this afternoon, the first having been twenty-two days from Omaha. Reports from other stations indicate that the portion of the road lately passed over is in about as bad condition as before.

Feb. 10. Reports from Union Pacific stations west of Cheyenne to-day say that the weather is very cold and the wind high, with drifting snow. Seven trains are reported stuck in Summit, a few miles west of Rawlins.

Omaha, Feb. 12. The passenger train that left Ogden Jan. 20 for the East, arrived at Laramie to-day. The weather is cold and the wind high. The road is blocked east and west of Rawlins.

The latest dispatches regarding the snow blockade say the trains are slowly fighting their way westward, and are now between Creston and Washakie. It is still storming. Over a thousand men are at work on the drifts. The passengers are said to be comfortable.

Salt Lake, Feb. 11. Urgent dispatches were received this morning to forward provisions immediately to the nearest point to the blockade on the Pacific Railroad. The two o'clock train started with four car loads of supplies. The latest accounts to-night state that the trains at Separation, having made fourteen miles since Friday morning, there is every hope that they will be dug out in a few days. There is said to be much sickness and suffering among the passengers. The distance from Separation to Omaha is three hundred and ten miles, and some of the road is in very bad condition. It snowed here very heavily to-day.

Brigham Young has been quite ill for the past two days, and it is said his strength is failing rapidly.

REV. PETER CARTWRIGHT.

St. Louis, Feb. 9. Rev. Peter Cartwright, one of the oldest Methodist ministers of the United States, is paralyzed and expected to die. He is at his home at Pleasant Mills, Illinois.

The Japanese Embassy.

It is thought that the Japanese Embassy will be obliged to return to San Francisco and take a steamer via Panama, there seeming to be no prospect of raising the snow blockade on the Union Pacific Railroad for perhaps a month. To-day United States officials asked John Gilman his charge for running the blockade with stage coaches for sixty days.

Our Sun.—Professor Young of Dartmouth College, whose position as a scientific authority has been acknowledged in England as well as at home—has recently been delivering a lecture on the sun, which puts that subject in a powerful light, if we may use the term. He records an explosion occurring not long since on the surface of the sun, which sent portions of matter to a height of at least 200,000 miles. With regard to the distance of the sun from the earth, it is now fixed at between 91,000,000 and 92,000,000 of miles, with a margin of uncertainty consisting of about 500,000 miles, which will be settled probably by future observations. It will be seen, therefore, that the astronomers have cut off between three and four millions of the distance which most of us used to accept in our school-boy days. However, they probably think they have left sufficient now, for Professor Young says that if our Puritan Fathers had set out from the sun at the same time they did from England, and had traveled uninterruptedly by rail or otherwise at the rate of forty miles an hour, they would be due here in 1883. Again, if sound throughout the solar system should have the same velocity that it has in our atmosphere, the noise of an explosion on the sun's surface would be fourteen years in reaching the earth's surface.

Gravity becomes so increased at the sun that bodies would weigh twenty-eight times as much there as here, so that an earthly lady of one hundred pounds weight would become as unwieldy there as an elephant. The substance of the sun Prof. Young regards as probably gaseous, though there is a difference of opinions on that point. The temperature is enormous, something like 10,000,000 Fahrenheit. Herschel estimated that if a rod of ice forty-five miles in diameter were darted into the sun with the velocity of light, it would never reach it. What keeps up this temperature is a yet unsolved mystery. There is nothing to show any diminution in the sun's heat since human observations began to be recorded. Following the analogy that a pail of water freezing does not sink below the freezing point until all the water is frozen, the sun may be undergoing changes which are sensible only at remote periods; which may explain the difference between the earth now and in the geologic eras of the past.

Stewart's Palace.—Stewart's marble building on Fifth avenue, which he has erected for a home, is approaching completion. It is nearly furnished, and will be ready for occupancy early in the spring. It is, without question, the most superb private residence in the country. It has cost three millions without the furniture. The most celebrated artists have been over three years in frescoing the ceilings. The frescoes are unequaled, except those in the Prince Albert Ball Room at Buckingham Palace. The style of the building has been adopted, because Stewart intends to donate it to the city for a gallery when he gets through with it. It is a sepulchral place, with its stone floors and stone stairs, nay, requiring a fire in summer and winter to make it habitable. Mrs. Stewart's room is an exception. The wood work on her suite alone cost $16,000. Every room has a carpet imported and made to fit it, and the color of each room is different. The doors are solid rosewood with silver trimmings, and it cost $600 to hang each door in the parlor. The picture gallery is complete. Several of the pictures have cost over $30,000. The two most celebrated are "The Prodigal Son" and "The New England Thanksgiving Dinner." The water works are marvels of elegance and ingenious contrivance. After the parlors, the two most celebrated rooms in the house are "Gen. Grant's room," which is fitted up with great elegance, for Mr. Stewart and the President are great friends; then comes the "servants' parlor." That is fitted up more gorgeously than any gentleman's parlor that I have seen in this city. Curtains, mirrors, imported carpets, elegant chairs covered with red leather, and pictures adorn the room. Huge ranges, and every conceivable modern convenience, can be found in the kitchen. The doors are barred against visitors generally, and the house when done is not to be put on exhibition.—Cor. Journal.

Superstition and Proselyting.—The Watchman and Reflector of this week gives an account of a curious letter which, it is said, is being circulated among the more ignorant of the negroes in the South in connection with the endeavors made by the Roman Catholics for their conversion to Catholicism. This letter is claimed to have been found near Iconium, sixty-five years after the crucifixion of our Savior; and to have been written by Christ himself. It bears also the signature of the angel Gabriel! The letter is altogether the most blasphemous imposture that has been perpetrated for many years, and the story of its circulation would be wholly incredible did it not come from a Home Missionary who himself saw it. Among sundry commands in the letter is one to finish labor every Saturday evening by six o'clock; and to fast five Fridays in the year, beginning with Good Friday. Plagues and curses are threatened to those who may not put faith in the letter; and the simple possession of a copy of it is sufficient, it is promised, to keep off all danger and secure all conceivable prosperity. The copy of the letter from which the Watchman and Reflector makes this summary was brought to one of the Home Mission Secretaries by one of the colored Baptist preachers who had been engaged in the distribution, supposing it to be genuine and all right.—Journal.

The trial of Rev. Dr. Cuyler by the Presbytery of Brooklyn was resumed to-day, and many hours were consumed in discussion of the document reported yesterday, setting forth that it was inconsistent with the rules of the church to allow a woman to preach in the Presbyterian pulpit. During the debate Rev. Mr. Talmadge offered a resolution dismissing the charge against Mr. Cuyler, encouraging the practice of exchanging pulpits with clergymen of the various Evangelical denominations, and hailing the coming time when women will go everywhere recommending the pardon and comfort of the gospel. The resolution was at once tabled.

The Presbytery this evening concluded its investigation of the charges against Rev. Mr. Cuyler, for allowing Mrs. Smiley to preach in his church, and instead of censuring the reverend gentleman, called attention to the resolution of the Synod in 1833, that women should not preach in the church.—Cor. Boston Journal.

In Brief.

—— There are now more than fifty congregations of Protestant Christians in the city and provinces of Mexico. Two church edifices, formerly used by the Catholics, are now devoted to Protestant worship. A Young Men's Christian Association, in principle like those of this country, now meets in the great hall of San Juan Latran. A school for boys is flourishing in the same place. ——The total number of city missionaries in New York is 266, and about $1,000,000 is invested in mission chapels and churches.——Advices have been received of terrible snow slides in the Big Cottonwood Mining District, by which numbers of lives were lost. Three miners, while sitting in their cabin, were carried away by a slide and perished.——A schism has broken out among the clergy of Paris on account of the extreme ultramontanism of the new Archbishop.——Switzerland is immensely active commercially since the building of the Mont Cenis tunnel, and is erecting new railroad shops everywhere.——During a terrific hurricane in London recently, a large piece of stone, weighing two tons, was blown off the central tower of the Houses of Parliament. Many craft were lost in the Thames, and there were numerous street accidents.——Orders have been received at the Springfield Armory for increasing the manufacture of Remington rifles from two to ten thousand.

An American now traveling in England, says the drinking habits of her people are enough to shock even the moderate drinker of the United States, and drive him, if any thing can, to a belief in total abstinence. At concert, in theatre, and in the railway carriage, it is no uncommon, but a very usual sight, to see the well-dressed lady take a bottle of brandy or sherry from her pocket or her bag, and suck it quite unblushingly. It takes considerable brass, and indifference to social degradation, for a man to dare to do that with us. Clergymen tipple; the noble and the ignoble are equally addicted to drink, and beggars think more of a dram than a dinner.—Golden Age.

At a recent Missionary Convention the Rev. John Hall said: "We imagine we are doing something grand for the King of kings, when we raise $500,000 for Foreign Missions; but it would scarcely pay for the powder that is fired away every year in salutes to the dignitaries of the earth."

The hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee," which has touched more hearts than any other modern composition, was written by Miss Sarah Fuller Fowler, of London, Eng., who died as Mrs. Sarah F. Adams, in 1849.

We are informed that a quantity of whiskey recently seized by the State officials was thus constituted, the recipe having been preserved: ten gallons of kerosene, three pounds of potash, an ounce or two of strychnine, mixed together with soft water. To make gin the oil of juniper was added.—Newton Journal.

Notices.

A quarterly session of the Mass. Conference will be held in Brimfield, Mass., to commence Feb. 20th, 1872, evening, and continue through the week and over the following Sunday. Meetings morning, afternoon, and evening. This is a place where they need help. They have a Chapel, and give us an urgent invitation to meet with them in conference. All that attend will be welcomed and cared for. We hope the brethren in all that region will make an effort with sacrifice to attend the meeting. Come, if possible, at the commencement, and stay through. Let the preachers who can be present, that more interest may be given to the meeting. C. H. Barnes, Sec.

There will be a protracted meeting held in Poultney, Vt., commencing Feb. 22nd, 1872, and hold over the following Sunday. Bro. S. G. Mathewson will be present a part of the time, to assist in preaching the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for his divine blessing to attend the effort. A. W. Sibley.

Bro. Couch may be expected at the Conference, Brimfield, Mass.

The Third Quarterly Conference of Vermont will be held with the church at Rutland, to commence Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, and close Friday, March 1st. Our last conference was one of special interest. We hope this will be still better. One brother walked to attend that conference some sixty miles. That spirit of sacrifice will give us a great gathering at Rutland. Come one and all, far and near.
H. F. Carpenter, for the Committee.

A Protracted Meeting will commence at Manchester, N. H., Sunday, Feb. 18, and continue over the following Sabbath, Feb. 25th. Brethren and sisters from abroad are cordially invited to come and labor with us for the salvation of sinners. For the church, J. W. C. Pickering.

The next session of the Maine Ministerial Bible School, will be held at Kennebunkport, commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, to continue as long as may be thought best.

The object for which this school is called is that ministers, by study and interchange of thought and discussion upon passages hard to be understood, may be better qualified to go forth as teachers in the great school of Christ. All clergymen are invited.
W. H. Mitchell, Teacher.
J. Albert Libby, Secretary.

A special conference will be held at West Poland, Me., Free Chapel, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 22d, to continue over the following Lord's day. Bro. Albion Ross is engaged to be with us, and all the brethren and sisters in the vicinity are cordially invited.
J. Albert Libby.

The Second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held with the church at East Rochester, commencing Feb. 21st, at half past seven P. M., to hold over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is extended to all. Come, brethren, with the armor on.
T. W. Piper.
J. G. Smith.
C. H. Fletcher.

Eld. John Couch is pastor of the Second Advent Church in Chelsea, Mass., and all communications relative to supplying the desk must be directed to him hereafter.

Having completed my engagements with three churches, I am now at liberty to fill new calls more extensively, and devote my time to the work of an Evangelist and Missionary. As there are no means raised for that purpose, I hope those who wish my labors will write to me the prospects for good, and the interest to sustain, that I may arrange to save time and expense. Do not delay to write. Address Peter S. W. Deyo, Charles City, Iowa.

Prayer Meeting at Bro. R. T. Woodward's, every Saturday evening, at 7½ o'clock, No. 42 Bradford Street, out of Waltham Street, Boston. Welcome all.

Preaching brethren wishing to preach in Rochchester Village, will please correspond with Edwin B. Wells before sending their appointments to the Crisis.

Acknowledgments.—With many heart-felt thanks I would acknowledge the following:—
—— Cushman, $10. N. T. Pease, $2. Mrs. J. Adams, $1. Bro. and Sr. M., Lowell, Mass., $2. M. H. P., Boston, $5. Mary I. Herron.

NEW TRACTS.

Just published by the A. C. P. Society, Symbolization of the World's Eventful Crisis, by O. R. Fassett.

An excellent tract of 16 pages, showing that we are living amid the events occurring under the opening of the "sixth seal"; that "we are witnessing them, and are far down in their history, and close upon the end of this world and the solemn judgment scenes."

Price, single, 2 cts.; postage, 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred, by mail.

"THE END AT HAND."

A TRACT OF 24 PAGES.

Showing that the "Gospel of the kingdom" has been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations"; and that the end of this dispensation is at hand, and the Lord about to appear in his glory. By Eld. John Couch. Just the thing to scatter by the thousands. Let it have a wide circulation. Price single, 3 cents; postage 2 cts.; 25 cts. per dozen; $2.00 per hundred by mail.

COME TO ME.

With tearful eyes I look around,
  Life seems a dark and stormy sea;
Yet midst the gloom I hear the sound,
  A heavenly whisper, "Come to me."

It tells me of a place of rest;
  It tells me where the soul may flee;
O! to the weary, faint, opprest,
  How sweet the bidding, "Come to me!"

When the poor heart with anguish burns,
  That earthly props resigned must be;
And from each broken cistern turns,
  It hears the accents, "Come to me!"

When against sin I strive in vain,
  And cannot from its yoke get free;
Sinking beneath its heavy chain,
  The words arrest me, "Come to me!"

Come! for all else must fail and die;
  Earth is no resting place for thee;
Heavenward direct thy weeping eye;
  I am thy portion, "Come to me!"

O! voice of mercy, voice of love!
  In conflict, grief, and agony;
Support me, cheer me from above,
  And gently whisper, "Come to me!"

A STORY OF GRACE.---No. 6.

E. S. WILLARD.

Faithfulness Rewarded—Unfaithfulness Punished.

As a wonderful display of divine grace which occurred about this time, we here give in detail the conversion of our mother.

A year previous to the constitution of the church, husband's aged mother, without a hope in Christ, came to spend the remnant of her days with us. I felt that I could not rest until she should find peace in believing. I asked the Lord to direct what means should be used for her conversion, and to bring her to a knowledge of himself now. The day after her arrival was set apart to seek the Lord by prayer and fasting on her behalf. When our little season at ten A. M. came, which was a combination of the two little seasons before mentioned with the children, and which had afforded us so much heavenly strength, I asked mother to join us. She assented, but added, "I know not that I can kneel down as I am so infirm." I assured her that the Lord could hear her just as well in a sitting posture. I read a portion of God's word dwelling upon the blind men's request—"Lord, that our eyes may be opened." Matt. 20: 33. We then knelt, and, to my great surprise and joy, mother fell upon her knees with us. I pleaded that Jesus is just the same now as then; just as able and willing to open this dear mother's eyes as to open theirs. I could ask nothing short of her immediate conversion and was assured that ere long the scales would fall from her eyes. I asked her to pray. She said at first that she could not, but before rising she did, in the fullness of her soul, cry out—"God be merciful to me a sinner, and open my blind eyes!" Now I was assured that the spirit of God had sealed this portion of his word to her conviction.

Soon after going out from this blessed place she found a hymn expressive of the wretched condition of a soul out of Christ, but with a strong desire to come to him, and brought it to me, saying, with evident heart-relentings—"This expresses my feelings better than I can do it myself." She was now both willing and anxious to converse on the subject of her soul's salvation, expressing her unworthiness and the goodness of God in sparing her so long.

Just before night she and I alone had another season of prayer. At this time she was importunate that her blind eyes might be opened and her deaf ears unstopped. I felt an increasing assurance that mercy was to be extended to her immediately. That evening, as usual, we had a prayer meeting at our house. Mother was so glad of the meeting; but before its close she was taken quite sick and so continued all night. Sabbath morning she was some better but much concerned in mind. The first moment we were left alone she asked me to pray for her. I asked her for what I should pray? "Oh! that my eyes were opened," was her earnest reply. With all my heart I asked, with tears, that it might be so for Jesus' sake. She was unable to sit up during the day and in the afternoon asked me again to pray with her, and expressed great concern about her state, wondering if there could be mercy for such a sinner as she saw herself to be. I tried to direct her to Jesus—the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Jno. 1: 29. As she was greatly agitated I left her alone about an hour, hoping she might calm herself to rest. On my return, asking if she had slept she replied, "O no! I have been wrestling, and I do not know what it is, but I have felt very happy since I saw you; these words came to my mind as if spoken to me—'Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace'." Lu. 8: 48. We rejoiced together and magnified the riches of the grace of God, that on the third day after her arrival, at the advanced age of seventy-five years, she had found peace in believing in Jesus.

But we did not long enjoy the society of this dear mother. In just six months from the time of her burial with Christ in baptism, she fell asleep in Jesus with the blessed hope of awaking in the resurrection morning to life eternal. A few hours before her death she enjoyed great clearness of mind and turning to me said—"Elizabeth, I shall have cause to bless God through all eternity that I ever saw your face; but for this I should now be without hope." She then left messages to all her sons and daughters exhorting them to be faithful and meet her in the kingdom.

Husband's father was for many years a devoted christian and lived to see his prayers answered in the conversion of all his children, but died with hope defered in the wife of his bosom; but now she too was given him. O the blessed thought that in the resurrection morning they may all be joined to die no more! Lord, hasten it in its time.

As in the conversion just related we see the happy results of an instance of obedience to the leadings of the Spirit of God, we are led, in the pain of heart that always attends its recall, to record an instance of failure which occurred a little previous. O these failures! how they bring the tears of unavailing sorrow only as God pities us and gives us grace for the next time. Would that this were my only failure; but so frequent have they been that I sometimes feel my life has been one great failure. And while on this point suffer me here to say, that so crushing has been this thought, it being the stronghold of the adversary of my soul against me, that God in mercy set me to this record of his grace that he might put a song of praise in my mouth to glorify his name and "bruise Satan" under my feet.

A nephew of husband's—a devoted student of theology—was invited to make his home with us and complete his studies at our expense. He was tall and comely in person, and from early youth had been "an example of the believers." By birth, education and profession, he was a Presbyterian, and was thus preparing for the ministry in that denomination.

Just previous to his arrival, and not knowing that he was near, and with no thought of him in my mind, I retired as usual to my closet reading and meditations; and being led to the subject of baptism I turned and read the third chapter of Matthew and other scriptures upon the subject; but especially on the sixth chapter of Romans the spirit of God seemed to rest, and so illuminated the word of truth that it seemed to me if I could read it to the world not one could fail to see that immersion, and not sprinkling or pouring, is the baptism of the Bible. I wept with joy of heart before the Lord that he had graciously shown me the light of his word on this christian duty, and had given me grace to obey him in it.

I had but just gone out from this heavenly season when in came this dear nephew from his long journey. I greeted him with joy, and after the first glow of conversation had passed, being alone with him at the time, it flashed upon me—here is the mystery of your peculiar illumination on the subject of baptism; and the Spirit seemed to say—"This is the time, be faithful and let your light shine now." But I conferred with flesh and blood and said this certainly cannot be the time, after he has been with us a few days will be better—it will seem rude to introduce it now. But God's moment—the golden one that might have secured the prize—was fled never to return. Another time was not given me. The next morning husband conveyed him to "Lane Seminary" under the patronage of the Presbyterian church, and the opportunity was gone.

Then was I left to see the sin and vanity of setting up my judgment against the judgment of God. Wise as may be the maxim in carnal strife—"Discretion is the better part of valor," when we substitute discretion for the teaching of the Spirit of God, in spiritual warfare, we do it to our own discomfiture. This is worldly wisdom, or wisdom of the wise, which God will destroy—the understanding of the prudent that he will bring to nothing. Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world, that no flesh should glory in his presence? according as it is written:—"He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord." 1 Cor. 1.

Had I reasoned thus on the arrival of our mother, who can now assure me that the results had not been alike abortive? On the other hand, had I been faithful to the leadings of the Spirit of God in the case of our nephew, I have reason to believe I should have come again with rejoicing, bringing my sheaves with me. According to my experience, in every instance of success in divine things the child of God has to set aside not reason but, human reasonings, both of self and friends, and walk out by faith and not by sight. Faith is not sight, neither is it knowledge that can be demonstrated. The doing of it brings the demonstration.

Think ye that Peter walked by sight when he was found sleeping between two soldiers bound with two chains and the keepers before the door kept the prison? Think ye that this wary servant of the Lord walked by sight when he went upon the house-top to pray and fell into a trance and was taught the blessed truth that God is no respecter of persons, and was sent to open the door of faith to the Gentiles, and in his defence to cry out—What was I that I could withstand God?

Think ye that Paul and Silas walked by sight when they, in the name of Jesus Christ, commanded the evil spirit to come out of the damsel, whereupon many stripes were laid upon them and they were thrust into the inner prison and their feet made fast in the stocks? Would sight have pointed out this road to find the jailer and speak the word of God to him and to all that were in the house? O how fraught with truth is the saying—"He is overwise that goes out of God's way to escape a cross."

"HE RESTS IN PEACE."

H. PRATT.

The midsummer sun was setting; the robin was chanting its sweetest song, and all nature seemed to invite to meditation or repose. But there was one who heeded not. The lowing of returning herds, the singing of birds, the golden twilight of evening, had no charms for him. Other scenes were engrossing his mind. The allurements of earth had passed away, but all was tranquil. Turning at length his hitherto fixed eyes upon me, as I sat upon his bedside, he says,

"Father, are you going to carry me to Southbridge?"

What do you mean, Johnny?

"I knew that all your relatives were buried there, and so I was thinking perhaps you would want to carry me there."

Do you want to be carried there?

"I had rather be nearer home, where mother and Emma could bring flowers and put them on my grave, for I want you all to visit me just as though I was alive."

I had anticipated his wish, and selected a lovely spot under two pine trees. After being told of this he frequently exclaimed, "Oh! how delightful it seems to think of resting out there under those trees."

He gave minute directions for all that should be done after his death, even about his grave and stone, desiring to have upon it simply his birth, death, and—"He rests in peace."

How sudden our brightest hopes are blighted; yesterday all buoyant with expectation, to-day a sad reality, to-morrow—alas! who has weighed its solemn record with repose? Returning from an appointment of some days, I seated myself once more at home for rest, but I was soon filled with anxiety concerning my son. He had begun to study for a physician. The near coming of Christ was before me, and Johnny was not ready. I took my pen to write the feelings a parent only could know. But ere I had begun to unburden my heart, a telegram comes. How soon our heavenly Father knows our sorrows. I see my son's name there. What can it mean? While I was trying to decipher it without my glasses, my daughter came, and instantly divining its purport, burst into tears. Mother says—"What is the matter?" "Nothing bad, mother." Soon the mystery is solved, and this is the writing—"Mother, I have found Jesus. Rejoice!—JOHN." The anxious waves are still, "And there was a great calm." Sweeter words to a parent's heart were never flashed along the electric wires than these—"I have found Jesus." My bleeding heart is made whole. If a multitude of the heavenly host had been there, as once upon the fields of Bethlehem, with hosannas filling the air, my joy had been no more complete.

In a few days we met in Boston. He says, "Father, I had taken no comfort for years."

But, Johnny, I had done all I could to make you happy.

"I know it, father, but you could n't do it. Jesus alone could make me happy. I had said often to the wooing Spirit, Go thy way for this time, and so I was unhappy; but now I said, Abide with me, or I die, and immediately, when like Peter I was sinking, and I cried nearly all night, Save, Lord, or I perish, I found the 'Guiding Hand,' I felt the supporting arm."

One year had rolled away, and every nerve had been taxed and every wakeful hour employed in preparing for a loving bride. But ere the New Year's wedding day had come, that fatal cough begins. No human skill can check it. Another climate is sought once and again, but all in vain; all hope of getting well seems now to be taking its flight, and away off in Vineland, with mother and the young wife by his side, he says,

"If father would come now, I would like to go home. I am not gaining here."

Soon we stand in each other's embrace, but oh, how changed! My God! can I get him home? Help this once, and let him die at home. That prayer was heard, and in a few days I was permitted to see him quietly resting at home. The burden of months had been rolled away, and I could repose all in the bosom of my heavenly Father.

Almost up to this time the prospect of getting well was alluring, but now the scene had changed. Long, however, before he returned home he became deeply interested in the restitution of earth, the promise to Abraham. Now it was the joy and rejoicing of his heart. Though the struggle was severe, he could say, "Thy will be done." In warning his neighbors, his countenance bore the impress of heaven, while his fixed gaze and earnest words caused the stout heart to tremble. Said he to one he esteemed,

"Will you promise me that you will be a christian?"

The man hesitated, but there was no evading.

"Will you promise me before God that you will be a christian?" with a look that seemed to pierce the very soul.

"I will do the best I can, Johnny."

"If you do the best you can, Mr. ——, you'll begin now. Will you do it?"

Thus were the neighbors warned with words and looks that never can be effaced by time; they reached the heart. He was drinking in the deep things of God.

"You," says he, "must come to this ere long; you, too, must come to a dying bed. Then, oh, then you will need the christian's hope." "I am leaving a young and loving wife, and am filled with pain, yet I am happy, not a care or any anxiety comes to my mind. I am happy." "Go tell the world how a christian can die."

Every time I came in he would say,

"Father, pray with me; pray to have Jesus come; pray to have him come quickly. He is our elder brother, why should n't we want to see him?" "Father, I did think I could get so that I could do something on a farm, perhaps, but it is too late; yet in that beautiful home promised to Abraham we will live together." Calling us around the bed, and placing the hand of his wife in mine he says,

"When we are married we become one flesh, so says the Bible. Here, then, in Lucy you see all that is left of me. Now take care of her, as you would of Emma; if you show any preference between her and Emma, let it be hers; she needs it."

At another time he says,

"Father, before I went to Vineland the last time, I told you that you preached too much about the coming of the Lord; but you were right, I was wrong; all is lost unless he comes again." Again he says, "If I thought my spirit should survive my body and watch over me, I should feel badly; but we have learned better. The angels will watch over me 'till Jesus comes, then shall I live again. I have asked you to pray that Jesus might come before I died, but this may not be; but still pray for him to come. I want to see him. I know it will be but a moment to me if years should intervene, but I want him to come."

In his prayer he would say, "O my Father, ease me down gently!" And again, "Why do I linger? my work is done." "O father, if I had got well I would have told the people that Jesus was coming. I would have warned them faithfully; but I can't do it any more. You'll warn them for me, won't you, father? You'll tell them how happy I was upon a death-bed?"

Yes, Johnny, I will, God bless you. Turning to his brother he says, "Samuel, you warn the young people not to put off repentance until a dying bed; what should I do now without religion?" At another time he says, "Father, our neighbors think we are having a mournful time here, but they don't know the joys of our hearts."

Friends and neighbors have been kind and pitied us, yet the joys of those last weeks were priceless to me. In them I walked gently and prayerfully beside my dear son down to the brink of death. In them I witnessed the triumphs of faith. In them I saw illustrated the rest in believing. In them God cemented our hearts into one, and I could bear his burden with him, while Christ embosomed us both in his love. Who knows the joys of the communion of saints, as they walk along the valley of death with the arm of Jehovah around them, and the mount of God in sight? Who, save those who have "brushed the dews of Jordan's banks," and have enhaled the odors beyond? He oft expressed a desire to see Jesus before he died, and the Lord was not unmindful of such love. And after giving all needful directions which seemed to us like the voice of inspiration, he gazed heavenward with an earnestness that seemed to look far beyond the mortal life; and more and more intense was that anxious look, until at length he exclaimed—"I see it! I see it!"

"What?" says his mother.

"I see the city!"

"Are the streets of gold?"

"They are so bright I cannot tell." Still gazing with a look that seemed to drink in all the bliss of heaven, he began to raise his hands gently, as if to embrace the "One altogether lovely." An angelic smile lit up his countenance with light divine; triumphant joy was manifest in every feature, "and 't was done." The battle was fought, the victory won. Jesus was before him; his eyes like Stephen's had seen him, and it was enough. Now like good old Simeon he could say, "Let thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." His arms gently sank upon his bosom, his eyelids gradually closed, and the scenes of this earth had gone forever. His breathing soon became heavy, and we feared that the phlegm that he had not been able to raise might strangle him at last. We raised our cry to Him whose ears are ever open, and who regards the falling sparrow, and not in vain. The breath ceased gradually and easily, the pulse stopped, and without any change of limb or countenance he slept in death.

Thus closed the life of my beloved son, John H. Pratt, Aug. 15th, 1871, aged twenty-one years, four and a half months. "He rests in peace."

Sweet words around sweet thoughts are clinging,
  Scenes of the past and scenes to come,
Anon of joy and gladness bringing,
  Of blissful lands, our blessed home.
We hear his voice of praise no more,
  That manly form comes not again;
"He rests in peace" till night is o'er;
  "He rests" till Christ shall come to reign.
Rest on, rest on, thou sainted one,
  Thy toil and sorrow now are past,
We all still pray "Thy kingdom come"!
  We'll meet at home, "sweet home," at last.

"Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his"; or, let me be found waiting.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

HIRAM MUNGER.

It is interesting to many to hear how the cause is prospering generally, and a true report of each place seems to show the state of the body and symptoms of different diseases that are prevalent in these last days; and experiments and experience are instructive to the young. One half of our diseases is brought on by intemperate eating,—either eating too much or too many kinds. Experience teaches us to be our own doctors mostly. If we have taken cold, get warm as soon as possible. If no appetite, stop eating and working until you have let the whole machinery rest. Nine out of ten of all fevers are brought on by over exercising and over eating, which prepares the system for a cold. To rest and get warm is better, with the help of nature (which is always on hand), than all the doctors in town; for all their skill lies in these three friends.

The body of Christ is the church, subject to many different diseases, brought on by imprudence in ourselves, or by others who deal out our food. All kinds of luxuries are indulged in in these days, in temporal food as well as in spiritual; but the churches are enjoying a better state of health generally, by adopting a plain mode of living, i. e., each serving God for himself, and adhering to the old doctrine or food we first began to eat, and which gave us such good health spiritually. We are in a dispensation when the old apostolic doctrine or food is due the church—the kingdom of God; the place for our reward, when all God's children will get it together, and that we are the generation to see the Lord come, watching, and waiting, and praying, for the kingdom to come; satisfied, without knowing the exact time. Such are healthy now. While some have had an appetite for luxuries, or different kinds of spicy food, or doctrine, which has injured their general health, and was of no use to the cause, and it took others that lived on the plain, simple word to nurse them; yet some have died, others pined away nearly to skeletons; few get well again, and go to the field the second time.

We have had all kinds of stuff scattered among us, for other purposes than the health of the body; but it is getting to be well understood, and access to our churches is not as easy as formerly. Hence a better state of things exists generally.

The first place in this winter trip was Putnam, Ct., where is a good, consistent church, on gaining ground; poor, generally, excepting two or three, who do less than the poor to keep up the meeting. This kind of warts the church has always had, in our day, at least.

East Boston. Found the old hands had got back to work in harmony again, after a few years of scattering and confusion, caused by wolves in sheep's clothing, deceiving some, while others got out of health, taking down a little of everything that came along. But, thank God, they are gaining strength now, and I hope they will not suffer relapse, or collapse, again. We had a good, old-fashioned meeting with them.

Concord. Found the Centre street church in a better state, rejecting all nostrums, which heretofore had made them bilious. Had an extra good time, and a large, attentive congregation to hear on our "hope." More interest than usual here, as in other places.

Suncook. Here is a little company, striving for years to sustain meetings, but have had a hard time, sometimes being without preaching for months. There has been a failure in sustaining meetings, temporally and spiritually. They have been revived of late, and are going to hold meetings this winter, if there is wood enough to saw, and other work does not fail. It is the common working people that have always supported the cause of God, and will get into the kingdom. They have taken their trials patiently, if we except some long sermons lately preached, that tired them out, and their patience at the same time. Why do not preachers learn prudence, and not hold meetings from two and a half to three hours, and that in a factory village? Cramming a congregation will produce constipation in the "body," and may produce death, if not remedied. For the sake of God's dear cause, brethren, learn the wants of the meeting; if you cannot, God has not called you to that work; and if you will not, then the work will die on your hands, and you will be guilty of unjustifiable homicide.

Pittsfield, N. H. Here there were three protracted meetings in progress, but we had a house well filled, a good meeting, and good interest to hear our faith preached. Here we find some of the real wheat.

Barnstead (Clark meeting-house), Thursday, two P. M. Although in good sledding, and all were busy, the house was well filled with attentive listeners, and with some of the best workers I have seen on this trip. Some eight good, warm-hearted exhortations followed the preaching, in fifteen minutes. This is a strong church, because they work together and hold meetings every Sabbath, preaching or no preaching. Where there are ten living christians, they can have a good meeting. I knew there was work in them by the plainness of the dresses and faces. They partake of few luxuries, are healthy, and love to work. The old opposing stock have killed themselves by fighting God's dispensational truth, and have no meeting in the place. "It is hard to kick against the pricks." I found the same old pilgrim home with Bro. W.'s family I enjoyed ten years ago.

Epsom. This is a new field for me, but I found some good, old-fashioned religion. One man, eighty-six years old, had just got hold of this blessed hope, and spoke of it. The house was crowded, and the best of attention given. The truth is gaining ground in this region. Some hold the truth in unrighteousness, but God will judge them soon. The tares and wheat will be found in the same field and house. The tares in some places have so managed things through deceit, as to own a share in the house of God, and claim a right to speak, if their talk spoiled the meeting for all the rest. Through such a course, christian harmony has been scattered and broken.

Suncook again. Had the privilege of seeing and giving some welcome instructions to a Catholic family, just out in the truth, and very happy since having been baptized by Bro. Morrill. They have the simple religion of old times—believing what God says. It was good to hear them pray.

Many are inquiring about "time." Some of our preachers are very cautious about dates; others more positive. There are many prophetic signs, all admit. Now, brethren, let me ask such, how could these signs be located prophetically except there was a prophetic date, which is the foundation of the truth we are out on? It seems to me we need both dates and signs. Look at your old clock. Which pointer is of the most use to you of the two; the hour hand, or the minute hand? The hour hand, of course, for without that the minute hand would be of no use whatever. God's prophetic time dial has dates, as the hour or time hand, which gives the point to the signs. We cannot discard the dates and claim to know any thing about the Lord's coming by the signs; only we need both pointers on the clock.

Exeter. Found an old tried few who have crossed the Red sea and come out first; who cannot feed on affectation or pulpit gestures, lately offered them by some who failed to bring the food needed. We had a good time together, running over our past experience, and looking at the present signs of the papal power as it now stands, compared with prophecy. Some of the old believers say they do not want any more preaching from such as are ashamed of their true name, i. e., Second Advent people, and of their doctrine. Exeter is yet alive.

Dover. Here is a mixture; some good, but are so mixed up in their understanding of things, the team does not work together as a healthy body, probably owing to medicine taken some years ago, which fell into their limbs. The body is not in working order, but there seem to be symptoms of a reaction. We hope for the best.

South Berwick. Found them on the "Rock," enjoying their new Chapel, which was well filled. Some will long remember this meeting.

Biddeford. A large congregation. I recollect preaching to some eight or ten a few years ago, in Bro. Libby's house; now some five hundred attended. The truth does n't go a begging in this place. We had a blessed good time.

Portsmouth, by impression, on the early train. Found Bro. Chase down with the rheumatism, trying to get a little relief from a hot brick. One application of the "rescusitator" did the work in one hour, as it has in some six or eight cases within two weeks. If people knew the benefit derived from having one in the house, they would not do without one. It is a great pain reliever, and any one can apply it. The Portsmouth church are in a healthy state, and have a good Sabbath school, which gives an interest to the cause. We had a good time together. Bro. Chase straitened the traces as usual in exhortation, after preaching. His health is improving, to the joy of all, as he is one of the old war horses, that hitched on in 1843, and has kept a pilgrim hotel for preachers ever since.

Hampton. The new Chapel has been christened by a good reformation. Some converts spoke well of this way. A good warm meeting. Over one hundred out.

Seabrook. Here is a strong, consistent company, acting more upon principle than by spasmodic influences, realizing that preachers need something to pay their fare, and are not too delicate to take up a collection for that purpose.

Gloucester, by special request from Bro. ——, and to call on a certain man; but it appears the latter knew nothing about it, and I traveled from two to three miles to find a place to stop, gave it up, bought my dinner, and left on the next train, being about $2 out, besides having the disagreeable feeling caused by another's unpardonable negligence. Got me a good home for one day at the Marshall House in Boston, near the Crisis Office, where all common people will find a good home, on reasonable terms, which some of our traveling preachers will need in these days. If they continue to travel, they will see less encouragement that their traveling expenses will be met, than in years past. But we hope the war is almost over.

— Look upon every day as the whole of life, not merely as a section; and enjoy the present, without wishing, through haste, to spring on to another section now lying before you.

— The charity which longs to publish itself ceases to be charity.

— We are to work and learn. Life should have its quiet pauses, in which to gather rest for work, but no idle hours. The poor are to be ministered unto, the wicked to be reclaimed, and the sorrowing to be comforted.

— We are strong and fruitful only in the strength which God supplies through his Son.

He sendeth sun, he sendeth shower,
Alike they're needful to the flower;
And joys and tears alike are sent
To give the soul fit nourishment.
As comes to me or cloud or sun,
Father! thy will, not mine, be done.

— All the faculties of the rightly governed soul stand obediently waiting to receive the command to obey.

— Keep your heart's window always open toward heaven. Let the blessed light of Jesus' countenance shine in. It will turn tears into rainbows.

— The "assurance of faith," bringing a sense of present peace and enjoyment into the soul, leads on to the "assurance of hope," looking forward "until the day break." For there day and night, sunshine and shadow, light and darkness shall have merged into one eternal day. "Thy sun shall no more go down." "For the Lord God giveth them light." "He shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds." "The Lord shall be thine everlasting light."

— There is nothing laid down as a duty, but grace is promised to enable us to perform it.

A GRASP of the hand, a smile, a word even, is often enough in God's hand to change the entire course of life, to save a soul from death.—W. H. H. Murray.

DEAD PRAYER MEETINGS.

ADALAIDE POMEROY.

Who has not at some period of their lives, entered a place of worship, and been chilled and disheartened at finding no evidence of worship there; where the hymns are droned through, and the prayers muttered in a tone inaudible; where the exhortations are few and far between, and the audience is composed of the careless and unloving, rather than of the true lovers of Jesus; where the turbulent and graceless spirit of the enemy seems to predominate, and the peaceful and harmonizing presence of the Holy One is almost driven away; where those who should be the most watchful are utterly unconscious of danger, and heedless of the encroachments of the enemy? And that is one of the great snares which the devil lays for unwary christians; lulling them into a security which is as false as he is wicked; deadening their sense of duty, and creating in them a spirit of neglect and procrastination, which is as fatal to spiritual growth as actual crime.

No christian can afford to neglect the prayer meeting, and no christian can afford, when there, to lounge and sleep and allow Satan to kill the meeting, or the spirit of it. Said an excellent divine from the pulpit not many Sabbaths ago—"I have thought that if our regular weekly prayer meetings were to die, there would not be members of the church enough present to act as pall bearers, to give it a decent burial." Now this is a deplorable state of things. We are not apt in a worldly sense to be thus indifferent to things we love; we are not apt to neglect our business when we know ruin and disaster must be the inevitable result; we are not apt to be thus heedless of approaching danger when we have no sure defense; and surely there is no earthly object which should claim our love to the exclusion of our crucified Savior. There is no earthly work that should employ our every moment while the business of our Master suffers. There is no earthly danger which we should not face, rather than put to shame our divine Redeemer, and bring obloquy on the cause of Christ. And what is it when we feel a disinclination to attend prayer meeting but the shrinking of a guilty soul from the presence of an all-wise Judge? for we know that where two or three are gathered together in the name of Jesus, he is there in the midst of them. And when conscience goads us to the door of the sanctuary, and we sit in our seats with neither praise nor testimony to offer, do we not as wickedly deny our Master as did Peter of old when he said—"I know him not"?

The fact that Sr. A. can sing better than we can, or Bro. B. make a better prayer, does not exempt us from confessing Him who was slain, and rose again from the dead. In that day when every man will be judged according to his own works, neither Sr. A.'s songs of praise nor Bro. B.'s gift of prayer will avail for us. When the Master returns, we shall be called to account for the talents entrusted to us, be they one or five. And if we have buried them in a napkin, and refused to use them in the Master's service, we can expect nothing but condemnation.

Oh, what a day that will be! A day of triumph, and rejoicing, and glory unspeakable to the faithful steward; but a day of trembling, and terror, and woe, to the unfaithful. Happy is that steward who feels that he is daily adding to the Master's store, and in that great day of account is sure to hear the welcome—"Well done." O that the church might be aroused from its lukewarmness, and that the dead prayer meetings might be vitalized by the life which is eternal, and that sinners might be converted, even by such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit as in the days of the Apostles!

THE SPARROW'S INQUEST.

"Who took his name in vain—
  The Lord of earth and sky?"
One sparrow to another said:
  "It was not you nor I.

Oh, no! we love to rise
  Each morn, and sing his praise;
To take God's holy name in vain!
  No sparrow has such ways.

Not one of us can fall
  Unnoticed to the ground;
And when for food to Him we've cried,
  Some crumb or worm we've found."

It was a little boy
  That took God's name in vain;
The awful thing I'm glad to think
  He'll never do again.

He heard the sparrows talk,
  Perched there above his head,
As shocked as they had been to hear
  The word that he had said.

And when he'd scampered home,
  Down by his bed he knelt;
And, sobbing, there he told the Lord
  How very bad he felt.

Not guiltless, them He holds
  That take his name in vain;
The thing if you have ever done,
  You'd better kneel the same.

TREES THAT WEAR HATS.

You never heard of such a thing! Of course not, and I'm glad of it, for now I can have the pleasure of telling you something new.

These trees that wear hats—and there are I don't know how many hundreds of kinds of them—are very wonderful and beautiful. I dare say you've been in the woods and seen them a hundred times, even gathered them into baskets and carried them home.

I may as well tell you that you don't call them trees, but mosses—and it's only by the help of the microscope that you can see the perfect tree, and the cunning little hats they wear.

These hats are not like your father's "stove pipe." Some of them are round like a skull-cap; others are shaped like the helmets the old knights used to wear—you've seen pictures of them. Some are high, with a long point, like a tent; and others look like the high fur caps the Russians wear. Some have long tassels on top, like a gentleman's smoking-cap; and others are short and square like a paper hat. In fact, there is hardly a shape of hat you ever saw, or could think of, that couldn't be found among these wonderful little trees.

They are not just to look pretty, either, any more than yours is. They cover, and protect from the sun and rain tiny seeds, till they are ripe and ready to start life for themselves.

Then, as the hats are no longer useful, they just fall off, or tip over one side, and let the little atoms of seeds fall to the ground, or sail off in the breeze to start a new family of mosses somewhere.

Their hats are not the only odd things about these little wonders. Part of the tiny plants we call mosses are called by the wise men liverworts—just because they don't wear hats. They carry their seeds in the daintiest boxes and baskets, just the right size for a fairy.

The baskets are most elegant little things, and when filled with seeds look like birds' nests full of eggs. And all, you must remember, too small to be seen without a microscope.

When the seeds are ripe they get loose from the basket, and the first rain washes them out.

The boxes are even more curious. They are tightly closed till the seeds are ripe, when they suddenly spring open and scatter the seeds afar off.

Just the bursting of the box would not throw them far, you know; but there's a most wonderful little spring coiled up in the box. It is the pressure of the spring that bursts the box and scatters the seed. Not all the boxes open wide; some just open a little door on one side, and the seeds drop out; others jerk a trap-door off the top, and shoot out the seed.

The seed-cups are not the only beautiful part of them. The leaves—for they do have leaves, though you can hardly believe it, if you haven't a microscope to see them—the leaves are exquisitely beautiful, pointed, and often trimmed with white fringe on the end.

The delicate stem, with their branches, look, under the microscope, exactly like a forest of evergreen trees.

These tiny plants were made to collect and keep moisture, and splendidly they do their duty. Long and thick, and spongy, they hold every drop of water that falls into their arms, feeding it out gradually to the giant trees whose feet they cover. When their laps are too full to hold, the drops gather together and trickle off in a tiny streamlet; other little threads of water join it; it grows larger and finally becomes a broad river, cradled, and constantly fed by the moss-beds up in the mountain.

You see your old song is true, after all:

"Little drops of water,
  Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean,
  And the beauteous land."

There's another lovely thing about them. When all nature is gay and glorious in summer, the soft little mosses almost dry up; but the moment the frost comes, and green tree and gaudy flower alike turn brown and die, the little mosses put on their freshest and greenest hue; then they grow and flourish, as though to console us for all the beauty we have lost with the summer.—Little Corporal.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

WHAT SLEEP WILL CURE.

The cry for rest has always been louder then the cry for food. Not that it is more important, but it is often harder to get. The best rest comes from sound sleep. Of two men or women, otherwise equal, the one who sleeps the best will be the most moral, healthy and efficient.

Sleep will do much to cure irritability of temper, peevishness, and uneasiness. It will cure insanity. It will build up and make strong a weary body. It will do much to cure dyspepsia, particularly that variety known as nervous dysyepsia. It will relieve the languor and prostration felt by consumptives. It will cure hypochondria. It will cure headache. It will cure neuralgia. It will cure a broken spirit. It will cure sorrow.

Indeed we might make a long list of nervous maladies that it will cure.

The cure of sleeplessness, however, is not so easy, particularly in those who carry grave responsibility. The habit of sleeping well is one which, if broken up for any length of time, it is not easily regained. Often a severe illness treated by powerful drugs, so deranges the nervous system that sleep is never sweet after. Or perhaps long continued watchfulness produces the same effect; or hard study, or too much exercise of the muscular system, or tea and whisky drinking, and tobacco using. To break up the habit are required:

1. A good clean bed.
2. Sufficient exercise to produce weariness, and pleasant occupation.
3. Good pure air and not too warm a room.
4. Freedom from too much care.
5. A clear stomach.
6. A clear conscience.
7. Avoidance of stimulants or narcotics.

COLOR IN CLOTHING.—The color of clothing is by no means a matter of indifference. White and light-colored clothes reflect the heat, while black and dark-colored ones absorb it. White is the comfortable and fashionable color for clothing in summer. It reflects heat well, and prevents the sun's rays from passing through and heating the body. If white is the best color for summer, it does not follow that black is the best for winter. It must be remembered that black radiates heat with great rapidity. Give a coat of white paint to a black steam radiator, which is capable of rendering a room comfortably warm at all times, and the temperature will fall at once, though the heat-producing agency remain the same as before. A black garment robs the body of a larger amount of heat than white, and consequently the latter color is the best for winter garments. It is the best color for both summer and winter. Although this statement may seem like blowing hot and cold, it is nevertheless true. Let those who are troubled with cold feet, and who wear dark socks, change to white, and see if the difficulty is not in part or wholly removed. Utility in color is confined to the different shades merging from dark into light; but we find in connection with dress all the beautiful colors of the rainbow, and these are used for the ornamentation of the person.—Golden Age.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

CHRIST'S REIGN ON EARTH.

F. A. BAKER.

It is the common consent of all christians that, sooner or later, before the final judgment or after, the whole earth will be under the undisputed dominion of the Son of God. Those who believe that man gets his reward away from this earth and before the "resurrection of the just," understand that the predicted dominion of Christ must be spiritual, and this side of the final judgment over mortal men and a creation groaning beneath the curse. On the other hand, those that believe all reward to the righteous and punishment to the wicked is deferred till the resurrection and final judgment, and that the "meek shall inherit the earth" forever, and that "the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Christ) can plainly see that all those prophecies of Christ's future reign on the earth point to the day of immortality and a literal, endless kingdom.

A candid view of two or three texts will, I think, settle this question in the mind of the seeker after truth forever. Paul says (1 Cor. 15: 52), "We shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." Turning to Rev. 8: 2, I read—"And I saw the seven angels which stood before God, and to them were given seven trumpets." The "seventh," then, will be the "last." I then turn to Rev. 10: 5-7, and read—"And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea, and upon the earth, lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever and ever, . . . that there should be time no longer, but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished." The point to be noted here is, that "time" ends, and the "mystery of God shall be finished," when the "seventh angel shall begin to sound."

Now turn to Rev. 11: 15-18 for the prophetic history of the sounding of the seventh angel—"And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever. And the four and twenty elders which sat before God on their seats fell upon their faces, and worshiped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come, because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged." The whole thing is plain. "The kingdoms of this world become our Lord's and his Christ's" when the seventh angel sounds.

Then "time shall be no longer." The work of the gospel (the "mystery of God") will have been "finished." The resurrection then occurs, the "time of the dead, that they should be judged," and the time that Christ shall "reward his servants the prophets, and the saints, and them that fear thy name, both small and great, and shouldest destroy them that destroy [margin—corrupt] the earth." The "nations are angry" when the seventh angel sounds, and will be bitterly opposed to Christ's reign. Ps. 2: 1. The reign of Christ will be over resurrected, immortal saints, on the redeemed and purified earth, personal, glorious, and eternal. "The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick, and the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity."

It is well understood that the sixth trumpet has sounded, and the next will be the last. O, joyful thought! the King is coming soon! "Lift up your heads, and look up, for your redemption draweth nigh." "Glory to God in the highest, and upon earth peace and good will to men!" "My soul doth magnify the Lord." "Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." Oh! what glory, and joy, and everlasting bliss in Christ's eternal kingdom, which we "know is now nigh at hand." Luke 21: 31.

"May we, then, midst pleasure or woe,
For that kingdom our hearts now prepare;
And shortly we also shall know,
And feel, what it is to be there."

The religion of Jesus Christ is a vast remedial system, made up of many mighty forces, and containing within itself capacities of adaptation and adjustment to every phase of the world's progress, and to every necessity of individual life. These mighty forces are to some extent dormant, and they must be awakened into action; and the outlying field around the church must be tilled by all the agencies which God has placed in our power. To develop these inner forces, and to cultivate this outer field, is the bounden duty of this age and the church.

IMMORTAL BREATH.

D. D. LATHROP.

A short time ago we heard the objection to man's total mortality presented in this way: "God being immortal, his breath must be immortal, from a principle in philosophy that a part is as the whole; and God's breath is a part of himself: therefore, when he breathed the breath of life into man's nostrils, he breathed into him a part of himself: hence, man's breath is immortal; God's breath being a part of himself, man's breath is a part of himself; hence, a part of man is immortal."

Let us see, how self-contradictory this objection is. Supposing that God breathes our common air, as man and other animals do, and that it is a part of himself; then if all of God is immortal merely because a part of him is, why is not man and the other animals all immortal because a part of them is, if their breath is immortal and is a part of them?—"They have all one breath." Eccl. 3: 19. If a part of man is a part of God, than all of man is part of God, if "a part is as the whole." If man is a part of God, and is sinful, then God is a sinner, and is going to reward or punish parts of himself. If man is a part of God, then man is God. Spiritualists admit this, and teach it. If man's breath is a part of himself, and "a part is as the whole," then man's breath is mortal because he is mortal; then if man's breath is mortal it is not a part of God, because he is immortal. 1 Tim. 1: 17.

If God breathes the same kind of breath that man does, there is atmosphere in heaven where God's throne is; but "philosophy" teaches that our atmosphere is about thirty to fifty miles deep. If God breathes as man does, why not admit that there is a personal God? Ex. 33: 17-23; Heb. 1: 1-3. If the atmosphere which we breathe is immortal, it is not necessarily intelligent and conscious. The hairs of our heads are parts of ourselves, but they neither reason nor think. If man's breath is his immortal soul, then there is but one immortal soul for all the men that live; for they all have one breath. Eccl. 3: 19.

If the soul of man is a part of God, then a part of God is mortal and is going to die; for "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4, 20. If a part of God is mortal, then he is all mortal if "a part is as the whole"; and if "the soul that sinneth, it shall die," it is not a "never-dying soul." The breath is not a part of the man, because God "formed man of the dust of the ground." Neither is the breath a part of God, because God created it at the time he "created the heaven and the earth." The woman had no immortal part, for she was taken out of Adam's side; for Adam's immortal part was in his nostrils, if he had an immortal part.

Man's breath is not immortal, because it can be destroyed, or decomposed, and is found to be composed of oxygen and nitrogen—twenty parts of the former to eighty parts of the latter in one hundred parts by volume. The oxygen is said to be the renovating principle.

We do not like the modern expression—"He died and his remains were buried." Why not use the Bible expression—"He died and was buried"? He that died is the same that was buried. Moses made a great mistake when he wrote, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground," if modern theology is correct. He should have said—"The Lord God formed the remains of man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into it a never-dying-soul, and it became animated remains." Then it would do to say, "His remains died and were buried." If immortality is an attribute of the soul, the word "living" should not be used to qualify it, because it is superfluous. It would not do to say "living immortals," and yet the word living is just as necessary in the latter case as in the former, if the soul is immortal. David said—"Behold the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy; to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine." Ps. 33: 18, 19. How would it do to apply the common phrase thus—"To deliver their 'never-dying' soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine"?

It is hard for men to admit that they are mortal.

READY.

GEO. THOMSON.

How much difference is there between getting ready, and being ready? Just as much, I apprehend, as being in time for the train, and being too late. O, how many are continually talking about getting ready—getting ready for Jesus to come. And how many such are nearer ready now than one year ago? Is this the right position for christians to occupy? Jesus says—"Be ye also ready."

Getting ready is a justification for continuing in many bad habits, a plea for still cherishing naughty passions, and holding on to easily "besetting sins." Being ready is entire consecration; all upon the altar; everything given up for Christ; the old man with his deeds "put off." Pride is gone. Farewell the fripperies of fashion; your ribbons and laces, your gew-gaws and trappings, are too poor, too insignificant, for the ready one. Worldly ambition is gone. Farewell politics, Farewell every association that will not admit Jesus as its presiding officer and lawgiver. Selfishness is gone, away goes every darling, long-cherished, bad habit. Farewell tobacco, cleansed from all "filthiness of the flesh and spirit." Adieu to covetousness, penuriousness, stinginess, meanness, hatred, strife, backbiting, tattling, and the whole catalogue of Satan's clap-traps. All given up for Christ's sake—all on the altar.

Ready—ready for what? Ready to be married—married to Jesus. O what a thought! What are the qualifications? what the character of the Bride? "That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish." Eph. 5: 27.

Individual christians are the constituent elements of the church. The church is the destined Bride of the Lamb. Here is her character; each component part must bear the character of the whole. Hear, dearly beloved! hear. "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready." Rev. 19: 7. When he comes, as sudden and swift as the lightning's flash, no time to finish the preparation then. Too late, too late, too late. The Bride will not only be "ready," but "waiting." "Lo! this is the Lord, we have waited for him."

The difference between getting ready and being ready, is just the difference between the foolish and the wise virgins. The foolish were partially ready, and the wise were fully prepared. The foolish left something undone, the wise had everything done. Beloved! let us examine ourselves. Jesus is soon coming. Let us cast off the works of darkness. Let our motto be—

All for Jesus,
Jesus, all for thee;
Yes, I give myself to thee,
All to thee.

"Behold the Bridegroom cometh." "And they that were ready went in."

"WE'LL STAND THE STORM." C. M.

IS THERE ANY EXCUSE?

P. MATHEWSON.

The Master says go into my vineyard and go to work, and whatsoever is right, I will give you. But I am at a loss to know what to do. If I only knew what, then most assuredly I would do it. Do not the Scriptures abound with examples showing that small favors are accepted, especially when they are the best we can do? They do. These multifarious examples left upon the pages of Inspiration for our profit, seem to say, I will accept any thing in your line: that is, what you are capable of doing. Many of us can sing with the poet—

"No foot of land do I possess,
No cottage in this wilderness";

yet under our own hired roof we can entertain a righteous man, giving him a bed, a table, stool and candlestick. Well, let us see what the Master saith about this work—"He that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward." Does this reward look sufficiently important to influence us to do, a little extra work? We sometimes see noble-hearted people who reward their children and servants bountifully for extra painstaking, but where did ever humanity vie with such beneficence?

But, says another, I have no extra bed or table, every nook and corner of my little domicile is closely occupied—alas for me! Hist! what of that limped stream rippling so near your door? While on his wearisome journey, the servant of God enters your door parched with thirst. You offer him your best seat, and agilely hasten to dip the sparkling stream in your best cup, presenting it with a hearty good will, because he belongs to Jesus. This is what you can do, and the Master will not overlook it, trivial as it may appear in the eyes of the world, no more than he overlooks that poor widow's farthing so heartily contributed to support the church of God. Does not his language on these occasions prove that he highly appreciates every act where the motive is to honor him by doing good to his children?

The first work we hear of Matthew's performing after receiving Christ as his Savior, was the making of a great feast for Christ, and inviting a large concourse of his irreligious friends, that they might have the opportunity of listening to the doctrines and counsel of his new Master and Savior. This was what he could do, and Jesus caused it to tell for his glory, though pharisaic professors tried to make it appear that he and his disciples kept low company. But the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth soon put them to silence? just as they always do.

But what I do does not seem to amount to much. If I could only be instrumental in converting one it would appear like work of some moment. But are you not willing to perform that kind of work he plans for you? Is not our Creator the best judge in the matter? Do not the facts as instanced above, and many others that might be adduced from the sacred page, prove he has many kinds of work but all tending to the same great end,—the good of mankind? When Jesus comes in glory, and says to those on his right hand—"Come, ye blessed," is it because they have been instrumental in converting souls? He does not mention it. Please read Matt. 25: 35-44. The giving of the cup of cold water as above stated was not converting a soul, but it was comforting one, and was emphatically the work of God, and draws forth an assurance from the Master, of reward.

Well, but even church members do not recognize my work as being of any special utility, and I— Be it so, you must not cease performing your little work; and just recollect this is no new thing under the sun. When the woman in the Gospel poured that costly perfumery upon the Savior's person, the disciples demurred greatly, and accused her of prodigality. Ah! said they, if you had only laid out that forty-one dollars and fifty cents for the poor, it might have done much good; but now, it is just wasted. But Jesus comforted her with words of sweet assurance, and reasoned with the disciples showing it was no more a waste to put it upon him when alive, than after he was dead. They used this kind upon their deceased friends, and why not be anointed "beforehand?"

But, says the isolated one, I seldom have the opportunity of administering to the wants of God's children, away here so lonely. If I could only meet with two or three of like precious faith, and listen to their testimonies, I would tell them of the mutual love between Jesus and myself, and how precious his Word is in my loneliness. Dear lone pilgrim, just read a little more found in 2 Cor. 8: 12—"For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." And then in 1 Cor. 10: 31, and also a verse from Col.—"Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." "And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men." And remember you can do something for God even in your place; like the poor servant girl whose religious privileges were extremely limited, but who could live for God. When questioned how she managed to keep so spiritual minded, shut out from privileges, and her time so closely occupied, she answered that she did her work for God. Said she—"When I wash the children in the morning, I pray they may be cleansed from all impurity. When I dress them, I pray they may be clothed with Christ's righteousness," and so with other duties. Do all for God, then He will say "well done," whether it be in the field, behind the counter, or in the kitchen. Verily, there is no excuse for not laboring for the Master.

THE LESSON OF THE HOUR.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

We hardly need ask whether there is a lesson to be learned from passing events. Yet we know that very many fail to learn the lesson, or learning, fail to practice it. But truly there is a lesson, and it is so plain that wayfaring men need not mistake the full import of it. The simplest form of the question is this—"Which road shall I take?" There is a broad way, and a narrow way. The broad way leads to death, the narrow way to life. Which way do you choose? Which way are you now walking in? Shall we say that the broad way is a dangerous way? You have only to open your eyes to see the proof of this.

Here is one example "to our purpose quite." One of the foremost men of the present age (shall I say foremost in wickedness?) is suddenly arrested in his career, and with but a few hours to dictate his will, or give expression to his dying wish, he dies, and is buried out of sight. He has outstripped all his rivals in the race for wealth, and in a brief time had risen from a lowly position, to the giddiest heights of wealth, and to the power that wealth confers.

"Musicians soothed his ear with airs select;
Beauty held out her arms; and every man
Of cunning skill, and curious device,
And endless multitudes of liveried wights,
His pleasure waited with obsequious look.
And when the wants of nature were supplied,
And commonplace extravagances filled
Beyond their asking; and caprice itself,
In all its zig-zag appetites gorged full,
The man new wants and new expenses planned;
Nor planned alone." Others "took up his case,
And planned for him new modes of folly wild; . . .
. . . Yet after all his riches grew,
. . . So lavishly upon a single man
Did Providence his bounties daily shower."

But while his sun had yet hardly marked the hour of noon; while yet he was in his early vigor and prime; the darkness of death closes the scene, and the glare and the glitter of the brilliant show is shrouded in the tomb. What now to him is the power he but lately held in his hand? And what the millions on millions piled, which but yesterday he called his own? With all his dazzling success, his life is a failure, if he failed to lay up treasure "where moth and rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal."

Is there one now standing at "the parting of the ways," hesitating whether he shall choose his portion here, or in the world to come? Let this hour witness your choice, and let it be the choice of wisdom. Choose the narrow way that leads to eternal life and glory. Choose Christ for your portion. Can it be that you hesitate or delay longer? Do you doubt His power to save? O, do not undervalue the offer of life and immortality. Hesitate no longer; doubt no longer. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

"MY LORD."

W. F. FAHNESTOCK.

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear!
It soothes his sorrow, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fear."

Yes, thus it was on this beautiful supposed anniversary morning of our dear Redeemer, when in the stillness of midnight the bright stars in myriads, that decked the blue heavens in all their brilliancy, seemed to vie with each other to add lustre to the scene, and as the clock struck one, the silence was broken by a quartette of strong, sweet male voices on the street—

"Hark! the herald angels sing, Glory to our new-born King!"

calling back that precious morn when the shepherds of Israel who watched their flocks by night followed the star in the east, to bring their adorations to lay them at the feet of Him who shall be called the Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Can we not in sympathy with those shepherds this morning and from the fullness of our hearts—

"With joy the chorus we'll repeat, Glory to God on high!"

and follow the babe of Bethlehem from his manger home through his boyhood days, where he astonished the doctors of the law with his wisdom; onward in his earthly career, and sit at his feet as did Mary, drink in his precious teachings, and thereby be strengthened to bear the buffetings and assaults of the enemy; go with him to the closing scenes of life to the garden of Gethsemene, where by himself he agonized for us, sweating great drops of blood, when all earthly aid had left him, and angel hands ministered unto him; follow through his scene of trial and condemnation, where all the powers of darkness arrayed their infamy against him, but "as a lamb that is dumb before its shearers, he opened not his mouth"; "he bore our griefs"; go with him to Calvary's mount. Hark! the sneers, the buffetings, the scoffing jeers of the infuriated crowd as they onward go; deserted even by those who were his bosom friends; see the soldiers nail him to the accursed tree, and hear his cry of agony—"Father, Father, why hast thou forsaken me?" He thirsts; "they gave him vinegar to drink," when a Roman soldier's spear entered his side, from whence

"There was a fountain filled with blood,
Flowed from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath its flood,
Lose all their guilty stains;"

and he cried—"It is finished."

There stood the three Marys in agony at the foot of the cross by the dying Lord. Our hearts almost shrink in their agony in sympathy at the lost hope. But go with them to the sepulchre of Joseph, and then see Him whom they hoped should have redeemed Israel sleeping in the silent tomb, sealed and guarded by Roman soldiers. Well may we turn away with those affectionate women, who with almost broken hearts return to their homes. Affection still survives the shock, and the thought ever uppermost in their hearts is, my Jesus; for they prepared spices and ointment (Luke 23: 56), and rested the Sabbath day. The deep agony of their loss is no doubt manifested by sleepless nights. As the first day of the week cometh, Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, came unto the sepulchre bringing spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them, and they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre, and they entered in and found not the body of the Lord Jesus; then she runneth and cometh to Simon Peter, and the other disciple whom Jesus loved, and said, "They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him." Jno. 20: 11; Luke 24: 1-3. Was not this a moment of aggravated agony, and especially when the disciples left those women and went away again to their home? Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping; and as she wept she stooped down and looked into the sepulchre, and seeth two angels in white sitting one at the head and the other at the feet where the body of Jesus had lain; and they said, Woman, why weepest thou? She said, Because "they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." As Mary turning from the sepulchre in her depth of despondency, meeting Jesus whom she supposed was the gardener, she exclaims, "Sir, if thou hast borne him hence, tell me where thou hast lain him, and I will take him away." Yes, yes,—"They have taken my Lord away, and I know not where they have lain him."

Truly this sad picture of an absent Lord is fearfully demonstrated in our day. Go to the house of God where the multitude assemble on the Sabbath day to worship, and what do we find? Oftentimes the pride of life, thoughtlessness, indifference to the spirit of worship, yes, forms of worship without the power thereof; elegance, eloquence in all its desirableness to fascinate the ear, every thing to pamper and gratify the taste, but,—"they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have lain him." Go to the social prayer meeting, and how is it there? From a congregation of three or four hundred there may be twenty or thirty Marys, and a John, and a Simon, and oh, the languor, apparent coldness, the zealous pastor doing all he can to arouse the sleeping virgins, but no hand to uphold his; no, no,—"They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have lain him." Go to the social circle, and what is heard there? You scarcely dare speak the name of Jesus. Its concerts, fairs, lectures, dress, fashion, and any thing else that can fill the flying moments, for—"they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have lain him." Go to the family circle. Periodically you take the Bible to read and pray, and oh, the lassitude, distaste, tardiness, unwillingness. Why? "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have lain him." Go to our own hearts, and as Mary stooped down and looked into the sepulchre, let each one of us in deep humility stoop down, peer into the sepulchre of our hearts, and see if Jesus is indeed enthroned there, the hope of glory. What do I behold there? Is that envy, is that pride, is it evil-speaking, covetousness, worldliness, doubt, unbelief? What? does all manner of evil fill that place that should be filled with the bright rays of the Sun of righteousness? Is it so? Have these taken away my Lord? Oh, where have they lain him? Yes, turn away, if perchance I may meet the gardener, and ask him, "Sir, if thou hast taken him hence, tell me where thou hast lain him, that I may take him away." Have him restored to the sepulchre of my heart, ere it be too late; for the night is "far spent, and the day is at hand," when many will irretrievably say—"They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have lain him."

PUBLIC PRAYER.

F. BURR.

I occasionally come across people who are conscientiously opposed to public prayer. I wish to write a few words to any such who may read this paper. There are some persons who go around pretending to preach, who ignore public prayer as "Pharisaical," or "Babylonish," or some other "ish" to suit their feelings so that they may cry it down. Such are generally persons of extreme views, who pretend to know a great deal about some little things, and to be very particular to fellowship only those who come up to their standard of knowledge, and receive their gospel. Such will "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." I do not expect to benefit such, but some who are honestly deceived in the matter will be glad to learn the truth.

The Scripture argument against public prayer is mainly based on the words of our Savior as found in Matt. 6: 5, 6, in which we have very specific directions for private prayer, and as such, the pronoun is put in the singular number, while in the Lord's Prayer close following the pronoun is found in the plural. Private, individual requests would sound very strangely if put in the plural number.

The point at which Jesus aimed his rebuke in the fifth and sixth verses, was the custom of those who foisted their own private requests before the public ear, so as to appear so very sanctimonious. This was hypocrisy, pretending to pray to be heard of God, but really to be heard and praised of men. This Jesus condemned most decidedly. The nature of a private personal prayer is far different from that uttered as the harmonious petition of a church of believers. So Jesus said, "When thou prayest," that is, for thyself alone, "enter into thy closet and shut to thy door." This private confession should be made every day, unknown to man, but known to God "who seeth in secret." "But when ye pray, say after this manner, Our Father etc." How different is this! Here is the combined petition of many hearts sent forth to a common Father. And this direction for public petition does not conflict with the direction just before concerning private prayer. Both have their place, but the private prayer is very essential. Let us all take heed.

We have several New Testament records of public prayer, certainly none of which conflict with Jesus' directions. If they did they would be condemned. But, on the contrary, they were very acceptable to God. For instance, Jesus' words at the tomb of Lazarus, as he spoke to the Father while the congregation stood around him. He asked God to grant that they might believe that He had sent him. This was a public petition of Jesus himself, and certainly would not conflict with his teachings. And the result was, many of the Jews did believe on him, and the prayer was answered. Another remarkable instance of public prayer is recorded in Acts, 4: 23-31. In that passage it is stated that the company "lifted up their voice to God with one accord." Surely, that was praying in company, and it was found to be very acceptable also, for "when they had prayed the place was shaken where they were assembled together." Thus God gave witness that their prayer was heard, and thus they were encouraged in their deeds.

Another record is in Acts 12: 12, in which we are told that Peter, when delivered from prison by the angel, came to a house "where many were gathered together praying." And God answered their prayer by liberating Peter and sending him to their presence. The apostolic directions given in 1. Tim. 2: 1, 2, were evidently intended as guides to Timothy concerning public worship, and made mention of prayers and supplications as the chiefest work of the service, and indeed they are, as I can freely testify. An earnest spirit of prayer pervading an assembly will help the preacher's utterance amazingly. And when in prayer at public services I can feel an unusual unction, then I know God's blessing will attend the word. Many other instances are recorded of public prayer, but "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word is established."

Prayerless worship! What sort of worship can that be? Does it have its springs in heaven, or on earth? Do men worship thus because they are devoted? Prayerless worship is too near Godless worship to suit a devotional heart. The worship of this age needs more heart, more feeling, and not less. There may be counterfeit prayers, but let us not reject the genuine. Do not be afraid of too much prayer. Rather, fear too little. "I will that men pray everywhere."

THE SPIRITUAL CONDITION OF EUROPE.

J. E. CLARK.

The hand of God in the history of the past year is too manifest to be mistaken. If we will but look, we will see a hand-writing on the wall. The apostle Paul said that day should "not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." This prophecy has become history, and as we look back thirteen hundred years, we discover a line of apostate rulers, who sprang out of an apostasy, whose label—"man of sin"—is no libel, who enthroned themselves in the temple of God, and who claimed to be worshiped as God. If any person doubts the real character of the papacy, let him carefully study the lives of the popes as portrayed by Roman historians.

At the late council of the Vatican, the heroic Bishop Strossmayer charged that many of the popes had been guilty of avarice, incest, simony, and murder. For many centuries popery warmed its red hands at the fires of the stake, where God's martyrs were burning. Its tactics have changed, but not its temper. Three centuries ago Rome would have sent Hyacinthe and Dollinger to the stake. To-day she strips off their robes and hisses them out of their churches. Then she would have executed them; now she only excommunicates.

Wonderful changes have taken place within the past century, and three great battles have been fought during this time. First, the battle of Waterloo; and it finished the dynasty of the first Napoleon. The second battle was fought at Gettysburg, and made an end o American slavery. The third battle was fought at Sedan, and it finished the rotten empire of Napoleon III., and the temporal power of the pope.

To-day Europe is rising from tyranny and misrule. She is setting her face away from Rome, and laughs at the infallibility dogma. We look at reunited Germany, and behold a Protestant emperor, and beside him stands Prince Bismarck, with Martin Luther's Bible in his hand. England is Protestant. Russia belongs to the Greek church; and the nations no longer bow down and kiss the feet of the high pontiff at Rome. The spiritual tone of Europe is improving. During the late war in Europe, the German battalions went into action chanting Luther's battle psalm—

"A strong refuge is our God in trial."

And their churches throughout Germany rang with these precious words—

"God is our refuge in distress,
Our Shepherd watching us to bless;
Our shield of hope through every care,
And therefore will not we despair,
For thou, oh God, art ever near."

Truly the high praises of God are being sung in Catholic Europe. There is an uprising of the people, and a wonderful change. The man of sin is to be consumed with the Spirit of his (Christ's) mouth, and destroyed with the brightness of his coming.

"MY HEART IS FIXED."

J. B. WELLS.

Can you, like David, say—"O, God, my heart is fixed, I will sing and give praise"? Is your heart fixed on God, and the life beyond this? Have you fully resolved to live here with an eye single to the glory of God, so that you may be a resident of a better, even an heavenly country? Let me entreat you not to allow your heart to be fixed on riches, dress, or education, without it is also fixed on God. Let him be first, all else second. Let your example correspond with your precepts. Live good, as well as talk good, and "forgetting those things which are behind, press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

How great the Lord is; and shall we not serve him? He commands, and nature obeys. He said to the rolling billows—"Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further, and here shall thy proud waves be stayed." Amid the great convulsions of nature the sinner may well fear and tremble, but the christian need not, for his heart is so fixed, trusting in the Lord. What though troubles arise, afflictions come, and temptations beset us on every side; what though friends forsake, and foes laugh to scorn, cannot we with the apostle Paul say—"These light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Whether we are in youth's bright morning, in the noon of life, or leaning upon our staff, feeble with the cares and anxieties of many years, let us not forget that to-day only is ours, and that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Whether at home or abroad; whether in sickness or in health; whether rich or poor, let us ever live near to Jesus, keeping our hearts fixed continually on God, and when the burning day arrives, and the ungodly cry for rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the presence of the great God, we may lift up our eyes and say—"O God, my heart is fixed, I will sing and give praise."

"NEITHER ANGEL NOR SPIRIT."

A sister requests an explanation of Acts 23: 8—"For the Sadducees say there is no resurrection, neither angel nor spirit; but the Pharisees confess both."

We are here told, in part, what the Sadducees denied, and in part what the Pharisees believed—and only in part—other features of this faith were held in its positive and negative forms by both parties, such as the personality of souls distinct from the body, their transmigration (living successively in a cat, a dog, a mouse, a snake, or an elephant,) or their descent into a big hole in the centre of the earth, all of which things the Pharisees believed, and the Sadducees denied; none of which points of difference are here mentioned. Paul here refers to only three items of antagonism in their faith.

1. The Sadducees denied the resurrection; the Pharisees admitted that the dead would rise.

2. The Sadducees denied the existence of angels; the Pharisees believed in their existence.

3. The Sadducees denied the existence of spirits, such as Jesus cast out of men, often called devils; but the Pharisees believed that satanic spirits existed. Not a word is here said about the human spirit.

If, however, we should adopt the Pharisees' view of the human soul, simply because the disciples were once Pharisees, we should have to swallow the bitter pill of transmigrationism, and of a home in the bowels of the earth. Did the apostles believe this heathenism, baptized into Phariseeism? Not after they believed in Christ as "the life," nor in any of its appendages.

A SPIRIT SPEAKING TO PAUL.

The Parisees said of Paul who had related his remarkable experience of being spoken to on his way to Damascus. "If a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not fight against God." Acts 23: 9. Some have supposed that the Pharisees here refered to a disembodied human spirit. Even if they did, it is not here mentioned by the way of sanction, but only as a matter of history. Nor did Paul in this connection proclaim himself a Pharisee in faith except upon the question of the resurrection. If he had unqualifiedly announced himself a Pharisee, he must have sanctioned transmigrationism, and the theory of an underground home for departed souls, which was believed by the Pharisees. This Paul did not do.

The Pharisees could not have meant, however, that a human spirit might have spoken to Paul in the way, without repudiating their own theory of its descent into the bowels of the earth at the death of the body, except in cases of transmigration. Doubtless the expression here used, "a spirit or an angel," is used as we often use two terms expressive of the same thing, the latter term being explanatory of the first, as if I should say, "A star or a meteor fell from heaven"—two names applied to one thing. Angels and devils are called spirits—as, "He maketh his angels ministering spirits," and Christ "cast out unclean spirits"—but is is not probable that the Pharisees meant to intimate that God might have spoken to Paul by a devil, but by a holy spirit, otherwise called an angel. W. S.

"A Peculiar People."—Such are the true people of God, and such they have been in days gone by, and such will they be in days to come. But in what does their peculiarity consist?

1. They are "zealous." God's people should never be minus of zeal, for "it is good always to be zealously affected in a good cause." Lukewarmness is not an ingredient of true christianity.

2. Not only are they a zealous people in relation to true theology, though it is well enough to be zealous for the truth of heaven, but they are likewise "zealous of good works."

There is a kind of zeal that is up to fever heat whenever there is a chance for a theological contention, but it subsides at once when it comes in contact with the prayer meeting atmosphere. That kind of zeal savors more of carnality than of spirituality; for it is possible to contend even for the truth to gratify carnality. A kind of zeal that has no relish for good works, and thrives only in the element of theological strife, is certainly an unsanctified zeal. Not that we would see less zeal for the word of truth, do we thus speak, but that we would see more zeal for good works. Let us in this respect be a "peculiar people." W. S.

The N. Y. Tribune is pleased to say in a late issue—

"Earthly affairs are speedily to be wound up, if the World's Crisis newspaper is to be believed. Peruse this, O careless reader, and shake:

'The cup of iniquity is about full; the harvest is nearly ripe; and soon the heavenly reapers will descend to begin their great work of separating the wheat from the tares. It is a solemn hour in which we are living; yet but few realize how near we are living to the end of the present dispensation. It is time to be wide awake, gazing from the watch-towers for the first glimmer of light from the dawn of the eternal morning. Let us be all ready to depart at a moment's warning.'

We do not believe one word of this; we have not the slightest idea that the world is to be destroyed or made over; that the wheat and tares are about to be separated. Those who do so believe, we have observed, never have the least doubt of the branch of the cereal family to which they belong; we never knew a millenarian who thought himself one of the tares. We affirm that one who is working well to-day may calmly trust the hidden season of to-morrow, and that one who passes his time in scaring nervous people out of their senses, may be grievously mistaken as to the quantity of treasures which he is laying up in heaven."

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

By Henry Constable, A. M., Prebendary of Cork. Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, M. D., of Yale College. 8vo. 68 pp. Price 40 cents.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject. We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—1 copy, 40 cts.; two copies, 75 cts.; three copies, $1; one dozen for $3.50;—all sent by mail, postpaid. Please order freely. Ag'T.

NEW TRACT.

We have just received a new tract of 24 pages, entitled, "The Coming Reign of Terror, or the Commune," by W. N. Pile. The writer shows that the "Reign of Terror" of 1792 was produced by the workings of Socialism, Spiritualism, Infidelity, Free-Love, and the Commune; and then reasons that as these elements are now at work everywhere, they must produce the same results. The tract treats of the living issues of the present, reveals the awful condition of society, and shows that we are on the verge of "the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

For sale at this office. Price, by mail, single copy, 7 cts.; five copies, 30 cts.; ten copies, 50 cts.; fifty copies, $2.00; one hundred copies, by express, $3.50. Ag'T.

Also sold by the author at Springfield, Mass.

"WE ARE JOURNEYING."

With the poet the christian can say—

"I'm a traveler, and I go Where all is fair."

But where is that realm of bliss to be enjoyed? The first effort of latter day theologians is to locate it in the skies; but upon being repulsed with an array of Scripture testimony, many are led, instead of submitting to the truth of God, to take what they deem a conciliatory ground, saying that is makes no difference, if we only get there. They feel like a Wisconsin clergyman, who took for his text, "Come and go with us, and we will do thee good;" and as he was preaching in a place where the Advent doctrine had been proclaimed, and Eld. B., an Advent preacher being present, he knew better than to preach them into heaven; so after exhorting his hearers to start on the journey with them, he finally said, "Some may inquire where we are going; but" said he, "I don't know, and don't care, if I only get there; but come and go with us."

Next morning Eld. B. had a fine opportunity of applying this principle. On his way to a village near by, with his horse and wagon, he saw one of this minister's members, and instantly hailing him, said, "Come and go with us."

"Where are you going?" said the man.

"I don't know, and I don't care," said Eld. B., "if I only get there; come and go with us."

This set before his eyes the position taken by his own minister so plainly that he could not fail to see it.

Well, we may know where we are going, for God has told us; and we ought to care for what God has said about it. We are on a pilgrimage to the kingdom of God,—a kingdom to be set up at the close of human probation, and not a kingdom to precede the judgment to be filled with unjudged people; a kingdom to be established on earth for resurrected saints, and not a kingdom in the skies to be the dwelling place of invisible shades.

Not only do we know to what kingdom we are journeying, but we also know something about the time when we are to get there. On this long journey we have passed successive waymarks previously designated by divine wisdom, by which we know approximately where we are on our journey; and as we have passed the last guide-board in the catalogue, which was to be seen near the journey's end, we know our relative nearness to the promised kingdom, and we can joyfully sing—

"But our journey's end is near,
Soon we shall rest."

NEW PROOF OF IMMORTALITY.

As long as substantial help is not at hand, the drowning theology of soul-immortality will continue to grasp each floating straw, thinking to find support. In a recent sermon on the immortality of the soul, proof was sought in man's ability to "know good and evil," assuming that if a mortal being could know good and evil, the horse, the cow, and all the animals would know good and evil, and thus come under the rule of accountability; and inasmuch as they did not know good and evil, this knowledge in man must be the result of internal immortality. Let us see what the argument will prove, provided it is right.

When we look at the record we learn that man did not know good and evil at his creation, but he became such a being by committing sin; hence, if the foregoing claim is valid, it follows (1) that man was created without immortality; (2) that he obtained immortality by sinning; and consequently if he had never sinned, he would never have become immortal. Did sin put an immortal soul into man, by which he was enabled to know good and evil? Are we really ready to say that sin gave birth to immortality? So much for the new argument. We wait for another.

Prayer Meetings.—Prayer meetings are the pulse of the church, which beat with regularity when the church is in good health. When the prayer meeting is thinly attended, and void of zeal, be sure that the health of the church needs looking after. When the prayer meeting dies, the church cannot be awake. There is one way to prevent the death of a prayer meeting; that is, assemble its friends; for a prayer meeting was never known to die in the presence of its friends. Will its friends refuse to come to save its life? Then their friendship is only nominal, and not real; for what friend would refuse to save the life of one he loved? Do we love the prayer meeting? Don't let it die. W. S.

— Blessed is he who employs all his time profitably, is silent on subjects that do not concern him, and passes through this tumultuous world like one that is dumb and heareth not, for the Lord's sake.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

OUR LAST EFFORT!

"The Judge standeth before the door."—James 5: 9.

We call the special attention of our brethren scattered abroad, who believe that the Lord is coming in 1873, to engage with us in giving a distinctness to the cry—"Behold! the Bridegroom cometh!" and warn the world of their approaching doom. Immediate action is demanded. Let all such as have this world's goods in their possession, and believe they will soon be consigned to the flames unless speedily used in the cause of Christ, and in making known his immediate coming, appropriate such sums, from time to time, for this object as the cause of Christ requires, so as to meet their responsibilities as stewards of our Master to be faithful. We want to publish tracts and sheets containing evidences on the time of the Lord's coming, with other important matter, briefly stated in a concise form, and scatter them world-wide; and thus preach the gospel of the kingdom throughout the whole world as a witness to the nations before the end comes. Let all such as feel that our duty lies in this direction, send their names, and the amount they will appropriate from time to time for this object, to Geo. T. Adams, Agent of the Adv. Chris. Publication Society; and also suggest any plan of operation that will be most advisable, and most speedily attain the end desired.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 9.

My last number left me at Stevenson Ala. with Eld. Cargile, where I have since been preaching every day, despite the coldest weather known in this region for some time—some say for fifteen years. Of course this prevents many from coming, but those who do come, are nearly all deeply interested. I had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of a Bro. F., an intelligent man residing here, who obtained my last work, "Life Beyond Death," some months ago. At the first reading, he was impressed with the thought that it was not far from the truth. He read it carefully a second time, and was strengthened in the conviction. He then read it a third time with Bible in hand, turning to every passage refered to. He is now a confirmed believer, and is able to defend the faith. Of course he feels quite different from a minister in this region who is too wise to read the arguments presented, and tells his people that he "does not preach Yankee, pray Yankee, sing Yankee, nor do Yankee." When men seek to forestall the spread of truth by raising the cry of "Yankee," to prejudice the people, I conclude they are hard pressed for arguments to repell it. But it is nothing new for truth to receive slurs.

Have just received a note from Bro. Bowman of S. C., informing me of the receipt of over one hundred and fifty copies of "Life Beyond Death," which I had sent him to distribute. He says:—

"The books came by mail, and have been nearly all given away, and are doing good service. Thank the Lord, light and truth are spreading all over this country. The opposition it meets only makes it shine the brighter. I have sent works to Georgia and Alabama. Tell those brethren (I mean the Baptist and Methodist preachers who have got into the truth,) never to part with it, if they have to give up their heads."

Cannot comply with the strong request to visit that region yet. Have also just received a note from a brother in Ooltewah, saying—"Our church-house foundation is laid, and the work is progressing." We spoke of this matter in a previous article, and are glad to hear that the house is being erected. We are to remain in Stevenson a little longer. The Editor of the New Era thus speaks of my preaching. "Rev. Wm. Sheldon preached here Sunday night. As he stepped into the pulpit, he sang the old chorus,

'Oh, you must be a lover of the Lord
If you want to go to heaven when you die,' changed thus—

'If you want to reign with Jesus when he comes.'

This was a foreshadow of his sermon, which was to prove that none of earth's inhabitants have entered heaven; that this earth is to be the heaven for the saints' everlasting rest. He was successful in his effort. Is a learned, fluent speaker."

Many are opening their eyes to the truth. Error fades before it. W. S.

The Christadelphians.—This sect believe in one Deity, who is the author of the Bible, announcing to the world his word by the prophets, Christ, and the apostles; who also is one God, not three, as the clergy teach. They believe in the restoration again of the kingdom to Israel, which, by right, is the Deity's kingdom and that the Jews are his peculiar people. They also believe that man is the possessor of no such treasure as an immortal soul; but that man was made a living soul, and not an immortal soul, as the clergy teach.

THE WORCESTER CONFERENCE A GLORIOUS SUCCESS.

This blessed conference has inaugurated a new era in the Advent cause. It has been spoken of as the most important meeting that has been held for twenty years. The great theme, or subject, under discussion was the definite time connected with the second advent of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. There was a much larger number of brethren that attended this meeting from abroad than was expected, and much deeper interest manifested in the subject discussed than we supposed existed. Truly God was in the meeting by his Holy Spirit. Glory to his Name! The meeting was characterized by charity and brotherly love, with a very few things that might appear censurable. The main points discussed were the commencement and the termination of the chronological periods of the Bible. And so far as I could discover, all who took part in the discussion, having come to any settled conclusion, believed the 1335 years of Dan. 12: 12 would end in A. D. 1873. While there was less unanimity as to where the 2300 years of Dan. 8: 14 would end, there was nothing presented that would establish a date that would end them simultaneously with the 1335. But we think facts were presented that proved conclusively that the 2300 years would end in A. D. 1875.

In the discussion of the chronological periods from the creation to the first of Cyrus, between Brn. Simpson and Barbour, the latter appeared to make one year less to the call of Abram than Bro. S.; Bro. B. making 2083 years, while Bro. S. made 2084. We regard Bro. S. correct in the number 2084, although his premises might at first sight appear unsound. We will give our reasons:

First, we read in Gen. 7: 6—"And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth." This language either means that Noah was six hundred years old at the commencement of the flood or at the termination: that it does not mean the termination, will appear from what we read in the tenth verse—"And it came to pass after seven days [or, on the seventh day—margin], that the waters were upon the earth." This tenth verse may be compared with verses fourth and sixth. If Noah was but five hundred and ninety-nine years old at the commencement of the flood, there could be but 1655 years from creation to this point; or else we shall be obliged to admit that Methuselah lived outside the ark, clean through the flood till the waters were dried up, before he died, as will appear by the following facts:

First, "Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness . . . and called his name Seth."	130
And Seth lived one hundred and five years and begat Enos	105
And Enos lived ninety years and begat Cainan	90
And Cainan lived seventy years and begat Mahalaleel	70
And Mahalaleel lived sixty-five years and begat Jared	65
And Jared lived one hundred and sixty-two years and begat Enoch	162
And Enoch lived sixty-five years and begat Methuselah	65
And Methuselah lived nine hundred and sixty-nine years and he died	969
	1656

We see from these facts, that if no more than 1656 elapsed from creation to the end of the flood, then Methuselah was carried clean through the flood outside the ark without being drowned.

I think we had better believe that Noah was six hundred years old at the commencement of the flood, as the Bible says, than to be involved in such an absurdity as this. It is evident that Methuselah lived down to the first year of the flood, and then died.

These facts prove that 1656 years elapsed from creation to the flood	1656
We have one year for the flood	1
Shem begat Arphaxad two years after the flood	2
Arphaxad lived thirty-five years and begat Salah	35
Salah lived thirty years and begat Eber	30
Eber lived thirty-four years and begat Peleg	34
Peleg lived thirty years and begat Reu	30
Reu lived thirty-two years and begat Serug	32
Serug lived thirty years and begat Nahor	30
Nabor lived twenty-nine years and begat Terah	29
All the days of Terah were two hundred and five years and he died	205
Thus we have two thousand and eighty-four years from creation to the time that God made the promise to Abraham:—from which promise, to the giving of the law to Moses, was four hundred and thirty years	2084 430
From the law, to the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, the commencement of the vision of the twenty-three hundred years was eleven hundred and eighty-six years	1186
Making from creation to the twelfth of Ahasuerus thirty-seven hundred, ending in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus king of Persia, where the twenty-three hundred begins; consequently ending the two periods combined in	3700 1875

Also making six thousand years from creation to 1875, and reaching to the justification of the sanctuary. Therefore the wicked nations must be removed from the earth previous to 1875.

It is high time this subject was more fully understood; and it will be. Let arrangements be made to hold another time conference as soon as practicable, in some place where brethren are best situated for such a meeting. Springfield and Portsmouth have been suggested. L. T. Cunningham.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

This institution is about closing its tenth year. Its object is to furnish a complete Theological and Religious Library and Reading-room for all who desire to study or read religious works, or those upon kindred subjects. The Library now contains nearly 11,000 volumes, including books not yet received; and the Reading-room receives nearly one hundred periodicals. Books have been taken to fifty-one towns and villages of Massachusetts, Maine, and New York, during the past year; and persons from sixteen States of our Union,—from Canada, and England, have used the Library in its halls. The use of the Library constantly increases as its books multiply. The Library is incorporated, whereby it can hold $150,000, exclusive of books and furniture, but it is not endowed. It needs a large and regular income for the purchase of new books and periodicals—for the binding of books, for the printing of catalogues—for the salaries of its officers, and for other current expenses; and at no distant day it will need a fire-proof building.

The Library, formed for the benefit of all the religious denominations, and managed by all, has been supported by congregations and persons connected with each. The meeting of members of the various religious denominations to conduct such an institution, and to consult such a literature, directly promotes a mutual acquaintance, and good understanding, and thus cultivates the greatest scriptural grace,—Charity. The institution needs to be constantly aided in the future, as in the past, by the friends of education, of culture, of christian knowledge and charity.

Persons may aid it by presenting books, by becoming members, or by subscribing for a year or a quarter to use the Library. Parishes may assist it through collections, or by becoming perpetual members, whereby their whole succession of pastors may have the free use of the Library and draw books. Gifts of $500 or upwards are added to the Permanent Fund, and held under the name of the donor.

The Library and Reading-room are open daily, at 12 West street, Boston, for the inspection and use of all, where additional details can be obtained as to its objects and use. Donations may be sent to the Secretary, Rev. Luther Farnham, at the Library, or to either of the Directors, and they will be immediately acknowledged.

THE CHRONOLOGY.

N. H. Barbour.

In the last number of the Crisis (Feb. 14), I find a criticism on the chronology as given by me in the "Midnight Cry." The brother in referring to the "Midnight Cry," begins—"Which is said to give the true time for the Lord's coming." This, although not found in the book, is in quotation marks, implying that we claim to be able to give the true time. Now, my brethren, the writer has never made any such claim. Long years of disappointment and waiting have taught him to mistrust human ability. And when speaking of "that blessed hope," either on paper, or by word of mouth, the feeling of modesty has ever been in the ascendant. "I find the chief dependence is on the chronology," says the brother, "which the writer seems to think shows the six thousand years to end in A. D. 1873, without fail, and Christ to come." "Without fail" is also in quotation marks.

I do not object to being understood as holding this faith; but I do object to being represented as dogmatical and positive on these great and momentous truths. Because nothing is further from the facts, as all who have heard me speak, or carefully read the book in question, can testify. The brother is mistaken, and evidently has not read carefully, when he says "he finds the chief dependence is on the chronology." The signs and types are in themselves very strong evidence in favor of 1873. There are many ways of showing, by the types, that the tarrying was to be thirty years; or from 1843 to 1873. But aside from these, and the chronology, there are three prophecies, each one of which, if standing alone, would be sufficient to make us look for our deliverance in 1873 with an earnest, trusting faith.

The brother objects to our position that the sum total of the chronological periods, as given in God's word, are reliable. He thinks some of them may, and in fact must, overrun the time stated in the Bible, while none could fall short; therefore these God-given periods are unreliable. I will give his own words—"While the round years of patriarchs, judges and kings are given to us without mentioning months and days, none can doubt that such fractions existed."

Now I submit that we have no right to assume that Adam, or any other patriarch, or king, was one minute older than God declares him to be, simply because common sense teaches us that there must have been fractions of years, unless we also at the same time assume that some other periods may have run enough short to make the sum total correct, as God has given it. To this, however, the brother objects.

But he admits that if proof could be brought that some of these periods are short of the time given, then this position held in the "Midnight Cry" would be plausible. I am happy to be able to give the desired proof. But first I will say that I agree with the brother that we are not called upon to believe that Adam was just one hundred and thirty years old when Seth was born, and that every patriarch was born on the same day of the month and year, and that each and every king was born, crowned and died on their birth-day. But we have no right to assume one side of the question, and not the other. I should be willing to take my stand on God's word, taking the full years unquestioned, and all the fractions as given. There are but four or five, all of which will be referred to in this article, and if we use them all it only shortens the time one year and ten days, and would make the six thousand end this side of 1873, and not beyond it.

In the "Midnight Cry" we gave the full years without these fractions, because we believe God has so taught. But we will give the proof that a fraction of a year which overrun was not reckoned, and also that one which fell short was not reckoned in summing up the full years, by the pen of inspiration. "David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years." 2 Sam. 5: 4. The next verse tells us that he actually reigned six months over forty years, and yet this fraction is left out in the sum total here, as in two other places, viz., 1 Kings 2: 11—"And the days that David reigned over Israel were forty years." Again, in 1 Chron. 29: 27—"And the time that he reigned over Israel was forty years." Now for the fraction on the other side. "And Asa slept with his fathers, and died in the one and fortieth year of his reign." 2 Chron. 16: 13. If he died in the one and fortieth year of his reign, then he did not reign forty-one full years. Now hear the word of the Lord—"And in the twentieth year of Jeroboam king of Israel, reigned Asa over Judah, and forty and one years reigned he in Jerusalem." 1 Kings 15: 9: 10. The brother notices, he says, that two kings' reigns are left out; Jehoahaz, who reigns three months (2 Chron. 37: 2), and Jehoiachin, who reigns three months and ten days. Verse 9. I confess that when I published the "Midnight Cry," these two fractions were left out of the chronology, because after the above teaching, in relation to fractions, I was at a loss what to do. I now believe these are exceptional, and should be reckoned in their place. They stand alone. No other period of less than a year is given in the whole of the chronology, and one of these is given to a day, making together six months and ten days. Reckoning these, the six thousand, according to this chronology, will end in the autumn of 1872, six months and ten days prior to the end of the Jewish year terminating in the spring of 1873. From many scriptures, I am now convinced that such is the case; and that the time of trouble will begin this coming autumn, at the end of the six thousand. This would carry us about six months into the time of trouble, before Christ comes for our deliverance.

"The third error to which I wish to call attention," says the brother, "is in the reign of the judges. Forty-five years are given as the period from the sending of the spies, when Joshua was forty years old, to the division of the land." I first supposed this misstatement of the brother's naming Joshua for Caleb was a mistake of the printer, but he continues to reason from this premise, and says—"This makes Joshua eighty-five years old at the division of the land." He then goes on and shows that Joshua being eighty-five at this time, lives twenty-five years after the land was divided. This would be very pretty reasoning if Joshua had been Caleb, and Caleb Joshua. Perhaps the brother will be a little surprised when he looks at Josh. 14: 7–10, and discovers his mistake; and that there is not a place in the Bible where Joshua's age is given in connection with any of these events. We simply know that he died at one hundred and ten years of age.

Notwithstanding the fact, so apparent, that the brother has read neither the Bible or my book, on this point, with any benefit to himself, still he has touched the point here where this chronology is vulnerable, if it is so at any place. These four hundred and fifty years of the judges is an old battle-field over which many chronological writers have met and broken lances. The ground has been contested inch by inch until the marks of the struggle are familiar to all passers by. And we give the brother all the credit due for his discovery. But would it not have been better if he had given the answer to this admitted difficulty, which is already found in the book he was criticizing, instead of ignoring that answer?

The argument on this four hundred and fifty years of the judges has continued since the beginning of the Christian era, at least, and filled many pages of history. It will not be expected, therefore, that I should exhaust the subject at the end of a short article in a paper; still I will do the best I can under present circumstances. In the world's chronology we find an unbroken line from Adam to the end of Caleb's forty-five years, at the division of the land. Josh. 14: 7–10. And this without the necessity of appealing to Josephus, or any other uninspired writer. Then come these four hundred and fifty years which we think measure from the point where the chronology is dropped, by Caleb, at the division of the land, until Samuel the prophet. Now for our reasons for so thinking.

The first chronological period given, after the division of the land, is that of Judges 3: 8, where they serve the king of Mesopotamia eight years. On through the book of Judges to the death of Eli (1 Sam. 4: 18), we find nineteen short periods (chapter and verse for which may be found in the "Midnight Cry"). Thirteen of these periods measure the time given under their thirteen judges. The other six are the periods when their enemies prevail, between and prior to the reign of these various judges. Hence they are actually under judges but three hundred and thirty-nine years, and one hundred and eleven years under their enemies, making in all four hundred and fifty. In Acts 13: 19, 20, we read—"And when he had destroyed seven nations, he divided unto them their land by lot. After that he gave them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet." As the judges were scattered over the greater part of this time with continual breaks between them, no other language would be so appropriate to cover this whole ground as that used by St. Paul. "He gave them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years." I admit that it is reasonable to suppose, from Josh. 24: 31, and other passages, that a considerable time elapsed after the division of the land, and even after Joshua's death, before the eight-year period of Judges 3: 8 begins. But there is time given to cover that apparent break in the chronology, without going outside of God's word. I am the last one to try to cover up the fact that there is a difficulty here. I believe this chronology was so arranged for the express purpose that men should stumble, as a part of the great plan of closing up the words and sealing the book "even to the time of the end." If the chronology of the six thousand years had pointed to 1873, without obscurity, it would have been a key to unseal the time centuries before God designed it to be understood.

There is an apparent break in the chronology during the time the children of Israel serve the Lord, after the land is divided, and prior to the first eight years which go to make up these four hundred and fifty years, which twenty years would fairly cover. And on the other hand, there are twenty years too much time given in the period itself; which must be accepted if we take God at his word. Paul evidently makes these four hundred and fifty years measure from the division of the land until Samuel. (I admit he does not positively so affirm, but he certainly implies that the four hundred and fifty years cover that period of time.) These nineteen periods in the Judges run down as chronology with all the apparent clearness and positiveness of any other portion of chronology, not excepting that from Adam to the flood. A judge delivers them so many years, then they are under their enemies another given period, then another judge, and so on. "And the Lord delivered them into the hand of the Philistines forty years." Judges 13: 1. Then we have the story of Samson, which winds up with the sixteenth chapter—"And he judged Israel twenty years." This twenty is one of the nineteen periods which, added together, make four hundred and fifty for us, as they did for St. Paul. And yet in Judges 15: 20 we learn that these twenty years are a part of the preceding period, viz., the forty years already given to the Philistines—"And he judged Israel in the days of the Philistines twenty years."

From the above I learn, first, that these four hundred and fifty years are twenty years too long to reach from the time they are sold into the hand of the king of Mesopotamia (Judges 3: 8) until Samuel the prophet. Acts 13: 20. Second, that it appears to be the right length to reach from the division of the land until Samuel. Third, Paul certainly implies that it does cover that ground. Fourth, that the peculiar way in which God has arranged these numbers, so that the chronology could be given perfect, unbroken, and in full, and yet in a way that men would stumble at it, and finally have to go back and take the simple word of God unquestioned, in order to arrive at the truth, is just like the Lord.

The four hundred and thirty years at the end of which the children of Israel came out of Egypt, is another very similar case. We should have remained in the dark as to where these four hundred and thirty years began, if Paul had not come to the rescue. And strange to relate, the time in the thirteenth of Acts, and the one from the covenant to the law, are the only places where chronology is so much as mentioned in the New Testament. The simple fact is recorded (Ex. 12: 41), that when the four hundred and thirty years were fulfilled, on the self-same day all the hosts of the Lord came out of Egypt. But not a word is found in the Old Testament as to where these four hundred and thirty years began, nor could we have known, without Gal. 3: 17. So with these four hundred and fifty years of the judges. In both these cases the right number of years is given in the Old Testament, but in such a way that we could not place them without further light from the New Testament.

By taking this, and all other chronological periods, as found in the Bible, down to the reliable historic era, at the first year of Cyrus, B. C. 536, unquestioned; the six thousand years will end either the coming autumn, or, at the furthest, with the Jewish year ending in the spring of 1873; at the very time indicated by the 1335 days of Daniel, and other prophecies found in Isaiah and Jeremiah, together with the signs and types, as the end of this dispensation. May we all be ready to meet the Bridegroom, and go in to the marriage feast.

An American Book Abroad.—Webster's Dictionary is now considered throughout the continent of Europe, not only the authority par excellence in English lexicography, but as the characteristic American book. It is better known and more widely circulated than any other. I have met with it at the Imperial Library in Paris, the Library of the British Museum, the Athenæum and other London Clubs, and numerous other places. I have heard of it from Turkey, India, China, and even Japan. It is everywhere deservedly applauded for the elegance of its type, the distinctness of its impression, the beauty of the engravings, and the vast amount of information condensed within its covers.—Paris Cor. of Boston Post.

Correspondence.

From Bro. M. Wing.

Dear Crisis:—We stand in great need of gospel preaching in our locality. Through the guidance of heaven, the timely instruction of the Crisis, and other publications of like character, my brother and I have come to a knowledge of the truth. Three years ago this winter I became acquainted with Bro. Cady (a brother of the Abrahamic faith). At that time I was a member of the Society of Friends, and zealous in the profession of that faith. I became much interested in this brother's ideas in regard to the "kingdom of God," the "unconscious state of the dead," and the "destruction of the wicked." I gave myself to Bible study, meditation and prayer, the result of which was a renouncing of my Quaker theories, and an embracing of the Bible doctrine of life and immortality through faith in Christ, and obedience to his word; this life to be revealed in the day of the glorious appearing of our Lord, to call forth his sleeping saints to the "resurrection of eternal life," and to usher in that age of glory when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," and we shall be made "kings and priests unto our God," and shall "reign on the earth." My brother, at this time residing in Missouri, embraced like precious faith. We are united in the gospel hope, and by the guidance of our heavenly Father are doing what we can to spread these precious truths.

I have not yet been baptized. I feel a great anxiety to be obedient to the faith. We would be indeed thankful if Bro. Grant would stop with us on his return from California. We realize that there is a great need of work for Jesus in our vicinity. We are alone now, but we believe that if we could have the service of an earnest preacher, many would receive the truth gladly. We are trying in our weakness to preach "the word" to the people, but it is under much embarrassment, not having been baptized or united with the church. Will some kind brother come and help us?

New Providence, Iowa.

From Bro. Jer. Carr.

Bro. Grant:—Although afflicted like Timothy with often infirmities, I am doing what I can in feeding the flock of God with meat in due season, trying to be an ensample to the flock by obeying the word of God, which says we should arm ourselves with the mind of Christ. If we have the spirit of Jesus we shall strive to follow him in all things, believing that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." If we through a desire to lead or be greatest, take a course that will tend to divide the flock of God, and lead off a party, and go on one's own-hook theory (as Bro. Sheldon has said), shall we not reap accordingly? Paul says—"Mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple." Rom. 16: 17, 18. Is it not according to the doctrine of the apostle Paul to have order in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth? 1 Tim. 3.

I pray God we may all have so much of the burning love of God in our hearts that it may burn up all the works of the flesh, such as variance, or disagreement and dissension, also emulation, or an effort to equal or surpass. Paul says—"Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." Phil. 2: 3. I have been trying to follow the above rule for several years, and can say to the praise of God it works well, and I mean by the grace of God to go on sowing to the Spirit that I may reap eternal life.

Since the Annual campmeeting at Pittsfield, I have labored in various places. Attended an excellent conference at West Gardiner with Bro. H. B. Seavey, with whom I can work with perfect freedom and confidence in the gospel. Also attended a quarterly conference at Lincolnville the last of Oct.; from thence to Belmont, where we had some very interesting meetings. Here are a few faithful children, who are doing what they can to get others to come to Jesus and be saved. One came out on the Lord's side determined to have eternal life; and another, who was formerly a Free Baptist, has been led to see and embrace the truth, and is rejoicing in hope of soon seeing Jesus and being made like him. To God be all the praise.

Jan. 13th went to Pittsfield. Preached on Sunday. Monday went to Dover; from there to Sangerville village, to attend a three days' meeting with Bro. Seavey. The roads being bad, Bro. Seavey did not get there until Saturday night, and as brethren came in from Garland, Dover, and Dexter, I did what I could in preaching the word of life to attentive audiences. It is a new place for our faith. Bro. J. H. Brown, who lives there, is doing what he can to get the truth before the people.

Monday we went to Corinna. Bro. Daniel Smith kindly cared for us. Sister Smith has not walked any for three years. Truly Jesus' coming will be glorious to the sick and sorrowing ones among the Lord's children. From Corinna we went to Pittsfield, where there are a few that love the Lord. Some of them started last spring for the kingdom of God, and are doing well. Preached to them twice on Sunday. May we all have but one object, and that to glorify God in all we do, and be ready for his coming. "The pure in heart shall see God."

South Albion, Feb. 7th, 1872.

From Bro. H. Munger.

Bro. Grant:—The Conference at Worcester on the "time" question was a blessing to those who attended. Each brother had a chance to present his views on the prophetic periods, their commencement, and end, without interruption, others having a right to ask questions, which tried every joint of the arguments; and if they could not stand all the cross questions, they did not get out of humor, as is often the case. There was not the determination to get the argument, but to get the truth. This prepared the way for a full investigation, Christian-like. The prayer-meetings grew more earnest as the meeting progressed. All the different dates seemed to end the 1335 years in 1873. All other dates ran into the age to come, or after the Lord had come. Our work was this side of that,—now. There seemed to be a general rallying of all classes to the one point—the Lord is very near. It appears like the "morning watch," when those who had been talking in their sleep about confused points of doctrine, which caused division, waked up and began where they left off in 1844. The walls are going to be built in troublous times, but if we have a mind to work, the "Sanballets," or opposers, will not stop the work. The slumbering time is over, and it is high time to awake out of sleep.

We as a people are greatly indebted to Bro. Thurman for our prophetic starting points, which cannot be moved; also to many other facts never demonstrated before. No one man has given so much light while the "virgins" were slumbering, up to the time his book appeared; but he and others will see new light as we progress.

A quiet, good spirit pervaded the Conference at Worcester, which told on outsiders as it did in 1843 and 1844. If the time is preached again unitedly, there will be a uniting of those factions which have hitherto been wandering around in a state of somnambulism; i. e., doing work while asleep. We saw at this conference those working together who had not for years before. This was encouraging. If anything will unite the soldiers, it is the morning gun of time. We either see the Lord next year, or have sufficient light to keep us together, was the feeling of many at this conference. Some wake up harder than others, and some feel cross if they are disturbed, but the disturbing time has come, and another nap may be too late to get ready; for God's express train will be on time. The wicked nations are filling up their cup, and the "mother of harlots" has broken up keeping house, after being divorced from her eighth or last husband. The Italians have confiscated her goods. All these signs come in to substantiate the prophetic dates, as never before. Signs there's no mistaking proclaim Messiah near. I believe and therefore speak.

From Bro. G. B. P.

Editor Crisis:—As I am where I cannot see your paper which I highly prize as a religious journal, have thought perhaps a few lines from this sea-girt isle, situated at the south extremity of our broad land, might interest some of your readers. This Island (or Key as it is called) is about one hundred miles from Havana, and about twelve hundred from Boston. It is about five miles long and from one half to a mile wide; has some six thousand inhabitants, who are from various parts of this country, and others also; at present quite a number of Cuban refugees reside here. The island cannot be called much more than a rock, as its formation is coral rock, with a little soil in places. Cocoa-nut trees are quite plenty in the city, and a few banana trees may be seen in some gentlemen's yards with their delicious fruit; but the inhabitants here import all the necessary things of life, as well as the luxuries. They have six churches, one Catholic, one Episcopal, two Methodist, and two Baptist, one of which is not finished yet. I have attended one each of the two latter. In the Methodist there did not appear to be much interest in spiritual things, though it was the first day of their new preacher's labors with them. The Baptists, where I have attended most of my sojourn here, were reorganized twenty months ago, having split off from the other society. Their Pastor, Rev. Mr. Craft, I like very much. He has much zeal, and his discourses are very instructive. One Sabbath he baptised three converts since I have been here, one of whom has since been licensed to preach the Gospel, but says himself he has been called of God to the work and shall devote his life and talents to trying to win souls to Christ, whether he has other authority or not. I like his spirit much, and can truly wish him God speed.

Last Sabbath they partook of Christ's broken body and shed blood in an humble, christian-like manner. It was good to be there. I wish them success as a church, for they partake of the spirit of Christ, and I feel that if they could induce many to follow up their meetings, they would soon be led to exclaim—"See how these christians love one another."

Religion is not in a flourishing condition here, from what I have observed; but I believe that when Christ shall gather his elect from the four quarters of the globe, he will take some from this sea-girt isle.

From Bro. Geo. Wright.

Bro. Grant:—I have long felt it my duty to communicate through the Crisis the Lord's dealings with us in eastern Michigan. The rise and progress of the cause we love in this county (Sanilac) is full of interest. Looking back two years and a half ago, when we bade adieu to dear friends in Lapeer and gave up a situation of one thousand dollars a year, with a family of eight looking to me for support, I obeyed the call—"Come over and help us"—without the direct promise of a dollar, and only one brother (R. J. Arnot, of Lexington) from whom I could expect any help. (This brother has acted nobly both in helping me and assisting in building chapels.) I came here praying the dear Lord to give me the evidence of being in the way of duty, by the conversion of souls. This I had the first week; and the work has been steadily onward since. Although we have been brought into strait places, I have never for one moment felt to regret the sacrifice we made. I have seen many bad men happily converted to God, and have had the pleasure of baptizing into the likeness of Christ's death over two hundred during the time, and have raised up and organized and assisted in raising up ten societies. Four chapels are in course of construction. One is ready to use, three miles north of Lexington, and one in Marlett, Brockway Center, and Pt. Sanilac, will be ready in early spring. Let us all thank God and take courage. Brethren, pray for us.

Bro. A. L. Adams writes:—"We left New York, Saturday, Jan. 27th, on Steamer Magnolia, and arrived before Ft. Pulaski on the afternoon of the third day, and anchored for the night; went into Savannah the next morning at high tide. Encountered a heavy sea off Cape Hatteras. The climate is delightful, fresh, soft, and invigorating,—perfectly charming. Savannah is a city of evergreens; the green-bay, magnolia, pride of India, pine, orange, and lemon, are now in full foliage. The large and beautiful park on South Boud street is a very inviting resort—a charming grove. Pulaski monument is a fine work of art for the time in which it was made. The old cemetery, enclosed by a high brick wall, is a place of peculiar interest to the visitor. We were pained to see the tombstones badly defaced, it having been done by the soldiers in the late war. The Bethesda, an orphan asylum, founded by James Habershan and Whitfield assisting, is now in the possession of the Sisters of Charity. We visited the Beach Institute—a colored academy. Prof. A. N. Niles of East Hampton, Ct., is principal. It has four hundred scholars from four to twenty years of age, and seven teachers. We were much pleased with the manner in which the school is conducted. The teacher of the Grammar department is a lady from Boston, and the teacher in the primary school is from Ct., and a graduate of Mt. Holyoke Female Seminary. We like the large, warm hearts of the Georgia people. Here is a good field for christian labor."

Sr. C. Hill writes:—"By the mercy of God I still live, and bear in heart love, ever deepening and strengthening for truth and purity, God's last message to this generation, 'Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come,' together with truth concerning man's nature and destiny—truths all-important now, having a value equaled only by the worth of life eternal. But living in an age as we are, when men's hearts are turned unto fables, and pleasure rules the hour, to whom shall we speak? as saith the prophet. What a thought! man made capable of the high employments and enjoyments of eternity blindly refusing to accept the same. Christ the divine one weeps while he exclaims—'I would, but ye would not.'

Hours of peril these indeed! Let those who can fail not to offer continually fervent, effectual prayer. Choice souls are falling by death's power. Let those who remain keep the ranks good, close up the vacancy, and labor harder. We must help each other—the far-off lone ones, who have no appreciative earthly help near. We have met but one soul of like precious faith, in four and a half years, with life's storms more wild, its realities more fearful, than ever before. The reward is to the overcomer. Pray for us."

Bro. Geo. W. Brown writes:—"I see by the Crisis of Feb. 7th, Bro. Simpson gives his proof that the war on the Jews continued two years after the destruction of Jerusalem. I have been looking carefully at the subject, and find when the city and temple were destroyed.

'Cæsar resolved to leave there as a guard the tenth legion, with certain troops of horsemen, and companies of footmen. So having entirely completed this war, he was desirous to commend his whole army, on account of the great exploits they had performed, and to bestow proper rewards on such as had signalized themselves therein.'—Josephus, Book 7, chapter 1, sec. 2.

Dr. Adam Clarke says Jerusalem was taken Sept. 7, A. D. 70, which ended the Jewish war. In A. D. 71, Temple of Janus shut, showing universal peace.—Clarke's comment on New Testament, page 455."

Bro. B. P. Manning writes:—"I wish to say to the brethren that I am trying to do the best that I can to live for the kingdom of God, and am very thankful for the donations they sent me last fall and winter to help me on after a godly sort. I cannot help myself. My limbs are growing weaker, and I cannot walk but a few yards at a time. God only knows my sufferings. I shall not need help from the brethren much longer. The time is very short. The Lord is coming soon. I look for my paper every Thursday till I get it, and then I read it through a number of times. It is all the preaching I hear, and the Bible—thank the Lord for that blessed book."

ITALY.

Rome, Feb. 13. The Pope will soon send forth an encyclical letter on the subject of public instruction, and its relations with Church and State.

Rome, Feb. 16. It is announced that the Pope intends to demand the Concordat, so far as it relates to Alsace and Lorraine.

FRANCE.

ACTIVITY OF THE BONAPARTISTS.

Paris, Feb. 17. The activity of the Bonapartist agents, who are intriguing throughout France to secure the return of the ex-Emperor, creates some excitement in parliamentary circles at Versailles.

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY BY THE BONAPARTISTS.

Paris, Feb. 19. The Opinione Nationale asserts that a conspiracy has been discovered, in which three generals under the late Emperor are leaders. Their object was to disperse the Assembly by force and take possession of the Government, when they were to be supported by a large number of ex-officers and soldiers of the Empire from the north. The Opinione says that in consequence of this revelation the Belgian frontier was carefully guarded, and no one permitted to cross into France without a passport.

PROPOSED POSTAL TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Washburne, the American Minister, has received instructions from his Government to negotiate for a postal treaty between France and the United States.

THE COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH ENGLAND.

The Patrie believes that the negotiations between France and England, relative to the commercial treaty, will be resumed, and they are likely to lead to a friendly revision of the existing tariffs.

THE MONARCHISTS ON THE ALERT.

Paris, Feb. 18. The Monarchists in the Assembly are canvassing with great activity to obtain signatures to their forthcoming manifesto and to organize a strong and compact party.

THE FUNERAL OF AN IMPERIALIST.

Paris, Feb. 16. Charles Etienne Conte, formerly private secretary of the Emperor Napoleon, died on the 4th inst. in this city. His funeral today was attended by a large number of partisans of the ex-Emperor, relatives and personal friends of the deceased. Among those following the relatives to the grave was M. Rouher. As the funeral cortege approached the cemetery of Pere La Chaise the carriage of Rouher was surrounded by an angry and excited throng, who stopped it and made threatening demonstrations, crying, "A bas les Imperialists." The friends of Rouher left their carriages and came to his assistance. Rouher finally escaped from his assailants amid the cheers of the Imperialists, and the procession was not again interrupted.

ROUMANIA.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

The consuls and other representatives of the foreign powers here have united in making a formal demand on Prince Charles for the protection of the Jews in the Principalities.

A disturbance recently attempted at Galatz was quickly suppressed.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A REVOLUTIONARY SPEECH BY SIR CHARLES DILKE.

London, Feb. 19. Sir Charles Dilke addressed his constituents in Chelsea this evening. The meeting was crowded and at the outset was slightly disorderly. Ample precautions, however, had been taken against trouble. The platform was raised so high that it could not be scaled, and seats were nailed to the floor, and the police were on hand in force. Disorder soon subsided and the organization was completed. Sir Charles delivered a long and powerful speech. He protested against the effort to suppress a free discussion of monarchical principles. He had attacked monarchy because of the evils it engendered. Never did the rich less understand the wants of the poor, and should they continue to ignore them grave results would follow. He wanted his opponents to beware, or they might push the people too far.

Alluding to the relations of England and the United States, he attributed the existing state of ill feeling to the ignorance which prevailed in aristocratic circles of American institutions. At the beginning and close of his address the orator was cheered.

Sir Henry Hoare, colleague of Sir Charles in Parliament, spoke in defence of the Crown. He was frequently interrupted by the audience, but no violence was attempted either by the Liberals or Conservatives.

The Universal Exhibition at Vienna, in 1873, is exciting much attention in Europe just now. Foreign nations have signified their intention to participate in much greater degree than was at first expected, and the work of preparing the grounds has already begun. The building and grounds will cover a large number of acres, and the site selected, the well known Prater, is sufficient guaranty of their beauty. The Rondo, one of the principal attractions of the exhibition, will occupy the centre of the exhibition building, and will be divided by a large central hall, which will have several outlets into twenty small pavilions. At both ends of the building are to be four large pavilions, connected by side avenues. Elegantly laid out gardens are interspersed between the pavilions, and there the choicest horticultural productions will be exhibited. In the rear of the exhibition building proper, an immense machine hall will be built, and the three great railways centering in Vienna will erect a central station close to it. Very extensive grounds are to be laid out after various models in front of the Palace, and elaborate restaurants and cafes, as at the Paris exhibition, will surround it. There is to be an attendance of military bands from everywhere, as at Gilmore's Jubilee. Vienna expects such a rush of strangers and increase of traffic in consequence of this exhibition that the municipality is already taking extraordinary measures for improvement. The building of no less than five new bridges, and the opening of several new streets, is earnestly recommended.

The exact dimensions of the principal building will be 2715 feet in length and 615 in width, and one main gallery will intersect the whole edifice. The Rotunda in the centre will be constructed of iron, after designs by Mr. Scott-Russell, the eminent civil engineer. The number of square yards within the exhibition building will amount to 309,000. Twenty of the leading engineering firms of Austria are zealously engaged upon the structure, the central dome of which alone will weigh three thousand tons. The Archduke Rainer is the President of the Imperial Commission, which includes members of all the learned societies, and represents every branch of art, science, industry, trade and commerce. There will be many novelties in construction, the most significant among which to Americans will be the model of a new emigrant ship, which it is claimed is vastly superior to anything now used for stocking America.

DOMESTIC.

An interesting explanation of the condition of the snow-blocked Transcontinental Railroad, and the causes which have led to this disaster, is given by the officers of the Union Pacific Railroad. As heretofore stated in the Tribune, the blockade is near the divide, or highest point, of the continent, and is not spread over any very extensive area. These snow fences, provided for these emergencies, have been found inadequate this winter, because the drifts came from a direction contrary to that which all precedent indicated. The fences to be sure, are, for the most part, movable, but are too heavy to be carried across the tracks, and so are useless. The Railroad Company must be credited with the use of all possible means and efforts, if the statement of the officers is to be received as evidence. One would suppose that seven snow trains, carrying and lodging seventy-five laborers each, might accomplish something in the way of keeping the road open. But even this has been insufficient, and seven westward-bound trains are snowed up at different points along the road, and two eastward-bound trains are beyond and westward of the point of embargo. Beside these, one thousand freight cars, bound both ways, are detained at various places along the line. This state of things is certainly discouraging; but, after all, the only thing that can be said is that the railroad people are themselves most interested in breaking the blockake; that they are using all the machinery available for accomplishing that end; that this is an unusual season, and that the sun must melt the snows some of these days, if the superhuman efforts of the railway forces do not sooner pierce them.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Geneva Arbiters.—As all are interested to know the names of the men who compose the Board of Arbitration on the Alabama Claims, upon the harmony of whose deliberations so much depends, we reproduce them. They are as follows:—

"On the part of the United States, Charles Francis Adams; of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Sir Alexander Cockburn, baronet, Lord Chief Justice of England; of Italy, his Excellency Senator Count Sclopis; of Switzerland, Mr. Jacob Stampfil; of Brazil, Baron d'Itajuba. Agent on the part of the United States, J. C. Bancroft Davis; of Great Britain, Right Hon. Lord Tenterden; consul for the United States, Caleb Cushing, William M. Evarts, and Morrison R. Waite; consul for Great Britain, Sir Roundell Palmer; solicitor for the United States, Charles C. Beaman, Jr.—The Church.

Florida Ku-Klux.—The report of a special committee to the Assembly now in session at Tallahassee states that there have been in the county of Jackson, during the last three years, one hundred and eighty-three murders, fifteen of which were women and children, and almost the entire number colored people. The entire population of Jackson county being less than ten thousand, it appears that the proportion of murders for the three years is about one to every fifty of the population; a very startling fact.

The Japanese.—In all that relates to the peaceful advancement of the interests of their country, the Japanese now look almost exclusively to America for assistance. For enlightenment in the various branches of the science of war, they employ French and German teachers; but in their schools, American instructors preponderate.

THE BLOCKADE CONTINUES.

Salt Lake, Feb. 17. The trains from the East, so long blockaded at Laramie Plains, arrived at Ogden to-day, and this afternoon the regular and special trains on the Utah Central brought passengers and mails, seemingly without end.

The experiences of travelers differ; but most of them denounce the management of the road without stint, saying that there was no excuse for such long delay and so many hardships, and that with reasonable energy and determination on the part of officials who understood their business, the blockade would have been raised or passed two weeks ago. Numbers threatened suits against the Company for damages. Several arrived here to-day, among them some ladies utterly worn out, prostrated and sick.

Gen. Ord has just arrived here with advices that trains are again snow-bound between Medicine Bow and Rawlins and Lookout.

There is no hope of East bound trains getting through at present. Trains passing through Evanstown to-night westward, just escaped the new blockade.

Feb. 18. The Convention to frame a State Constitution meets to-morrow.

Passengers by the Union Pacific give a thrilling narrative of much suffering, mainly from the want of food.

The blockade is now more rigorous than ever, and not over two hundred men to fight it.

THE SUFFERINGS AT THE FAR WEST.

Chicago, Feb. 17. A Sioux City dispatch says that a letter received from Col. N. S. Porter, an old and respected citizen of Ponca, Dixon county, Nebraska, says ten men, in addition to the two reported last night, were frozen to death or missing in Dixon county and in Winnebago, Indian Territory. The bodies of some of them have not been recovered, but the missing men have undoubtedly all perished.

The people living near the head of Logan and South Creeks obtain firewood of the Winnebago Agency, and on Monday morning, the weather being very pleasant, a party were engaged in cutting a supply to last the balance of the winter when the storm suddenly came upon them. Seven are dead or missing.

A man named Austin, his son and a boy named Collins were overtaken by the storm near Ponca. All three were frozen to death. Several other deaths have been reported, but no particulars have been obtained.

The suddenness of the storm is unparalleled in this country, and was more severe by the reason of the snow being damp when the storm commenced, and afterward freezing.

Several men who were out in the storm say the snow and ice was positively six inches in thickness all over their heads, and it was with difficulty they could keep an opening through which to breath.

The loss of stock in this part of the State is very heavy, and will probably reach several hundred head. It is feared that the worst is not yet known and that more deaths have occurred.

In Brief.

—— Dispatches from Teheran state that the famine in Persia continues with unabated fury. ——A schism has broken out among the clergy of Paris on account of the extreme ultramontanism of the new Archbishop.——The New Testament revisers have progressed as far as the second chapter of Luke, and hope to complete their work in six years.——Bishop Littlejohn of Long Island stated in Episcopal convention some days since, that one church in his diocese paid more money for music last year than all the churches combined paid for missions.——The temperance movement is said to be gaining ground in Russia. A league has been formed among workmen in Moscow, the parties to which pledge themselves to abstain from alcoholic drinks.——The Presbytery of California recently passed resolutions recommending the congregations under its charge to disband their choirs and adopt congregational singing.——The police have information which leads to the belief that 60,000 rifles and thirty cannon, with large stores of ammunition, are concealed in Paris, and an active search is being made in all parts of the city.

RELIGIOUS INSANITY.

Dr. Harlow of the Marine Hospital, made one observation we were very glad to notice. He says: "We have noted with a good deal of care the form of disease termed religious insanity, or insanity caused by religious excitement." It is quite common for some persons, he says, "to seize upon all cases of insanity which exhibit in the least degree symptoms or manifestations of a religious character, and with an off-hand slur pronounce the disease caused by religion—victims of some religious excitement. After carefully watching and studying such cases, we are satisfied that religion has no more to do in producing insanity in those cases than gold and silver or the most precious stones have in developing the disease in those who fancy themselves immensely rich." He adds, "religion, pure, unadulterated Bible teaching, rightly applied, never injured the mind of any one ever so deeply interested." It is well to have this testimony to go on record. It is only a testimony in line with evident designs in the divine economy. We believe that religion has a most beneficial influence sanitarily, that the redemption the Lord Jesus Christ brought affects now even the body. It lengthens life directly by inducing more careful habits. It quiets and regulates the mind, and so indirectly controls the body. We know how it keeps up the will whose influence over the body is so marvelous, sometimes the only thing to keep one from sinking, like a plank under the chin of a man in the waters. Said one in the hospital to us, "I should become a confirmed lunatic were it not for the grace of God."—Boston Journal.

Notices.

A quarterly session of the Mass. Conference will be held in Brimfield, Mass., to commence Feb 20th, 1872, evening, and continue through the week and over the following Sunday. Meetings morning, afternoon, and evening. This is a place where they need help. They have a Chapel, and give us an urgent invitation to meet with them in conference. All that attend will be welcomed and cared for. We hope the brethren in all that region will make an effort with sacrifice to attend the meeting. Come, if possible, at the commencement, and stay through. Let the preachers who can be present, that more interest may be given to the meeting. C. H. Barnes, Sec.

There will be a protracted meeting held in Poultney, Vt., commencing Feb. 27th, 1872, and hold over the following Sunday. Bro. S. G. Mathewson will be present a part of the time, to assist in preaching the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for his divine blessing to attend the effort. A. W. Sibley.

The Third Quarterly Conference of Vermont will be held with the church at Rutland, to commence Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, and close Friday, March 1st. Our last conference was one of special interest. We hope this will be still better. One brother walked to attend that conference some sixty miles. That spirit of sacrifice will give us a great gathering at Rutland. Come one and all, far and near.

H. F. Carpenter, for the Committee.

A Protracted Meeting will commence at Manchester, N. H., Sunday, Feb. 18, and continue over the following Sabbath, Feb. 25th. Brethren and sisters from abroad are cordially invited to come and labor with us for the salvation of sinners. For the church, J. W. C. Pickering.

The next session of the Maine Ministerial Bible School, will be held at Kennebunkport, commencing Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, to continue as long as may be thought best.

The object for which this school is called is that ministers, by study and interchange of thought and discussion upon passages hard to be understood, may be better qualified to go forth as teachers in the great school of Christ. All clergymen are invited.

W. H. Mitchell, Teacher.
J. Albert Libby, Secretary.

The New York Adv. Chris. Conference will convene with the Church in Lockport, on Thursday evening, for its next quarterly session, March 14th, and continue through the week and over Sunday. All are invited. It is hoped there will be a large attendance, and a full representation by delegates, as there will need be some judicious planning for the next annual meeting in June. Shall there be a campmeeting as last year—where? Pray for this meeting, and come praying. Do not forget the collection.

D. Coggswell, Pres.
Wm. E. Brown, Sec.

Having been divinely blessed in preaching the blessed gospel of Christ in different places, I feel desirous of occupying my time more fully in this heavenly calling, and so would notify any who would be willing to assist me in appointments, to address me by letter, or otherwise. Wm. Hobbs, Cambridgeport, Mass.

The Third Quarterly Meeting for the E. Dist., Wis., will be held with the Church at Cassel's Prairie, Sauk County, Wisconsin, to commence Friday evening, March 22d, and hold over Lord's day. Let there be a general rally at the commencement of the meeting. Come from the closet, and bring a blessing with you.

Geo. Thompson.

A special conference will be held at West Poland, Me., Free Chapel, commencing Thursday evening, Feb. 22d, to continue over the following Lord's day. Bro. Albion Ross is engaged to be with us, and all the brethren and sisters in the vicinity are cordially invited.

J. Albert Libby.

The Second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held with the church at East Rochester, commencing Feb. 21st, at half past seven P. M., to hold over the following Sabbath. A general invitation is extended to all. Come, brethren, with the armor on.

T. W. Piper.
J. G. Smith.
C. H. Fletcher.

Eld. John Couch is pastor of the Second Advent Church in Chelsea, Mass., and all communications relative to supplying the desk must be directed to him hereafter.

NEW TRACTS.

Just published by the A. C. P. Society, Symbolization of the World's Eventful Crisis, by O. R. Fassett.

An excellent tract of 16 pages, showing that we are living amid the events occurring under the opening of the "sixth seal"; that "we are witnessing them, and are far down in their history, and close upon the end of this world and the solemn judgment scenes."

Price, single, 2 cts.; postage, 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred, by mail.

"THE END AT HAND."

A tract of 24 pages.

Showing that the "Gospel of the kingdom" has been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations"; and that the end of this dispensation is at hand, and the Lord about to appear in his glory. By Eld. John Couch. Just the thing to scatter by the thousands. Let it have a wide circulation. Price single, 3 cents; postage 2 cts.; 25 cts. per dozen; $2.00 per hundred by mail.

THE KING IN HIS BEAUTY.

Oh! to be over yonder,
In that land of wonder,
Where the angel voices mingle, and the angel harpers ring;
To be free from pain and sorrow,
And the anxious dread to-morrow,
To rest in light and sunshine in the presence of the King.

Oh! to be over yonder,
My yearning heart grows fonder
Of looking to the east, to see the day-star bring
Some tidings of the waking,
The cloudless, pure day breaking;
My heart is yearning—yearning for the coming of the King.

Oh! to be over yonder,
Alas! I sigh and wonder,
Why clings my poor weak heart to any earthly thing?
Each tie of earth must sever,
And pass away forever;
But there's no more separation in the presence of the King.

Oh! to be over yonder,
The longing groweth stronger.
When I see the wild doves cleave the air on rapid wing,
I long for their fleet pinions
To reach my Lord's dominions,
And rest my weary spirit in the presence of the King.

Oh, to be over yonder,
In that land of wonder,
Where life, and light, and sunshine beam fair on every thing:
Where the day-beam is unshaded,
As pure as He who made it—
The land of cloudless sunshine, where Jesus is the King.

Oh! when shall I be dwelling
Where the angel-voices, swelling
In triumphant hallelujahs, make the vaulted heavens ring.
Where the pearly gates are gleaming,
And the morning star is beaming;
Oh! when shall I be over yonder in the presence of the King?

Oh! when shall I be yonder?
The longing groweth stronger
To join in all the praises the redeemed ones do sing,
Within those heavenly places,
Where the angels veil their faces,
In awe and adoration, in the presence of the King.

Oh! soon, soon I'll be yonder,
All lonely as I wander,
Yearning for the welcome summer—longing for the birds' fleet wing.
The midnight may be dreary,
And the heart be worn and weary,
But there's no more shadow yonder in the presence of the King.

THE SUPREMACY OF THE POPE.

J. S. WHITE.

Bro. Cunningham says in the paper of Jan. 17th—"The period of the reign of Justinian, emperor of the East, is where all Catholic and Protestant writers of any note place the supremacy of the papacy."

This is a remarkable statement. If this be true, I have learned what I never before knew, and have greatly misunderstood some things I have read. I have not read many Catholic writers, so I am not prepared to say what all of them of note have said on this subject. I have seen some Protestant writings by notable men. Nearly every one of them of note has placed the supremacy of papacy, in its religious form, in the reign of Phocas, A. D. 606, or 607. Among these writers are Whelpley, in his "Compend of History." Putnam, in his "Hand-Book of the World's Progress." Dr. Scott in his "Commentary" places it with the rise of Mahometanism, which was from 606 to 612. The writers of the "Comprehensive Commentary" do the same.

Benson's Commentary, the Cottage Bible, and Newton, place the supremacy of papacy with the act of Phocas in 606 or 607. Buck does the same, by referring to Bowers on the primacy of popery. Also Faber, and Hayden's "Dictionary of Dates."

So far as I have seen, all those writers who looked to 1866 for the downfall of the papacy and the commencement of the Millennium, have marked 606 or 607 for the supremacy of papacy, in its religious form, and 754 in its civil form. Bowers in his "History of the Popes" has said much on this point. In 588 the Bishop of Constantinople received the title of Universal Bishop. Of this, Bowers says—"In the Bishop of Constantinople, the title of Universal Bishop is generally thought to have been no more than a badge of honor, or an honorary title, without any accession of power. And indeed it does not appear, as I observed above, that in virtue of that title he ever exercised or claimed any."

Gregory, who was made Bishop of Rome in 590, said in regard to this title—"That whoever should give it to, or approve it in, another, was a heretic; and that whoever should presume in the pride of his heart to take it to himself, was a follower of Satan, a rival of Satan in pride, and the forerunner of antichrist." This was also the statement of Pelagius, the last pope of Rome before Gregory.

In the face of this, in 607 Phocas, the emperor of Rome, gave to Boniface, the bishop of Rome, the title of universal bishop. Boniface was eager to receive and improve this title. Bowers says—

"Had Gregory been allowed to return from the dead, how great would have been his surprise, how great his indignation, to find the badge of pride thus become, so soon after his death, the peculiar badge of his see, and this mark of antichrist the peculiar mark of his successors! I say of his successors, for by them that badge of pride, that mark of antichrist, is borne to this day, in spite of all the names of reproach and ignominy with which it was branded by the most renowned and revered of all their predecessors."

He continues on the same page—"The imperial edict, therefore, if we may so call it an edict of a usurper and a tyrant, was not, as the popish writers pretend, a bare confirmation of the primacy of the see of Rome; but the grant of a new title which the pope immediately improved into a power answering that title. And thus was the power of the pope as universal bishop, as head of the church, or, in other words, the papal supremacy, first introduced. It owed its origin to the worst form of tyranny; and was in itself, if we stand to the judgment of Gregory the Great, anti-christian, heretical, blasphemous, diabolical."

Thus writes Bowers, as if neither he, nor any body else, ever thought, or could think, that the supremacy of papacy should be dated in the time of Justinian. Ever since 607 the popes have claimed and borne the title of universal bishop. This title, however, gave them no civil or temporal power. This latter power the popes did not receive till 754. In that year Pepin, king of France, conquered the Lombards in Italy, and gave the civil power of Italy into the hands of the pope. This power the popes have held down to 1848, excepting an interruption of about six years during the French Revolution.

Speaking of the spiritual and temporal power of the popes, Bowers says—"And now that we have seen the temporal power united in the popes to the spiritual, the crown to the miter, and the sword to the keys, I shall leave them for awhile, and close the present history with two short observations. 1. That as their spiritual power was, so was their temporal owing to an usurper; the one to Phocas, and the other to Pepin. 2. That as they most bitterly inveighed against the patriarchs of Constantinople as the forerunners of antichrist for assuming the title of universal bishop, and laid hold of the first opportunity that offered to assume that very title themselves; so did they inveigh against the Lombards as the most wicked of men, for usurping the dominions of their most religious sons, the emperors; and yet they themselves usurped the dominions of their most religious sons as soon as they had it in their power to usurp them."

Thus we see that Bowers makes the supremacy of the spiritual power of the popes identical with the year 607, and the temporal power with the year 754. Is Bowers a writer "of any note"?

The popes obtained universal temporal power in Europe in the eleventh century. This power they maintained down to the time of Martin Luther. In the great reform under Luther, about half of the kingdoms of Europe became Protestant, and have remained so to this time. There are a thousand times more reason for saying that Dan. 7: 26 applies to Luther's time, than for saying it applies to the French Revolution. "The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it unto the end." In Luther's time popery received its death-blow. The popes lost half of their temporal power, and consequently half of their power to persecute those not of their faith.

From Luther's time to the present, the power of the popes has been going down. The French Revolution threw the power of the popes back where it was when Pepin, king of France, gave them the temporal power of Italy. This power over Italy the popes held until the Revolution in Europe in 1848. From that time to 1870 the pope's temporal power was confined to Rome and its suburbs. He has now reached the end of his civil power. The pope still claims to be, and is, the universal bishop over those of his faith; and probably will remain so until the whole system of the papacy is destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

Note 1. I have quoted from Bowers, vol. 1, pp. 426–7; vol. 2, p. 108.

Note 2. I had supposed, until I saw the statement at the head of this article, that the Catholic writers generally claimed the supremacy of their church from St. Peter.

Note 3. Bowers had been a Catholic before he wrote his "History of the Popes." Probably no man has ever lived who has been better prepared to give a correct history of the papacy. It will be seen that Bowers says the papal supremacy was first introduced by the act of Phocas in the year 607. J. S. W.

MUZZLING THE OXEN.

Will it be deemed out of place for a preacher of the gospel to re-enforce a truth the apostle Paul presented very plainly? "Why, no," answer all; "we wish to have it repeated." Is it right for ministers to declare the whole counsel of God? "Certainly it is," is answered again, "the whole counsel must be made plain, so the people may understand fully their various duties." Will it be right for the preacher to lay down clearly what are the duties of christians toward their enemies? "It will." Shall he make known their duties toward one another? "Of course." May the people also be properly instructed in regard to a minister's duties, so they may know whether he be faithful or not? "Of course we must," say the people.

If, then, instruction should be given concerning these various duties, will it not be right, yea, will it not be duty for him to plainly point out what is right in another particular, namely, the duty of the church towards the minister? If it be his duty to declare the whole counsel of God, who will charge him with immodesty if he point out wherein the people fail in their duty toward himself? Before preferring such a charge against any of us modern preachers, let those who wish to first hurl it against Paul, who said, "The Lord hath ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel"; who said, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" 1 Cor. 9: 14, 11.

In this particular many of our churches come short; many are sadly negligent in performing their duties toward the preacher; many are guilty of what the law of God forbids, namely, muzzling the mouth of the ox while treading out the corn; and it is high time the Advent people should have this wrong plainly pointed out to them.

It has been and still is a wonder to many how the Advent preachers manage to live, when they receive so little in return for their services. And when their homes are visited, at least some of them, and the worn, threadbare garments seen, and the lack of comforts and oftentimes many necessaries of life is seen, the question is answered: we do see how they live; we see they live in straitened circumstances, and it is a reproach to those churches who receive the benefit of their labors that this state of things exists.

The preachers do not complain because they have trials; they expect them. They do not murmur because they have cares and anxieties; they know who can help them bear up under them. They do not get discouraged because in the world they have tribulation; they know where "peace" is to be obtained. But they do enter a protest against the inequality existing between the churches and themselves in the matter of self-denial. We "mean not that other men be eased and ye burdened; but by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance may be a supply for your want; that there may be an equality." 2 Cor. 8: 13, 14.

At present there is not an equality; churches that are able to minister abundantly to the preacher's wants are oftentimes content to let him leave them with the small sum of ten or twelve dollars, and car-fare to be deducted from this besides. How can you enjoy the comforts of your own cheerful fireside, when you know the preacher who has spent Sunday with you is returning to his home sad in heart to know he is unable to supply many a want of those whom he loves? How can you enjoy your abundance, when the minister of God is in need? How can you expect men to give up their daily avocations and devote their time to the ministry, except they be sustained by those to whom they minister?

The influence of many of our preachers is crippled, because their time has to be so much divided between preaching and working for the support of their families. "Who," said Paul, "goeth a warfare any time at his own charges?" 1 Cor. 9: 7. Is it not right that the soldier, who has given himself to the defense of his country, be sustained and supported by that country? And is it not equally just that he who labors faithfully for the support and upbuilding of a church or churches be adequately sustained by such churches? It certainly is.

Our common Master does not intend his ambassadors shall be scantily supported while the flock at large have abundance; and this almost universal fault among the churches needs to be pointed out plainly.

Let none think this is the cry of selfishness, for it is not. Let none say, "He preaches for money," for if money be what Advent preachers are after, they make a decided mistake in trying to get it by public speaking. If there be any of them possessing so little ability that they cannot better themselves in this respect in some mercantile pursuit, I fear they are hardly fit to be preachers; so again I say, let not this appeal be imputed to selfishness; let it be attributed rather to a sense of justice.

Remember, then, brethren, that the rent of the house the preacher lives in costs money, as yours do; that his family need comfortable clothing and wholesome food, even as those of your own; and remember further that if ten or twelve dollars per week be insufficient to suitably provide for the wants of your households, it is even so insufficient to provide for his. REPORT.

R. I. AND EAST CONN. CONFERENCE.

The annual session of this Conference was holden at Rockland, R. I., commencing Jan. 3d, 1872. Preaching brethren present—J. J. Northrup, A. Bellows, J.W. Thomas, B. Roberts, J. Hill, J. S. Collins, and D. V. Corey. All gave interesting and encouraging reports. Sr. E. Crumb was present and gave a report of her labors. Only a small number of churches was represented. No. Foster church by letter reports—In a low condition, though some are living branches of the true Vine, bringing forth good fruit. Preaching nearly every Sunday. No. Scituate, R. I., by delegate—In nearly the same condition as last reported. Appointments for preaching every Sunday. Wyoming, R. I.—While some are trying to obtain "that rest," others are indifferent and careless. One member has been added since last conference. Preaching regularly once a month, and two prayer-meetings a week. Putnam, Ct., by letter—Preaching every Sunday with but few exceptions. Prayer-meetings twice a week. The attendance is small, yet the Lord is with us.

BUSINESS.

Voted, that the preachers' reports shall not be published with this report. No officers being present, Bro. J. J. Northrup was appointed Chairman, N. A. Angell Clerk, both pro tem. Bro. A. Durfee sent a written request that he should be Chairman no longer. Voted, that his resignation be received. Voted, that Bro. A. Durfee be Chairman the coming year. Voted, that N. A. Angell be Clerk and Treasurer. Voted, that the traveling expenses of the officers of the conference be paid from the conference treasury. A motion to revise the Constitution of this conference was lost. Voted, that a special agent be appointed to visit all the churches within the conference limits, and procure pledges for funds, for the further advancement of God's cause within the limits of said conference, said funds to be at the disposal of the conference for this purpose. Voted, that Bro. A. Bellows be the agent to act according to previous vote. Voted, that Bro. A. Bellows be paid twenty-five dollars per month, besides traveling expenses, for acting agent as above voted. Voted, that an invitation be extended to churches and others to become members of this conference. Voted, that the Escoheag church become a member of this conference. Voted, that we extend to the Escoheag church the right hand of fellowship. Voted, that Bro. N. A. Angell be a committee to find report of the session of this conference held at Putnam, Ct., July, 1871. Voted, to adjourn to meet at Wyoming, R. I., on the first Wednesday in April, at two o'clock P. M.

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 7.

E. S. WILLARD.

Change of Residence Indicated—Change of Pastors—Slavery—An Incident—A Question—New Surrender—Removal to Indiana.

The church at Covington was now in a flourishing condition. A commodious house of worship was nearly completed—a large Sunday school and social meetings—a material meeting and a mite society for missions—also a monthly concert of prayer—were all in successful operation; hence we felt that we might be spared; and during the winter previous to the expiration of our five years' sojourn in this place, there were evident tokens that the cloud was rising from our tabernacle, indicating to us that we should depart.

The green eye of Slavery had been watching our course, which was like our Master's, without respect of persons, and his lines began to tighten over us with threats of violence. The liberal soul of our pastor was removed from us by loss of voice and health, and his place was supplied by a minister from South Carolina, who had the reputation of freedom from slave traffic, but whose spirit coalesced with the monster, as will be seen from the following incident.

To our great surprise and grief, on his coming in one evening and finding me about my domestic cares he addressed me as follows:—

"Sister Willard, why do you not buy you a good black girl, and let her do all these things for you?"

With great earnestness, I replied—"Never, never! Dr. Roberts. My parents raised me clear from that sin, and now my motto is—'Touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing.'"

"Then," continued he, "if you do not wish to buy, just go back in the country a little way and hire one."

"Not so," said I; "whoever does my work shall have the reward, and not a rapacious master." He spent the evening in apologizing for the system.

We now saw that the enemy had ascended our very pulpit, and we felt that it was high time for us to leave and go where the air and soil are free. Soon after this, during a little prayer meeting at our house, I was deeply pondering the state of things about us and our responsibilities, and fearing we might be left to have our good things in this life, when suddenly a desire to yield myself renewedly to God, to go where and to do as he willed, thrilled me; and the question immediately rose in my mind—"Will you go West?" I answered, "Yes, Lord, to the ends of the earth, only go thou with me!" From that moment the conviction fastened upon me that we should go West, and most earnestly did I pray to be guided of the Lord.

My husband had become interested in the purchase of wild lands in the West, and the site of an Indian village in Kosciusko county, Northern Indiana, was of such paramount interest that he finally, with two partners, purchased it. In consideration of its location and beauty, it was deemed worthy of being laid out as a town; which was done, and, at husband's suggestion, named Oswego. A sufficient number of lots was soon purchased and built upon to give the place quite a village-like appearance.

It now became necessary for my husband to spend several weeks each year in looking after his business in Oswego, but we had never contemplated making a home in this unsettled region until his return shortly after the evening prayer meeting alluded to. He then intimated the probable necessity of our removal to Oswego for a term of three years. Greatly to his surprise a dear young sister in Christ, making her home with us, smilingly replied for me—

"She is all ready to go!"

He then opened his heart and conversed freely upon the state of things there, remarking that if we wished to be missionaries there was a wide field. But the removal would be attended with sacrifice; we had much to leave; a new and comfortable home with delightful grounds about us, and that which was far dearer to us, so many loving hearts in the Lord to which we clung and my own beloved father and only sister still lived; but all this weighed nothing in the balance with Jesus and duty to him in the other scale. Most gladly did I leave all and face the dangers that were before us in a long and perilous journey over the worst of roads, with an infant son in my arms, and another a few years old by my side; my heart being cheered by such words as these:—"And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, ... or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life." Matt. 19: 29. I felt, by the grace of God, I had done this, and was thankful that I had them to leave for Him who had left all for me. And it was verified to us on all our journey that the path of obedience is the path of safety.

In the place, as a whole, I was happily disappointed; there was an air of neatness and comfort that I had not anticipated. And the cordiality incident to new countries was new to me and particularly cheering.

The first monthly meeting after our arrival was an anomaly to me. The people began to come Saturday night. Sr. French, the wife of the third partner in the firm, had prepared for them and took it all as a matter of course. On Lord's day they came in wagon-loads a distance of ten and twelve miles; some arriving before the service, came direct to Bro. French's, and at the close of the meeting instead of retiring to their homes in quiet, as we had been accustomed, our houses were filled with friends expecting entertainment. I was overwhelmed at the prospect! No time to digest any thing I had heard; all talk and work. I cannot describe my feelings. I was wholly unprepared for it.

While in this perplexity I bethought me to steal away and tell Jesus. This I did, and he soothed me as only he can, and gave me this cordial—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Ah! said I, I am entertaining Jesus' brethren, and this he accepts as done to himself. This made all right, and from this moment every thing went easy, and I could trust Jesus for my apparent spiritual loss.

No time was lost in organizing a Sunday School of which husband was chosen superintendent. A few days after our arrival there was a social gathering of several of the sisters for mutual acquaintance, and it was proposed to close the interview with prayer. To this all assented, each one taking part in the supplications. Now I felt at home; and then and there, in the fear of God and looking to him for aid and blessing, we appointed a weekly prayer meeting, which for years was well attended and was used of God as a nursery for the church.

The blessing of God was with his children and we had the happiness of seeing one after another in our prayer meetings, the Sunday school and covenant meetings, confess their sins and seek an interest in the atoning blood of Jesus. Among the many cases of interest in our female prayer meeting one I will specify.

A broken-hearted mother, who had been bereaved of a lovely child on whom she had set her heart, came to the meeting to find, if possible, something of more substantial joy on which to rest her hopes than earth affords. We led her to Jesus whom we had proved able to heal the broken-hearted. After a severe struggle she was enabled to yield herself up to God, and found peace in believing in Jesus, and came out boldly on the Lord's side, by confessing him in baptism, and joining herself to his people. She then asked that meetings be held in her neighborhood, two miles from Oswego. This was granted, and it pleased God to give efficacy to the simple means used in his name, and a work of grace broke out there in which thirty-eight souls were added to the church, and among them the husband of this sister.

But her work was soon done. In a little from this she sickened and died, but it was in the triumphs of faith. Her death was the death of the righteous, and her last end was like his. Praise God.

A REPORT.

Through the mercies of God, I am permitted to write a few lines to the readers of the World's Crisis, saying to them that the Lord has been blessing the people in several places where I have been laboring; and as I have been requested to give a report of some of these meetings, I will commence with my report, Dec. 1st, 1871.

Caldwell. The church in this town was organized about three years ago by myself. They numbered at first but thirteen. I preached to them a portion of the time for a year and a half. For a year and a half they were without preaching, but kept up their meetings in the midst of opposition, and God has blessed them. I spent two weeks with them in December, during which time a number were converted to God, and seven put on Christ by immersion.

Low Hampton. Here I have labored during the summer once in four weeks with but little effect, as it appears to me; yet the judgment will tell. The reason is obvious, when we take into consideration the fact that there is no regular prayer-meeting sustained by the church. Bro. A. W. Sibley and myself held a series of meetings there in December, and some manifested a desire to be the Lord's. I hope God will revive his work in Low Hampton, and that the fire which was kindled by our dear Father Miller (father in the gospel) in years that are past may never be suffered to go out.

Hartford, Log Village. Here I spent two weeks. God blessed, the truth took effect. A number manifested a desire to be christians. Some came back to Father's house; some were converted, two were baptized. Bro. A. P. Bump lives here, who afforded me good help during the meetings. Bro. Bump came into the truth while I was preaching in Hebron, N. Y. It happened to be his lot while teaching school in that place to board at my house, and also to listen to my preaching, as there was no other church near by, especially of his order, as he was a Baptist of the strictest kind; and probably had there been a Baptist church near he would not have seen the light which he now sees and rejoices in so much from day to day. But God hedged him in, and the result is he has another true man who will preach God's truth, whether men will hear or forbear.

South Bombay. Here is a great field for labor. Bro. Charles Crawford resides here, and is trying to do what he can for the Lord. I preached ten discourses in his neighborhood. Some were converted. A number manifested a desire to be the Lord's. With a little effort there can be a society raised up here. From here in company with Bro. Crawford we went to Massena. Here we found some of the best brethren and sisters we have ever met with. We had no idea that we should meet with such a people north of the Adirondack mountains and south of Canada. We found them without a shepherd, and on account of trials, and for want of understanding among themselves, they were standing still, and had been for over two years. My visit among them convinced me that they had not given up their hope, though they had become very hungry to hear the truth preached. I spent some eleven days with them, when it was plain to be seen that God was at work. Old difficulties were settled up, confessions made where confessions were due, and truly it was good to see brethren and sisters dwell together in love as they were wont to do in former years. It seemed to be the desire of all to get nearer the Lord. Some started for the first time to serve God. The last Sabbath we were with them about forty came around the table of the Lord and partook of the bread and wine. It was good to be there. We left them with a good state of feeling. I think they are a united people. I mention this, as many are acquainted with the trials of this dear people. But now they see that it is for their good that God has suffered them to be tried. They mean to go on as a united band till Jesus comes. May God bless them and build them up in their most holy faith.

From here we returned to Hartford, Log Village, where we baptized one, and have just closed the meeting there for the present. The people are all alive to hear more. The harvest is truly great. C. PIKE.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

JOHN WESLEY.

EXAMINATION.

Q. How shall we treat those who think they have attained perfect love?

A. Examine them candidly, and exhort them to pray fervently that God would show them all that is in their hearts. The most earnest exhortations to abound in every grace, and the strongest cautions to avoid all evil, are given throughout the New Testament to those who are in the highest state of grace. But this should be done with the utmost tenderness, and without any harshness, sternness, or sourness. We should carefully avoid the very appearance of anger, unkindness, or contempt. Leave it to Satan thus to tempt, and to his children to cry out, Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we may know his meekness and prove his patience. If they are faithful to the grace given, they are in no danger of perishing by mistake; no, not if they remain in that mistake till their spirit is returning to God.

Q. But what hurt can it do to deal harshly with them?

A. Either they are mistaken or they are not. If they are, it may destroy their souls. This is nothing impossible, no, nor improbable. It may so curage or discourage them that they will sink and rise no more. If they are not mistaken, it may grieve those whom God has not grieved, and do much hurt unto our own souls. For undoubtedly he that toucheth them toucheth, as it were, the apple of God's eye. If they are indeed full of his Spirit, to behave unkindly or contemptuously to them is doing no little despite to the Spirit of grace. Hereby, likewise, we feed and increase in ourselves evil surmising and many wrong tempers. To instance only one: What self-sufficiency is this to set ourselves up for inquisitors-general or peremptory judges in these deep things of God? Are we qualified for the office? Can we pronounce in all cases how far infirmity reaches? What may and what may not be resolved into it? What may, in all circumstances, and what may not consist with perfect love? Can we precisely determine how it will influence the look, the gesture, the tone of voice? If we can, doubtless we are the men, and wisdom shall die with us.

Q. But if they are displeased at our not believing them, is not this a full proof against them?

A. According as that displeasure is: if they are angry, it is a proof against them; if they are grieved, it is not. They ought to be grieved if we disbelieve a real work of God, and thereby deprive ourselves of the advantage we might have received from it. And we may easily mistake this grief for anger, as the outward expressions of both are much alike.

Q. But is it not well to find out those who fancy they have attained when they have not?

A. It is well to do it by mild, loving examination. But it is not well to triumph even over these. It is extremely wrong, if we find such an instance, to rejoice as if we had found great spoils.

Ought we not rather to grieve, to be deeply concerned, to let our eyes run down with tears? Here is one who seemed to be a living proof of God's power to save to the uttermost; but, alas! it is not as we hoped! He is "weighed in the balance and found wanting!" And is this matter of joy? Ought we not to rejoice a thousand times more if we can find nothing but pure love?

"But he is deceived." What then? It is a harmless mistake while he feels nothing but love in his heart. It is a mistake which generally argues great grace, a high degree both of holiness and happiness. This should be a matter of real joy to all that are simple of heart, not the mistake itself, but the height of grace which for a time occasions it. I rejoice that this soul is always happy in Christ, always full of prayer and thanksgiving. I rejoice that he feels no unholy temper, but the pure love of God continually. And I will rejoice if sin is suspended till it is totally destroyed.

Q. Is there no danger then in a man's being thus deceived?

A. Not at the time that he feels no sin. There was danger before, and there will be again when he comes into fresh trials. But so long as he feels nothing but love animating all his thoughts, and words, and actions, he is in no danger; he is not only happy, but safe "under the shadow of the Almighty." And for God's sake let him continue in that love as long as he can; meantime you may do well to warn him of the danger that will be if his love grow cold and sin revive, even the danger of casting away hope, and supposing that because he hath not attained yet, therefore he never shall.

Q. But what if none hath attained it yet?—What if all who think so are deceived?

A. Convince me of this, and I will preach it no more. But understand me right. I do not build any doctrine on this or that person. This or any other man may be deceived, and I am not moved. But if there be none made perfect in love yet, God has not sent me to preach christian perfection.

Put a parallel case. For many years I have preached—"There is a peace of God which passeth all understanding." Convince me that this word has fallen to the ground; that in all these years none have attained this peace; that there is no living witness of it at this day, and I will preach it no more.

"O but several persons have died in that peace." Perhaps so; but I want living witnesses. I cannot indeed be infallibly certain that this or that person is a witness. But if I were certain that there is none such, I should have done with this doctrine.

"You misunderstand me. I believe some who died in this love enjoyed it long before their death. But I was not certain that their former testimony was true, till some hours before they died."

You had not an infallible certainty then. And a reasonable certainty you might have had before; such a certainty as might have quickened and comforted your own soul, and answered all other christian purposes. Such a certainty as this any candid person may have, suppose there be any living witness, by talking one hour with that person in the love and fear of God.

Q. But what does it signify, whether any have attained it or not, seeing so many scriptures witness for it?

A. If I were convinced that none in England had attained what has been so clearly and strongly preached by such a number of preachers, in so many places, and for so long a time, I should be clearly convinced that we had all mistaken the meaning of those scriptures. And therefore for the time to come, I too should teach that "sin will remain till death."

I will here beg leave to add a few questions written by a plain man on this important subject.

QUERIES.

"1. Has not there been a larger measure of the Holy Spirit given under the Gospel than under the Jewish dispensation? If not, in what sense was 'the Spirit not given' before Christ was glorified? John 7: 39.

2. Was that 'glory which followed the sufferings of Christ,' 1 Pet. 1: 11, an external glory, or an internal, viz., the glory of holiness?

3. Has God anywhere in Scripture commanded us more than he has promised to us?

4. Are the promises of God respecting holiness to be fulfilled in this life, or only in the next?

5. Is a Christian under any other laws than those which God promises to write in our heart? Jer. 31: 31, etc., Heb. 3: 10.

6. In what sense is 'the righteousness of the law fulfilled in those who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit?' Rom. 8: 4.

7. Is it impossible for any one in this life to love God with all his heart, and mind, and soul and strength? And is the Christian under any law which is not fulfilled in this love? . . .

8. Did not St. Paul pray according to the will of God, when he prayed that the Thessalonians might be 'sanctified wholly and preserved, (in this world, not the next, unless he was praying for the dead) 'blameless in body, soul, and spirit, unto the coming of Jesus Christ?'

9. Do you sincerely desire to be freed from indwelling sin in this life?

10. If you do, did not God give you that desire?

11. If so, did he not give it you to mock you, since it is impossible it should ever be fulfilled?

12. If you have not sincerity enough even to desire it, are you not disputing about matters too high for you?

13. Do you ever pray God to cleanse the thoughts of your heart, that you may perfectly love him?

14. If you neither desire what you ask, nor believe it attainable, pray you not as a fool prayeth?

God help thee to consider these questions calmly and impartially!"—Plain Account.

GOD AS SEEN BY MEN.—I believe that we need more or less to materialize, before we can get a familiar and intimate feeling of God's presence. I think I shall make myself better understood if I relate an early experience of mine.

I was about four years old when my second mother came into the family. I was put to bed in a "trundle-bed," as they then called it, up-stairs. Charles and Harriet and I all slept in the same room. We were expecting that father would come home with our "new mother," that night. Somebody had told us that we were going to have a new mother. I had rather an indistinct idea of how a new mother looked—or any mother; for I was only three years old when my own mother died, and since then I had been under the care of Aunt Esther; but I had a feeling that it was going to be something very good. Every day we inquired when she was coming. Finally, on a given day, when we were put to bed, we were told that very likely when we waked up in the morning we should find mother there. I remember it as well as though it had been but yesterday. Just as we had all got into our trundle-beds up-stairs, and had got through our frolics, and had settled down, and were about falling asleep, we heard a racket down-stairs; and every mother's son and daughter of us began to halloo: "Mother! mother! MOTHER!" And presently we heard a rustling on the stairs, and in the twilight we saw a dim shadow pass into the room, and somebody leaned over the bed and kissed me, and kissed Charles, and said: "Be good children, and I will see you more tomorrow." I remember very well how happy I was. I felt that I had a mother. I felt her kiss, and I heard her voice. I could not distinguish her features, but I knew that she was my mother. That word, mother, had begun to contain a great deal in my estimation.

It seems to me it is very much in that way that God comes to human souls—as a shadow, so to speak; without any great definiteness, and yet, with an attitude, and a love-producing action; without any clear, distinct, reportable sensations, but producing some great joy, conferring some great pleasure, as though some great blessing had come to us.

Was not my mother's presence real to us when, in the twilight of the evening, she for a moment hovered over us, and kissed us "How do you do?" and "Good-by?" And is it not a reality when the greater Mother and Father does the same to the souls of men in their twilight?—Christian Union.

THE pioneer Methodist, Peter Cartwright, uttered many odd and witty sayings. He was often much annoyed at one sister, more noisy than pious, who would go off on a high key at every opportunity. At an animated class-meeting one day, she broke out with, "If I had one more feather in the wing of my faith, I could fly away and be with the Savior." "Stick in the feather, O Lord, and let her go," fervently responded Bro. Cartwright.

— I never yet heard man or woman much abused, that I was not inclined to think the better of them; and to transfer any suspicion or dislike in pointing out the defects of a fellow creature.—Jane Porter.

— Who is wise? he that learns from every one. Who is powerful? he that governs his passions. Who is rich? he that is content.

"This is for your Health."

WHAT IS IN THE BEDROOM?

If two persons are to occupy a bed-room during the night, let them step on to a weighing scale as they retire, and then again in the morning, and they will find their actual weight is at least a pound less in the morning. Frequently there will be a loss of two or more pounds, and the average loss throughout the year will be a pound of matter, which has gone off from their bodies, partly from the lungs and partly through the pores of the skin. The escaped matter is carbonic acid and decayed animal matter or poisonous exhalation. This is diffused through the air in part, and part absorbed by the bedclothes. If a single ounce of wood or cotton be burned in a room, it will so completely saturate the air with smoke that one can hardly breathe, though there can only be one ounce of foreign matter in the air.

If an ounce of cotton be burned every half hour during the night, the air will be kept continually saturated with smoke, unless there be an open window or door for it to escape. Now the sixteen ounces of smoke thus formed are far less poisonous than the sixteen of exhalations from the lungs and bodies of two persons who have lost a pound in weight during the eight hours of sleeping; for while the dry smoke is mainly taken into the lungs, the damp odors from the body are absorbed both into the lungs and into the pores of the whole body. Need more be said to show the importance of having bed-rooms well ventilated, and of thoroughly airing the sheets, coverlets, and mattresses, in the morning, before packing them up in the form of a neatly-made bed?

SLEEP.—It is impossible to lay down rules regulating the amount of sleep necessary for each individual; some persons need much more than others. The amount necessary depends much upon the age, health, temperament, and climate. We propose to remain on the safe side; and this side is clearly pointed out to us by the dictates of common sense.

We propose to lay down this one simple rule: Sleep while it is dark, whether that be long or short. This is the rule that nature teaches us, and her teaching is always correct. As soon as it is dark, labor and study should be laid aside; the mind and muscles should be gradually relaxed by light exercise and pleasant and cheerful conversation, until twilight has deepened into darkness, and then, when the system has been tempered down evenly, and the mind is at perfect rest, go to sleep, and you will not wake until the sky-lark calls you in the morning, when the first mellow light of approaching day shoots up in the east; then it is time to rise, and not sooner. If this rule be adhered to, every morning will find you fresh and vigorous—prepared to live and enjoy life; and every returning night will find you ready to relish sound, sweet, refreshing sleep.—Prof. Schwin.

DOTTIE'S TEMPERANCE SERMON.

Well, well! what did ail Dottie? She had positively refused to kiss her father for a whole week. He went to his work very early in the morning, long before her blue eyes were open, and did not come home till dark. Dottie always watched for him, and ran to meet him, and when he came in would sit on his knee; but when he tried to kiss her, she would shake her head so emphatically as to set the sunny curls dancing about her eyes, and then tuck her rosy face down on his shoulder.

At last he grew almost angry, and one evening he put her down, saying sternly, "I won't have any little girl that does not love me."

Dottie went to her mother with a grieved look, and tears stealing into her eyes:

"I do love my papa, ever so much—five bushels!" And by her childish mode of measuring affection, this seemed immense.

"Then why did you treat him so?" asked her mother. "He does not see his little daughter all day; and when he comes home so tired she refuses to kiss him. Why is it?"

"Because, because—" and here Dottie stopped.

"Speak out, darling, don't be afraid; or suppose you whisper it to me; now—" And she bent down her head.

Dottie put both chubby arms around her mother's neck, and putting her rosebud of a mouth close to her mother's ear, and in what she supposed was a whisper, said:

"He drink some medicine or somethin' in the even' time before he gets home; and it must be dreadsul stuff, for it makes me feel sickish to smell it when he puts his face close to mine—and that's all; and I do love papa." And she sobbed as if her loving little heart would break.

As the wife's glance met that of her husband, his face crimsoned with a flash of shame. The secret was out. For the week past he had been in the habit of stopping a few moments at the house of a friend, who had just returned from a voyage to Europe, and had a great many interesting things to relate. He always took a glass of something strong at night, and insisted that Dottie's father should drink with him; and that was how it happened. But he never touched a drop afterward; the pure caresses of his innocent child were of more value to him than even the good-will of his friend, and the little Dot never had cause to refuse him his evening kiss.

"Papa must be cured, I think," said she one day; "for he never drinks any more of that horrible medicine."

And he was truly cured.—Good Words.

SPECIAL CONFERENCE REPORT.

In accordance with the published invitation of the A. C. church of Worcester, Mass., a special conference was held in their chapel, beginning on Tuesday, Feb. 6th, and continuing over the following Sunday. The object of this meeting was to examine the evidences relating to the time of the Lord's return to earth, and from the large attendance from abroad, particularly of preachers, it was very evident there was a great interest felt in the subject. Besides Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Connecticut were represented.

First Day. The afternoon of Tuesday was spent in prayer and exhortation, and by the spirit manifested in this first meeting, it became evident that this special gathering of saints was to be of more than common interest. In the evening Bro. Simpson occupied the pulpit, and briefly dwelt upon the various chronological and prophetic periods which would be likely to come before the meeting for discussion. The effort seemed designed, not so much to confirm any special theory, as it was to show the relation the periods had to the time of the Lord's coming, and also their relation to one another.

Second Day. On Wednesday morning, at ten o'clock, Dr. H. W. Buxton, in behalf of the Worcester brethren, formally welcomed those present, assuring them that their coming together as they had was an event that gave great pleasure to the church, and that their hearts and homes were open to welcome them. The conference was then formally opened by appointing C. F. Horn Chairman, and C. E. Barnes Secretary. The rule regulating the addresses was, that those desiring to address the meeting should hand their names to the Chairman, and speak in the order said names were presented, each address not to exceed an hour and a half. Bro. L. T. Cunningham was the first to take the floor, and occupied about forty minutes. The "points" in his speech were (1) that definite time regarding the Lord's second coming is in the Bible; namely, the several prophetic periods; and (2) that they are to be understood, inasmuch as all inspiration is profitable (2 Tim. 3 : 16), and these cannot be profitable except they be understood. (3) He argued that the taking away of the "daily," and the setting up of the "abomination" (Dan. 12 : 11), was fulfilled in the taking away of paganism, and establishment of the papacy; (4) that the 1290 days are to be reckoned from 508 A. D., when paganism was removed from Rome, and the 1260 days from 538 A. D., when the papacy was established, thus terminating both periods in 1798 A. D. (5) The 1335 days are to be reckoned from the establishment of papacy, and extend to 1873 A. D., at which time Christ will redeem his people.

After a short time spent in general comment on the foregoing, Bro. A. Simpson addressed the meeting. He did not differ materially from Bro. C., and spent thirty-five minutes in confirming him in his applications of the prophetic numbers. He advanced, in addition to Bro. C., the following: (1) "The holy city" (Rev. 11 : 2) is the church of God; (2) the "two witnesses" represent the Bible during the treading under foot of the holy city; (3) Rev. 13 : 10 was fulfilled when the pope was taken captive in 1798 A. D.; (4) Rev. 13 : 2 has its fulfillment as follows: the "power" was given to the pope in 533 by Justinian, but the "seat" not until 538. From this period the papacy was supreme just 1260 years. In proving the correctness of the foregoing positions, he read quite copiously from a number of historians, such as Gibbon, Allison, Thiers, King, Marsh, and others.

A rule controling those who wished to question the speakers was, that questions should be written and handed to the Chairman. In the P. M. Bro. C. answered a number, among which were the following: (1) What event marked the taking away of the "daily"? Ans. The conversion of the ten kings of divided Rome to Christianity. (2) What constitutes the "little horn" of Dan. 8? Ans. It refers to Rome. The "little horn" is synonymous with the fourth beast of Dan. 7.

Bro. Henry Pratt next took the stand for an hour, and gave an exposition of Dan. 8 : 13, 14. His object was to prove that the 2300 days end with the 1335 days. Once his brethren had seven years intervene, and now but two, and he hoped ere long to see them agreeing that they end simultaneously. In proving that they end in 1873, he located the termination of the seventy weeks in A. D. 63, at which time the Jewish war began. To prove this, Josephus was read by the speaker quite extensively. This claim brought on quite an animated discussion as to the beginning of the Jewish war, some claiming it began in 65 A. D., and others in 63. To prove their respective points, both parties appealed to Josephus, and both sides ceased very confident of having gained their respective positions.

Before adjourning, it was voted to spend two hours each day during the meeting in a general Bible class; namely, from nine to ten o'clock A. M., and from four to five o'clock P. M., each speaker to be limited to five minutes. Adjourned to ten o'clock A. M.

Third Day. After the meeting was called to order and opened with prayer, Bro. Orion Green addressed the meeting fifty minutes. This speaker differed from those of the day before, in that he terminated the seventy weeks of Dan. 9 at the end of the Jewish war, which he located in A. D. 70. He claimed that the remaining 1810 days (during which Jerusalem was to be trodden down by the Gentiles) begin at this point, thus ending them in 1880.

The next speaker was Bro. Edw'd Daniels, who occupied about fifteen minutes. His claims were (1), that the 1260 years of papal supremacy ended in 1871, when Victor Emmanuel entered Rome. He referred to no event to mark the commencement of them. (2) He also claimed that the "two-horned beast" of Rev. 13 is Victor Emmanuel, though he made no effort to identify the two horns.

Bro. N. H. Barbour next took the stand, and gave a brief exposition of Rev. 13. His positions were as follows: (1) The "beast" (v. 2) is the papacy. (2) The "image of the beast" is papacy restored, which restoration was brought about by the first Napoleon. (3) The "two-horned beast" is the two Napoleons. Napoleon I. gave life to the "image," or restored papacy, and Napoleon III. sustained it until he fell, and then the "image" fell also. In establishing the above, he argued that the allied powers, or Holy Alliance, could not be the "image," as some claimed. Time, fifteen minutes.

The foregoing elicited considerable discussion, after which Bro. S. S. Brewer took the floor, and gave his views of the chapter. (1) The phrase "he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him" was explained: "Before" does not mean priority in point of time, but in the presence of. (2) The "two-horned beast" is papacy; the "image" is its system of worship. The features attributed to this power from v. 12 to v. 18 are exactly fulfilled in the papacy. At the request of one of the brethren, Bro. B. then read the paraphrase of Father Miller on this chapter, after which the meeting adjourned to two o'clock P. M.

In the afternoon, after some promiscuous discussion, Bro. G. W. Brown occupied the pulpit and presented his ideas in the form of a sermon on Rev. 11: 1, 2, as follows: (1) The "angel" is identical with the one of the preceding chapter, and also with the one in chapter 14 : 6. It is the Advent angel, or people who are proclaiming the advent. (2) The "temple of God" mentioned in the text is the Christian church. (3) The "man of sin" was to sit in this temple. He did obtain this seat in the church of Rome, 538 A. D. (4) The "forty-two months" reach to 1798, and the 1335 days, beginning at the same point, reach to 1873, at which time Christ will return to earth. Time, sixty minutes. Adjourned to ten o'clock A. M.

Fourth Day. Met according to adjournment. After prayer, Bro. Barbour addressed the meeting for the purpose of showing that the six thousand years of the world's history, since the creation of man, will end with the year 1872 A. D. His measurements were as follows:—

From creation to end of flood	1656	yrs.
" flood to death of Terah	427	"
" Abrahamic cov. to giving of law	430	"
" exodus to sending of spies	1	"
" sending of spies to division of land	45	"
" division of land to Samuel	450	"
" Samuel (under kings) to Zedekiah	513	"
" Zedekiah to end of captivity	70	"
" end of captivity in first year of Cyrus (536 B. C.) to Anno Domini	536	"
" A. D. to 1872	1872	"
	6000	"

Having thus presented his chronology, Bro. B. next presented an argument concerning the punishing of Israel "double," founded on Jer. 16 : 13–18. He claimed that the "double" punishment would extend beyond their rejection eighteen hundred years ago, a period of time equal to what they had existed at that time. At the time of their rejection (A. D. 30) they had existed as a nation eighteen hundred and forty-three years; to be punished "double" would be to extend their desolations an equal period beyond, which would accomplish their punishment in 1873. In proving the foregoing, Bro. B. argued that the Jewish nationality began at the death of Jacob, from which event to the coming of Shiloh (which was when Christ entered upon his ministry in A. D. 30, according to Bro. B.), there were eighteen hundred and forty-three years, which he reckoned as follows:—

From Jacob's death to giving of law	198	yrs.
" giving of law to sending of spies	1	"
" sending of spies to division of land	45	"
" division of land to Samuel	450	"
" Samuel (under kings) to Zedekiah	513	"
" Zedekiah to end of captivity	70	"
" end of captivity in first year of Cyrus (536 B. C.), to Anno Domini	536	"
" A. D. to coming of Shiloh	30	"
	1843	"

This is the period of their existence as a nation up to their rejection, from which the "double" is to be reckoned, bringing us to 1873, at which time Israel will be gathered. Following this the speaker gave an exposition of the parable of the ten virgins (Matt. 25), in which he claimed that the Advent people since '43 had fulfilled it exactly.

The preceding expositions gave rise to a general discussion, which was terminated by voting, on motion of Bro. W. N. Pile, that the afternoon session from one to three o'clock be spent in a discussion between Brn. Simpson and Cunningham, and Bro. Barbour (the latter to have half the time), in order to learn wherein the variation of two years occurred between their respective chronologies, that of Bro. B. ending the six thousand years in 1873, while Brn. S. and C.'s extended to '75. Adjourned to one o'clock P. M.

Met according to adjournment. Bro. Simpson took the stand, and gave the following as being his system of chronology:—

From creation of man to flood	1656	yrs.
" beginning to end of flood	1	"
" flood to end of Noahic age	427	"
" Noahic age to giving of law	430	"
Sojourn in wilderness	40	"
Under Joshua	25	"
Anarchy	18	"
Judges	450	"
Samuel	12	"
Kings	509	"
From captivity to first of Cyrus	70	"
" Cyrus to Christ	483	"
" Christ to A. D.	5	"
	4126	"

From the expiration of Bro. S.'s time (each speaker being allowed ten minutes), until four o'clock, the time was spent in discussion between Bro. Barbour on one side, and Brn. Simpson and Cunningham on the other. Bro. Barbour claimed their chronology was wrong in the addition of one year for the duration of the flood, whereas he claimed the sixteen hundred and fifty-six years from creation included the year of the flood. The discussion of this one point consumed the greater part of the time, in which discussion Bro. B. showed very plainly and unmistakably that in this place his opponents had inserted a year which did not belong there. His proof was in Gen. 7 : 11; 8 : 13, and 9 : 28, 29. By referring to the tables above, the reader will perceive wherein the variation occurs. His opponents did not acknowledge the mistake, although the feeling was almost universal among the listeners that they should have done so, as Bro. Barbour, on this point at least, was decidedly in the right.

Bro. Cunningham's speeches during this discussion were mainly for the object of proving Bro. B.'s reckoning wrong in dating the first year of Cyrus in 536 B. C. He argued that as the birth of Messiah was to be sixty-nine weeks or four hundred and eighty-three years from the going forth of the commandment to restore and rebuild Jerusalem; and as Christ was born five years before A. D., the years would extend backward to 488 B. C. Now as Cyrus issued this decree in the first year of his reign (Ezra 1), it follows that 488 B. C. is the correct date. Although the two chronologies differ but two years in their termination, it must be evident to all that there is really a much greater difference between them, as at the first year of Cyrus they are forty-eight years apart. Query. This being so, how is it they can be made to come out so near together? Surely there must be a gross error somewhere.

[We do not learn from the "Report" to which day the following notes belong.—ED.]

On motion of E. G. Higgins, E. P. Woodward was appointed Secretary in absence of C. E. Barnes.

Barbour—Bro. Cunningham said that these events might go beyond the seventy weeks. It seems to me that when the events are finished the weeks must be.

Cunningham—I did not mean that they were specific events which commenced at a definite point, and ended at a definite point. There was nothing to specify when he should be born in the seventy weeks.

Pratt—In his prayer, Daniel refers to his covenant by Moses, and says he has confirmed his word. If the covenant is to be blessing, to confirm it is to bring blessings, and vice versa. The leader is to be the man of fierce countenance, who is to destroy the city. Titus comes, and does he do these things? The Savior says these be the days of vengeance. The transgression is to be restrained four hundred and ninety years, and then the Romans come. When the time is out, they come, confirm the covenant, destroy the city, and take away the sacrifices.

Pile—A covenant is an agreement between two parties. It always has sanctions, that is, penalties attached to it, in case of breach. If the people broke it then the curses came upon them. What covenant was this, the old or the new? If one ends with Christ, how can it relate to the Jews? And about the seven weeks and the sixty-two weeks, are they separate or joined?

Ewell—The question looks clear to me. How much of the time belongs to the Jews? Seventy weeks. If I lease a house for five years, it is not four years and eleven months, but five years. If I do not comply with the terms of the lease, when the time has expired the owner has the control of the house. It will take him some time to get possession, perhaps seven days.

Brown—There were two covenants made with the Jews. The one referred to by Daniel is in Deut. 29 : 28. Gabriel comes along and says, I have come forth to give thee skill; therefore understand the matter. What matter? The matter you have been praying about. In regard to the "new covenant," it is not spoken of at all in Dan. 9. There are seventy weeks to restrain the evil that is to come upon you. When they are run out, the people of the Prince shall confirm the covenant for one week, and cause the sacrifice to cease, and cease forever. They will take away all you have. We do not want to put the new covenant where it does not belong. Pile quoted from Deut. 26 : 27—"He that confirmeth not," etc.

Hemenway.—What does Bro. Brown mean by "confirm?"

Brown—I suppose it means to make sure; so that it will never fail.

Pratt—God makes the covenant himself. He says, if you do so and so, blessings will follow; if not, curses. What will it be to confirm the covenant? To bring these blessings or curses. Who will confirm it? Somebody else has got to do that. I say to my child, if you are a good boy, I will bring you something; otherwise, will punish you. To confirm that is to do what he did to the Jews. The Savior says, these be the days of vengeance, etc. Nobody had confirmed the latter part of that covenant. It was not confirmed to that people, but "to you and to your seed." We go down a great many generations, and it is the Jewish people still. The leader that came did destroy the city, did confirm the covenant in besieging the city, did take away the daily, and so it is fulfilled.

Barbour. Bro. Pratt confuses the idea of word and covenant. Is it necessarily the same thing?

Pratt—I will read one verse. Dan. 9 : 11. (Here quoted) ——hath confirmed his words." It refers to the covenant.

Cunningham—The word covenant in Deut. and the word covenant in Daniel, come from the same Hebrew word. It must be the same in both instances. It cannot apply to Christ. God used the Roman army as his scourge. The seventy weeks are for the restraining of transgressions that length of time. Echol is to restrain,—always rendered with the sense of restraint. They should be afflicted, but not destroyed till the seventy weeks were ended. After sixty-two weeks from the completion of the wall, Messiah should be cut off.

Pratt—Gabriel comes to instruct about that vision. He says there are seventy weeks allotted to the people and the city. The remainder, or 1810 years, was "the times of the Gentiles."

Pile—The question is whether they are really cut off from the 2300 days. Bro. Cunningham said the Romans were simply the scourge in the hands of the Lord. If that be so, the Lord confirmed the covenant. As to the sixty-two weeks, it seems to me the last clause of the twenty-sixth verse is simply an explanation; and that the only commencement of any period is from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem.

Hemenway—In the phrase "confirm the covenant," it is not the covenant, but a covenant. I have no question but what it is the covenant God made with his people. The seventy weeks spanned the whole thing. Then to make the matter clear, the prophet touches events to transpire in the seventy weeks. Who shall confirm the covenant? You apply it to Titus. You chastise a boy with a stick. You chastise him, not the stick. I think God would not apply the word confirm to the stick he used. He would not say the stick, but himself did it.

Green—It is evident that a mistake has been made in this prophecy, and that is in the little word "he." There is only one place to begin; that is, the birth of Christ.

Hobbs—There are five points in the seventy weeks that are fulfilled in Christ. Reference has been made to the sixty-two weeks, that (it?) is translated by some, after the weeks, and that it is identical with the other threescore and two weeks. That would prove conclusively that the last week of the seventy was to bring in everlasting righteousness, etc. This is seen by the connection. He shall cause the —— to cease, not destroy it.

Cunningham—The attempt to make a distinction where there is no difference seems unnecessary;—make to cease, and cause to cease. I have quoted from the Hebrew in order to show that "cut off" is the only correct translation.

Pile—Bro. Cunningham is coming to the point. If these sixty-nine weeks are an integral part of the seventy, then it follows that the sixty-nine could not have ended at Christ. The word "determine" does not express what the angel meant to express. It is either cut off, or cut in pieces. The word is generally used in the sense of "cutting off," or divided. The form here is unusual, showing there is a triple division of the seventy weeks. But what evidence have we that the sixty-two weeks commence with the completion of the walls?

Brown—I think we are advancing a little. We must place ourselves a little in the place of Daniel. Gabriel said, Make this man to understand the vision; and he told him what the ram and the goat were, and "then I fainted, and was sick certain days, and was astonished at the vision." The next you hear of Daniel he was praying to God. What about? About the time. Then he is told about the 2300 days. The first thing was the seventy weeks cut off, to restrain transgression, etc. He was going to make reconciliation for iniquity. This was God's time when the Messiah should be cut off.

Pile—Does Bro. Brown commence the sixty-nine weeks with the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes?

Brown—Messiah will be cut off in sixty-nine weeks from the first of Cyrus.

Cunningham—The apostle says, "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God." I think we had better apply ourselves as Daniel did. We read that seventy weeks are to be cut off upon his people: there will be an attempt made, at a point when it will not do to have that people destroyed. The "restraint" shall commence at this point. If the vision had not been broken off there, it would never have been "shut up."

Barbour—I believe the coming of the Lord is what we want to learn about; but we do not seem to be coming any nearer together. Suppose this theory, or that, is true; I would rather talk about the coming of the Lord. What interest have we in that? Paul and the apostles did not look any further.

Brown—I do not want to be identified with those who believe that the 2300 days go beyond the end. And I expect that the 1335 days end at the same place. The war commenced with the end of the seventy weeks. There was a seven years' war commencing with A. D. 63. 1810 years will carry us to 1873.

Pile—Have been profited by this meeting. Prophetic time is a proper subject for investigation. The more we keep the Lord's coming before us, the nearer we can live to him.

Brown—When the "restraint" is off, the war will commence. The war will be for seven years, and in the midst of this time the sacrifices should cease. Where do the weeks commence? We can tell by running back from the time the war commenced.

Pile—The trouble is, it does not hit any time. There must be a commencement for the 2300 days, as well as for the 1810. If we run back, it brings us to 428 B. C.

Brown—What of it? Is it anything wonderful that there is a difference of two years? Here we have to depend upon Josephus; but when I get down to A. D. 70, I am at home.

Barbour—If we can make the end in 1873, I would be willing to let it go so; but our other brethren run the 2300 years to 1875, so that they run two years beyond the end.

Cunningham—Bro. Brown must show us some event in 428.

Brown—I think there is nothing wonderful if there should be a mistake somewhere.

F. W. Higgins—The question is in reference to the seventy weeks; what portion of the sixty-two, or sixty-nine, or seventy, extend from the death of Christ to the war?

Cunningham—He says in the first place that seventy weeks are cut off upon thy people. Then there is Christ's coming introduced, and the reconciliation for iniquity to be made. Then he says the walls shall be built, and after sixty-two weeks Messiah shall be cut off. There is a distinct work to be accomplished at the termination. When we come to the one week, we have the Messiah not introduced, but the people of the Prince that shall come.

E. G. Higgins—Which part of the sixty-nine weeks reaches to Christ?

Cunningham—They do not terminate at the birth of Christ. The sixty-two and sixty-nine weeks are distinct from each other.

Pile—The transgression was not restrained after 63 A. D. Does it not follow that the four hundred and ninety years must commence with the seventy (?) weeks? How shall we make the four hundred and ninety years reach from Cyrus to Christ?

Brown—I do not believe the four hundred and ninety years commence with the first year of Cyrus. But I believe the sixty-nine weeks do. If they commence together, they end forty-nine years before he was born.

E. G. Higgins. It says first that seventy weeks are cut off, and then that is divided up into sixty-two and seven, which make sixty-nine.

Brown—I don't believe a word of it.

Pratt—If the seventy weeks end with the crucifixion, the 2300 days run out in 1843 somewhere, and we are all afloat. It must have ended when the desolation of Jerusalem commenced. If the Jews' time ended in 63, we have the end in 1873; if in 65, the end is in 1875; if in 70, 1880.

Cunningham—The brother admits the meaning of the word "restrain." When the restraint is taken off, the 490 years end. Josephus was in the war, and it seems that he might settle the matter. (Extract read respecting the last act of the war in 72, when nine hundred slew each other.) The war ended 72 A. D.

AFTERNOON BIBLE CLASS.

Letter read from D. Clow, Janesville, Wis. Sisters invited to speak by Bro. Higgins. Bro. Barbour spoke on the Commune, as foretold in Revelations. He understood the beast of Rev. 11, Rev. 12 and 7, to be the Roman beast, tracing its various developments to the beast that was, is not, and yet is, which is of (not one of) the seven, being the general uprising of the people for power, * or Commune, as the last form.

Bro. Pratt spoke of the designs of the Pope to repossess himself of kingly power, and the societies which oppose his plans, and the consequent certainty that those who look for "peace and safety" will be mistaken. (Remarks somewhat extended.)

Barbour—When Israel came out of Egypt, the last seven plagues were poured out on the Egyptians alone. So in the last seven plagues, the Lord will hide his people. And the world knows something is coming, yet they know not what.

Pile—Read extract from the Report of the Troy Convention of American Spiritualists, showing the chances of union between Communists and Spiritualists to be consummated soon. Considers the Commune the last form of the Dragon. They aim at a Universal Republic, and Spiritualists aim at the same object.

Bro. Brittan thought property would not be worth much in this world soon. It was a good time to draw out what we had. Had nothing himself invested there. It is a great deal better to be burned out than to be burned up. Brethren say they cannot go into the churches, as they cannot get any thing there; then go and carry something. Feed my sheep.

THE BIBLE CLASS.

As already mentioned, two hours each day were spent in a general Bible class, each speaker being allowed five minutes, and not to speak more than three times in a session without permission of the class. The hours thus spent were very profitable and interesting. The following are a few of the topics which occasioned considerable discussion:—(1) Did Noah enter the ark seven days prior to, or on the day of, the flood? Gen. 7 : 11–13 were quoted as proving the latter supposition. (2) Were the words in Matt. 24 : 15–22 fulfilled in part at the destruction of Jerusalem, and in part in the papal persecution, or is their fulfillment wholly in the latter? On this, it was clearly proved that the entire passage referred to but one event, and that that was the papal persecution. (3) Are the weeks in Dan. 9 : 25, reaching to Messiah the Prince, to be computed from the birth of Christ, or when he entered upon his public ministry, or from his resurrection and ascension? This question elicited a variety of opinions, and its discussion was very animated. (4) Are the "weeks" in Dan. 9 : 25 to be considered as wholly distinct from the "seventy weeks" of the preceding verse; or does v. 25 enumerate the divisions of time into which the "seventy weeks" are to be divided? In proving this latter, the words "know therefore and understand" were appealed to as being proof that the periods in v. 25 were intimately connected with that of v. 24.

In their rejoinders one to another, as a general thing, kindness and brotherly love were very prominent. A word, however, concerning an occasional feature of the discussions, may not be out of place here. In trying to prove certain positions, after reading portions of Scripture and advancing certain deductions therefrom, the speaker would sometimes close with an appeal something like this: "Now which are you going to believe, the word of God, or men? Let us believe God!" and in a short time one or the other side would close his argument and deductions with the triumphant appeal, "Thus you see what the Bible says on this point. For my part, I choose to believe God!"

Would it not be well for brethren to remember that christians may differ greatly from one another, and yet each have an abiding faith in the teachings of the Bible? When different views of the same passage are presented, the difference of opinion is not because one believes the Bible and the other does not, but merely because they differ in their interpretation and application of a text which both firmly believe.

THE PREACHING.

The discussions were confined to the sessions during the day, the evenings being devoted to preaching. Bro. Simpson preached the first evening (see supra), and Bro. Carpenter the second, who gave a very interesting exposition of the seventh chapter of Daniel. In his remarks he considered France as the Euphrates of mystic Babylon, which was "dried up." Rev. 15 : 12. On Thursday evening Bro. Simpson gave an exposition of Matt. 24, and on Friday evening Bro. Pile preached on "The Coming Reign of Terror," in which discourse he argued that the same agencies that produced the French Revolution in the last century; namely, Spiritualism, Infidelity, Socialism, Free-Love, etc., are now working in the world and tending to a similar result. (☞ This discourse is printed in a tract of twenty-four pages, which can be had of the author, Springfield, Mass.)

C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

As a whole, the meeting was undoubtedly profitable; new ideas were developed, and some old ones, supposed to be indisputable, were found to be unwarranted. So far as a united agreement upon the prophetic periods is concerned, no conclusion is reached. The point on which there seemed to be any general unanimity was the ending of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days in 1873. If any did not endorse this conclusion, they made no public statement to that effect. Harmony prevailed, and the meeting assured all that brethren can dwell together in unity, even though not agreed in all their opinions.

C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

* I think Bro. Barbour had better be asked to set forth these views in an article. I know I could not fully understand him, and fear others did not. Perhaps a report of his words would do him injustice.

IMMORTALITY.

THE UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENT.

GEO. THOMSON.

"Who [Christ] hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."—2 TIM. 1 : 10.

The above inspired statement, properly elucidated, is fully competent to forever settle the much controverted subject of man's immortality. Let us first get a clear understanding of the expression—"brought to light." What does it mean? Clearly to reveal, manifest, or make known. To illustrate: A man conceives an idea of some useful invention. For wise reasons, he keeps the idea a secret, until, by actual experiment, he has demonstated the feasibility of his conception, when he at once publishes the fact to the world, that it may become both practical and profitable. Now this undeveloped idea may have existed for years in the mind of the individual, but it was never "brought to light" until it was published. Dates and the medium of publication are also important in this connection. For instance, the said inventor advertises his invention in the newspapers of the United States in the year 1870. As a matter of course, if his claims to originality are valid, the same thing has never before been published. But suppose a paper or book is found, having been published in England in the year 1770, containing a detailed account of the same invention, and proving it to have been in existence and use for many years. As a matter of course, the claims of the modern inventor would fall to the ground. Now, for the application to the subject under consideration. The Scripture at the head of this article affirms that the doctrine of immortality was "brought to light through the gospel." That gospel was certainly not antecedent to the ministry of John the Baptist, for the Evangelist Mark introduces the history of John and the Savior in the following terms—"The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." So we have the date of the gospel through which immortality was "brought to light;" and if the above affirmation is true, then it was never previously revealed, made manifest, or "brought to light."

We now come to the investigation of the popular doctrine of the Immortality of the Soul, in the light of these well-defined facts. Herodotus, the most ancient profane historian whose works have come down to us, testifies as follows: "They [the Egyptians] are the first of mankind who have defended the immortality of the soul." This writer lived at least in B. C. 400, and his history of the Egyptians extends as far back as B. C. 700. Bunsen, in his work on Egypt, says: "The Egyptians were the first who taught the doctrine of the immortality of the soul,—a fact mentioned by all Greek writers, from Herodotus to Aristotle." Here we have the incontrovertible evidence of standard history, that the immortality of the soul was "brought to light" in Egypt, at least seven hundred years before Christ and his gospel. Here is an apparent difficulty; how shall we get extricated? One of two things is certain—either this historical fact invalidates the above statement of the apostle Paul, or the two doctrines of immortality are not identical. Now we are coming to the gist of the matter. If we can show that the Egyptian theory is one, and the gospel doctrine another, and entirely different theory, we shall be able to exonerate the great apostle, and be prepared to give the fullest credence to his statement. Herodotus says—"They [the Egyptians] believe that on the dissolution of the body, the soul immediately enters some other animal." Thus we see that the primary element of their immortality doctrine was, that the soul survived the stroke of death, the idea of transmigration being a secondary feature. But there is no ambiguity in the terms employed by the historian in explaining their belief. They believed that when the body died, the soul lived on; and, in harmony with that faith, they regarded as sacred, and objects of worship, cats, dogs, rats, and crocodiles, because they supposed them to be receptacles of immortal souls; and Herodotus records the statement that, "If a house was on fire, the father of a family would take more pains to save his cats than his wife and children."

There is also a doctrine of immortality taught in the gospel of Jesus Christ. The point to determine now is, not whether these two doctrines are identical in all their features, but whether they are identical in any of their features. There is no difficulty in recognizing the similarity that exists between the ancient Egyptian doctrine and the popularly received doctrine of immortal-soulism. They are essentially the same in their primary features; but that the gospel doctrine is the same, remains yet unproved. Whatever be the nature of that doctrine of immortality which is "brought to light through the gospel," the medium through which it is made known, manifested, or "brought to light," will employ such terms in its explanation as will be unmistakably plain, and unlikely to lead to doubt or mistake in reference to its true character. We will again call up the case of the inventor. When he has matured his plans, and demonstrated the practicability of his invention, the next thing he desires is to make it known to the world. If it be an agricultural implement, he will strive to disseminate a knowledge thereof, especially among farmers. Hence he will advertise in agricultural papers. But how will he do it? Will he announce his discovery in terms of such ambiguity, that the farmer will be at a loss to know whether the machine is designed for the purpose of tilling the soil, reaping the grain, or digging potatoes; or whether it is to be operated by man-power, horse-power, or steam-power? So far from this, he will minutely describe its object, uses, and advantages, together with the power by which it is operated. In addition to this, he will, in all probability, give a pictorial representation of the invention, in order the more fully to illustrate its character. In fact, the ancient Egyptians adopted a somewhat similar mode. The American Tract Society publish a tract giving the fac-simile of a picture over an Egyptian tomb, which represents the dead body of a man lying on a couch, while hovering over it is a small figure with a human face and body and wings of a fowl, representing the "immortal soul" just escaped from the body, thus clearly illustrating the character of that immortality which the Egyptians were the first of mankind to defend. The point of this illustration must be obvious, in its application to the subject under consideration.

The gospel is the medium through which "immortality is brought to light." We turn to it with confidence, then, expecting to learn therefrom its true character. If the immortality of the gospel is a survival of the stroke of death, we shall expect to find it stated in terms unmistakably clear. In other words, which will perhaps more clearly present the true issue, if immortality is inherent in man, we shall find the fact so stated. If it is conferred, we shall find it so stated. We shall now proceed to examine the gospel carefully, imploring the divine aid in our search after truth on this important matter. It will be admitted, that immortality is deathlessness,—life perpetuated eternally; with this definition, we take the gospel as recorded by John, it being more full and explicit on this point than the other Evangelists, and enter upon our investigation, cordially inviting our readers to lay aside all prejudice, and come with us to the fountain of truth. We will drink together and be refreshed.

Speaking of Christ, the apostle says: "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." John 1 : 4. Does this record simply mean that Christ was a living being? or has it a more extended signification? By comparing Scripture, we shall be able to determine. "For, as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." John 5 : 26. This is very plain; the Father hath life inherent. (Compare with 1 Tim. 6 : 16—"Who only hath immortality.") None but the Creator could impart life to even a worm. Man can imitate the works of the Creator, from the lowest to the highest order; but his imitation must ever remain inanimate. He cannot give life to the minutest insect. God only possesses the

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Our meetings in San Francisco are daily increasing in interest. Our commodious house is well filled every night, and Sabbath evenings we require many extra seats. Some have been converted, and purpose to be baptized next Sabbath (Jan. 28th). Those who have been hardened sinners are deeply interested in the meetings, and infidels are confessing that the truths preached look reasonable, and full of common sense. They say they have been to meeting more within a few days than for years before. Members of the various evangelical churches attend, and enjoy with us the refreshing blessings sent by the Lord. Sectarianism is giving way, and the peace of God is filling many hearts. The church is advancing in divine life. Several have "entered the valley of blessings so sweet," and are resting with delight in the loving arms of Jesus. Others were almost persuaded to surrender all to Christ, and thus secure perfect love and peace. The doctrine of holiness holds a prominent place in the hearts of many. They see the necessity of being pure, in order to be ready for the coming of Christ. The spirit of the meetings improves in proportion as the church becomes more fully awake to the importance of the subject. It gives a greatly increased love for the appearing of Jesus, and the evidences that show he is coming very soon. A goodly number, like a loving bride, are anxiously longing to see our dear Savior. Skeptical beholders say they have not seen or heard anything before that looked so satisfactory to them. They begin to believe that the christian religion is a reality.

For several evenings we have been presenting the prophetical Scriptures, showing that we are very near the close of the present dispensation. These prophecies, and the signs of the times, have produced a blessed effect on many minds, removing doubts, and awakening faith in the word of the Lord. Infidel pillars are being shaken, and ready to fall like ancient Dagon.

For two Sabbath evenings we have been reviewing a sermon by Dr. A. L. Stone, on the subject of eternal torment. The review is to be continued next Sabbath evening. A great interest is manifested in this subject; and we have already heard of several who have become settled in the belief that the wicked will be utterly destroyed. The dogma of eternal torment is just about as consistent as the Pope's dogma of infallibility. Let them expire together, and be heard of no more. We are making arrangements to discuss this subject with a prominent minister from Santa Rosa. He is the editor of the "Bible Expositor." His name is Alexander Johnston. We expect a rich entertainment.

Bro. and Sr. Fassett, Brn. T. Howell, and R. W. Wilson, are with us, to render effectual assistance in the meetings. Bro. Wilson has concluded to locate at St. Helena, a very delightful place. The evening we arrived in San Francisco, Jan. 8th, closed up the remarkable rainy season; and since then till now (Jan. 23d), we have had most delightful weather. In the middle of the day, we need open doors and windows, and no fire. A very little fire in the evening and morning is all that is required. It is like the last half of May in New England.

The meetings in Vallejo are excellent. Sr. Fassett has been laboring there the last week. Several requested prayers.

We have received a cordial invitation to hold meetings in a Presbyterian meeting-house, in Bloomfield, some forty miles up the coast; also in the Presbyterian church at Tomales, in the same section of country; but we think it will be duty to commence meetings in Sacramento soon as we can leave San Francisco. We are urged to begin there next week, but may find it duty to stay here another week. The field on this coast is all white for the harvest, but it requires very earnest, persistent efforts to secure successful results. Satan has a strong hold of the people. Pray for us.

LATER.

The Lord is blessing us in our meetings in this city. Several have been converted, and others are under conviction. Some strong men are deeply interested in the plan of salvation who have been quite indifferent, or wholly opposed, till recently. They now see the consistency of christianity and its doctrines. We find the dogma of eternal torment, as taught by popular theology, has been a great stumbling-stone to the people, and made a host of infidels. What a pity. Let us wage earnest war against the horrid and unscriptural dogma of eternal misery, which is but the legitimate result of a belief of the equally unscriptural doctrine of the immortality of the soul, which is the root from which has sprung an immense crop of theological fables. It is the seedling tare planted by Satan in the early history of the human race, which has since been cultivated by the arch deceiver till the whole world is filled with its fruits. The results are truly terrible; but the great harvest is at hand, when the tares will cease to grow and multiply.

Many in this city are opening their eyes to see things as they are, and are anxiously waiting for the coming of Jesus. The saints are growing in grace, and seeking to be entirely conformed to Christ. The outside opposition is much stronger than it was last winter, but the work of the Lord is making a steady advance. We learn there are a large number in the churches who are looking into the glorious truths of the Bible, which have been long hidden from the people through false and spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures; and that they are satisfied we have preached sound doctrine in teaching that man is wholly mortal; that the wicked will be utterly destroyed, and forever cease to exist as conscious beings; that the saints will inherit the new earth as their everlasting home; and that the coming of Christ is an event near at hand. Devoted and intelligent men and women have been raised up on the coast, who have the courage to stand up boldly in defense of these important truths. They are alive in the work, and glory in the cross of Christ. They are willing to pay the price for a full salvation. Their eyes are open to see that a lukewarm christianity is not acceptable with the Lord. They are rooted and grounded, and resolved in the strength of the blessed Savior to stand firmly for him amidst the opposition of all his foes.

Last Sabbath (Jan. 28th), five were baptized, and ten received the right hand of fellowship into church relationship. We expect that others will soon follow their example. The interest is increasing, and our better prospects are brightening. The Spirit of the Lord is with us, giving sweet peace and rich comfort. We feel encouraged to press the battle in the name of the Lord.

We have just arranged to discuss the following propositions with Alexander Johnston, editor of the Bible Expositor:

1. "Every part of man is wholly mortal."
2. "The punishment of the wicked will consist in the total destruction of their being."

There is also talk of a discussion in Sacramento, where we expect to begin meetings the forepart of February. Sacramento is the capital of the State, and contains some forty thousand inhabitants. So far as we know, the great truths we love so well have never been proclaimed in that city. We are expecting a very interesting series of meetings in that field. The Legislature is now in session; hence a fine opportunity is offered to scatter the light in all directions. So far as we can learn, all the churches will be closed against us; hence we shall be obliged to hire a hall at considerable expense. This is the chief obstacle in the way of sure success. Brn., pray for us.

Bro. Wilson has located in St. Helena, Cal. It is a very pleasant part of the "summer land." He is pleased. We expect to hear of rich fruits from his faithful labors.

STILL LATER.

The meetings in San Francisco have increased in interest and power since our last report. A solid work is in progress. Stout-hearted men are bowing before the Spirit and word of the Lord. Men who had lost their confidence in the Bible are now listening with deep interest every night to its sacred teachings, and confess they are sinners, and desire pardon. They say they could not accept the Bible as the word of the Lord, so long as they thought it taught the doctrine of eternal torment; but now, when they find it teaches the utter destruction of the wicked, their great objection is removed; and they are ready to admit it is right that those who will not confess and forsake their sins should "be destroyed forever." They manifest a candor on the subject that is very encouraging. There are several of this class. They are reading with care, and searching for the right way, and we expect to see them among the redeemed.

The popular preaching has but little or no effect upon this class of men, which is a large one in California. They are men of strong minds, who do their own thinking, possessing great independence of character, with brave, noble, and generous hearts; just such as make the first class of christians when they are truly converted.

There is a strong effort made by the clergy to keep the people away from our meetings, and quite a number of church members have been turned out for believing what we preach; but in spite of all the opposition, large audiences assemble every night, increasing in size and interest. We have been obliged to put extra seats in the aisles to accommodate the people. Prominent men, who are members of other churches, are deeply interested, and are satisfied we are preaching the doctrine of the Bible. In our last meeting, one well known in the city as a leading man in an influential church, and in several benevolent enterprises, arose and said he had learned more about the teaching of the Bible during these meetings than in all his life before. He had been listening to sermons on the prophecies, holiness of heart, the nature of man, the resurrection of the dead, the saints' inheritance, and the destruction of the wicked. His warm sympathies are flowing out in favor of the meetings and the glorious truths presented. Many others are in a similar situation.

Some ministers are preaching against us, but their efforts are so weak, or so poorly fortified with the word of the Lord, that they only serve more fully to open the eyes of the people, and lead them to search the Scriptures more carefully for the precious treasures that they contain. While many ministers are opposed, there are some noble exceptions. We have been invited to preach in two Presbyterian houses in two towns some forty miles up the coast; and the pastor of the colored M. E. church, on Powell St., in this city, came and invited us to preach for him last Sabbath (Feb. 4th). We accepted the invitation. The Bishop was present, and invited us to come again.

Elder M. E. Cornell, who came to this coast last summer, sent us the following proposition for discussion:

"Resolved, That the Sabbath of the fourth commandment is now binding upon mankind."

We have accepted the proposition, and arranged to commence the discussion Monday evening, Feb. 26th, to continue some five evenings. During last summer, Elds. Cornell and Loughborough held a tent-meeting in his tf city orome months, which resulted in causing quite a number of our brethren and sisters to embrace and keep the seventh-day Sabbath. It is hoped the discussion may afford much help in developing the whole truth on this subject.

Wednesday, Feb. 7th. To-night we are to commence meetings in the lecture room of the Congregational church, in Sacramento. This is a new field.

Snow Blockade.—It has been over three weeks since we have had any mail from the East; and we suppose our editorial articles have not reached the Office during that period. The snow blockade of the R. R. on the Rocky Mountains has surpassed any thing of the kind ever known since the establishment of railroad travel. It is unknown how long it may yet continue. The Japanese Embassy, who went on to Ogden and Salt Lake, some two weeks since, en route for Chicago and the east, now talk of returning to San Francisco, and take a ship by the way of Panama, thinking it may be better than to wait for the opening of the railroad over the mountains. We learn that we came through at a favored time, though we were detained five days and a half by the snow.

NEW TRACT.

We have just received a new tract of 24 pages, entitled, "The Coming Reign of Terror, or the Commune," by W. N. Pile. The writer shows that the "Reign of Terror" of 1792 was produced by the workings of Socialism, Spiritualism, Infidelity, Free-Love, and the Commune; and then reasons that as these elements are now at work everywhere, they must produce the same results. The tract treats of the living issues of the present, reveals the awful condition of society, and shows that we are on the verge of "the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

"JOINT HEIRS WITH CHRIST."

It is not only true that the saints are heirs, but they are also "joint-heirs with Christ"; and it should be remembered that "joint-heirs" all come into possession at the same time; so the inheritance to which we are heirs jointly with Christ cannot be heaven, as Christ has entered that realm before the other heirs; and even if it were true that millions of saints were already there with Christ, heaven could not be the possession of the promised inheritance. Nor is heaven ever to be the possession of these joint-heirs, for it must be remembered that Abraham, "the father of the faithful," is pronounced "the heir of the world" (Rom. 4: 13); and also that "if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3: 29); and the promise embraced "land." Millions of sky worlds would never fill the contract.

When one heir comes into possession of this "land," all the "joint-heirs" will share with him. One part will not precede the other part. Most of these "joint-heirs" have gone to sleep for a little while, and must be waked up; and the power that will awake them will change the living ones, and clothe them all with immortality. Then the joint-heirs will be joint possessors of the "kingdom under the whole heaven." W. S.

THE TRANCE ARGUMENT.

We often find people who insist that there are two worlds of disembodied men, from the fact that they have seen those worlds while in a trance state, and have seen their relatives in hell or heaven. So does the Indian, in the same state, behold the spirit-deer in the "happy hunting ground," and the spirit Indian in pursuit; and so does the Mohammedan, in the same state, behold the seven heavens, and the seven hells. Thus each one sees in harmony with his theological education, with the eyes of imagination, and not with the natural eyes. This argument proves too much, or proves nothing. Is it true that there is really such a thing as literally

SEEING DISEMBODIED MEN?

A friend recently insisted that he knew people went to heaven and hell at death, because he had seen them there, while in a trance state, and knew them. Then it follows that the body either resembles the ghost within, or that the ghost within resembles the body; else how would the ghost, when out of the body, be known on sight? If the body receives its form and countenance from the inward ghost, it must be a very changeable ghost, changing from babyhood to gray-haired manhood. If the ghost receives its countenance from the body, it does not change the matter, as the body is constantly changing, so that the ghost too must change, to keep up the resemblance. Does immortality thus change—look younger a while, and then look old? Who believes it? W. S.

Scatter more Seed.—Who has not a distant friend enveloped in theological darkness? You, and you too, have just such friends in different localities. And have you not often wished that they enjoyed the blessed hope with you? Have you not also felt that you would be willing to sacrifice something to get the light before their eyes? Well, have you tried to dispel the darkness, and to impart to them the light of truth by sending them some important reading matter? Try it. Perhaps for twenty-five or fifty cents, that friend might be led to rejoice in the truth, or at least be led to investigate, which may ultimate in a reception of the truth hereafter. Let a thousand friends make the experiment. I have led some into the truth with a single work. Send the money and address to the Office. Make the trial. W. S.

Zeal.—Zeal is not religion, for it can exist in its strongest phase independent of religion, and it is possible to "have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge"—a blind zeal—so it is a great mistake to make zeal and religion identical. Satan infuses zeal into every ruinous enterprise. Nevertheless there must be zeal interwoven with religion, for the apostle affirms: "It is good always to be zealously affected in a good cause." Without zeal, all is stagnation and death. Zeal is the life of any enterprise, good or bad. Unenlightened zeal, and fanatical zeal, often passes for religion, because blended with sincerity. But sincerity is often "wise above what is written," and contrary to what is written; hence the more zeal there is connected with blind sincerity, the worse for its possessor. Let us have zeal according to knowledge. W. S.

"Rachel Weeping."—Allusion is often made to Jacob, when his descendants are brought to view—they being called by the name of that patriarch. So on the same principle Rachel, the wife of Jacob, is used to represent her posterity, the mothers of Israel, under the reign of Herod, who were to have their offspring slaughtered, thus causing weeping. This view is scriptural, and more reasonable than the supposition that Jacob's wife is poetically represented as rising from her grave to weep over captive Israelites, in poetical phraseology, as some claim. Mothers did weep under the cruel stroke of Herod which swept their children into the "land of the enemy," death. W. S.

"EARTHLY HOUSE OF THIS TABERNACLE."

E. EVANS.

Bro. Grant:—Seeing an article from the pen of Bro. Hobbs in the Crisis on the above subject, I became somewhat interested in the comparisons between the so-called Orthodox views of this case, and what I conceive to be the plain teachings of the Bible.

I was in New York in September '70, and attended the "Annual Christian Convention" (better known as "Disciples.") I there heard a very eloquent discourse, delivered by Rev. Mr. Moore of Cincinnati, in the course of which the Rev. gentleman quoted the passage in the regular Orthodox style—"If the earthly house of this clay tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Now if the term "earthly house" means this physical body of ours, which we understand to be the "we," "us," and "our," throughout the whole Bible, into what a fearful dilemma the whole Orthodox world fall, when they attempt to explain the above passage ("earthly house") to mean this physical frame as the "house" in which we live. If it be true that the apostle meant to convey the idea that when we die we "shake off this mortal coil," "earthly house," "physical frame," "clay tabernacle," and enter "a building," "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," and that "building," or "house," means another body, then it must follow, as a natural consequence, that there are bodies, "houses," "buildings" in heaven, "not made with hands," without souls,—or soulless bodies without number,—waiting for the dissolution of this "mortal body," and the advent of an immortal soul to animate it and make it alive.

They will doubtless attempt to evade this natural conclusion, by saying the heavenly "building" or "house" does not mean a body, but "a mansion in the skies." If the heavenly "house" does not mean a body, what right, I ask, have they to claim that the "earthly house" means a body? I fear that the mythologies of the Ancients are reigning supremely over this Babel building of modern Orthodoxy, instead of the "truth" or "faith once delivered to the saints."

Candid searchers after truth will discover in 2 Cor. 4, that the apostle was teaching the Corinthian brethren that "we also believe, and therefore speak." Well, Paul, what do you speak? Fourteenth verse—"Knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you." Then in the fifth chapter he continues the same theme—"For we know that if the earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God"; Paul's "building of God," is Peter's "new heaven and new earth."

Reader, be candid. You know that the great theme before the apostle's mind, was the resurrection and the final triumph of the saints, when the Lord shall come. "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

Extensive Art-Gallery.—Next to the Bible, no book is more useful than Webster's Dictionary. The Unabridged is an extensive art-gallery, containing over three thousand engravings, representing almost every animal, insect, reptile, implement, plants, etc., which we know anything about. It is a vast library, giving information on almost every mentionable subject. It indeed has been well remarked that it is the most remarkable compendium of human knowledge in our language. —Household Advocate.

An Astronomical Sensation.—News comes from Switzerland that M. Plantamour, a celebrated professor of astronomy at Geneva, has lately discovered a new comet, which in volume far surpasses all such bodies hitherto observed. Its velocity is immense, and it is proceeding in a direct line towards our globe, and will come into collision with it on the 12th of August next. Its approach will be rendered sensible by an extraordinary degree of heat. The catastrophe cannot possibly be avoided but by a deviation produced by the fiery visitor coming within the scope of the attractive influence of some other heavenly body.—Journal.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 10.

During my stay in Stevenson, Ala., with Eld. Cargile, I preached in two parts of the town, in meeting-houses about four miles apart, and put up indiscriminately with members of different denominations, who are deeply interested in the so-called "new doctrine." In sending publications to many clergymen South months ago, I had sent a copy to a minister in this State, who chanced to leave it at the house of one of his members, who read it, and thought the Bible was on my side. A neighbor of his who belonged to another church, saw the book, borrowed it, and read, and re-read it, and has fully adopted the faith, and is advocating it zealously; so whether it benefitted the minister or not, it has done its work.

Closed my labors at the "Bolivar church" in Stevenson, Sunday, Feb. 4th, in the midst of a snow storm such as this county has seldom experienced; but the congregation was nevertheless fair, and every one voted for my return to hold more meetings when an expression was called for by Eld. Cargile. The hearing interest was excellent. The Editor of the Stevenson New Era (a Baptist member), gave the following note in his paper of Feb. 6th.—

"Rev. Wm. Sheldon, the learned and eloquent Advent preacher, closed his services at Bolivar Sunday, and began here Monday night."

By the way, this Editor is much interested in the themes presented.

Monday night (Feb. 5) was as muddy a time as I ever saw, the snow having all melted during the day. But in spite of this, to my surprise, we had a good congregation; and never did a congregation listen with greater eagerness. But we went home in a drenching rain from above, and a generous supply of mud beneath; and there is no discount on Alabama mud, either; it is the genuine article. Staid over night with the gentlemanly editor of the Era, a college graduate, of southern birth. Found an excellent home, and kind treatment. He is reading "Life Beyond Death."

My experience in laboring in the South, in the winter, where there is a continual alternation between cold weather and rainy weather, prepares me to appreciate the following remark published by a Methodist editor in the South:—

"What a sudden falling off in the revival influence in all the churches of the South since cool weather set in! It is said, with truth enough in the remark to make the sarcasm of it pungent and withering, that the 'first white frost kills all the revivals in the south.'"

The time for southern meetings, if we would get the multitudes to hear, and not have our meetings partially broken up, first by rain, and then by cold weather, is between July 1st and Oct. 1st. This is the leisure season for southern farmers, besides being free from frequent rains and cold spells.

Feb. 6th was my last meeting in Stevenson. In view of the muddy going, we accepted the generous offer of a hotel keeper to hold it in his large dining-room, which the village people could reach on the side walks, instead of holding it a little back of the village in the meeting-house, thus escaping much mud. This gave us a large congregation, who listened attentively. Another meeting is loudly called for when good weather comes.

To-morrow I must leave to meet an appointment, made some time ago, for Nashville, one of the best cities in the South. Our landlord very generously made me welcome to stay with him all night, and insisted that whenever I came back I must consider myself welcome to stop with him; but the Editor of the New Era laid claim to me for the night, so I went home with him, and had a friendly chat on the state of the dead till about eleven o'clock. He is a candid man to talk with, and willing to bow to God's word as fast as he sees it. He intends to examine this subject critically, as soon as he finds time. Within less than twenty miles of each other, live Brn. Smith, Clouse, and Cargile—Baptist ministers—who are out clear on the truth, and are preaching it too, and will not be coaxed or driven to keep silent. In July or August we should hold two or three large tent meetings in this region, and they should be attended by thousands of candid listeners. The county is stirred up with an anxiety to hear for themselves. W. S.

HOOSICK VALLEY CONFERENCE.

Report of the first quarterly and second meeting of the Hoosick Valley Conference, which met in obedience to a call, at Hebron, N. Y., Jan. 17th, 1872, for the purpose of giving and receiving the word of life, and imparting to each other religious facts of encouragement, and also to transact such business for future work and co-operation as God in his providence might direct.

The first meeting for business was called to order, by the President in the Chair, Oct. 19th, at half-past ten A. M. After prayer, the Secretary being absent, it was voted that H. K. Flagg act as Secretary pro tem. Voted, that the Chair appoint a committee of three on credentials. Brn. J. Wilbur, J. B. White and R. L. Harrison were appointed. Voted, that preaching brethren visiting from abroad be invited to take seats and participate with us, voting excepted. According to a vote, H. K. Flagg, J. B. White and Geo. E. Whipple were appointed by the Chair a committee to arrange the order of business for the meetings.

The credential committee reported the following names: Preachers—A. W. Sibley, Sandy Hill, N. Y.; H. K. Flagg, Savoy, Mass.; Jacob Wilbur, No. Easton, N. Y.; R. L. Harrison, Hoosick, N. Y.; A. P. Bump, Hartford, N. Y.; C. Pike, Fort Edward, N. Y.; Elizabeth Warren, North Adams, Mass. Visiting preachers from abroad—J. L. Wood, New Milford, Ct.; Richard Phelps, Ansonia, Conn. Delegates—C. W. Potter and H. H. Stoddard, Granville, N. Y.; J. Woodward, Hartford, N. Y.; R. R. Hollister, eastern N. Y.; Nelson Robertson, Lorenzo Harrington, and J. B. White, Hoosick, N. Y.; Wm. O. Monson and E. Woodward, Hebron, N. Y.; Peter Porter and Chas. Howard, Fair Haven, Vt.; A. J. Rogers and A. B. Cook, Poultney, Vt.; James Jeffries, No. Greenwich, N. Y.; J. N. Howard, Low Hampton, N. Y.

Voted, that this report be accepted. Voted, that the report of the Business committee be adopted. Reports of preachers and delegates being the first thing in the order of business, the conference now listened to cheering reports concerning the state and progress of churches and the religious interest in the following towns—Sandy Hill, Fort Edward, Saratoga, Easton, North Greenwich, Hoosick, Hebron, White Creek, Pomkin Hook, Granville, Massena, Low Hampton, Hartford, Lansingburg, and Troy, N. Y.; Poultney, Fair Haven, Woodford and Pownal, Vt.; North Adams, Savoy, Charlemont, and Plainfield, Mass.

Increasing efforts have been made by holding protracted meetings in a good number of the towns before named, among which is Saratoga, N. Y.; where a meeting of six weeks was held, during which the church was much strengthened in its faith, and its numbers increased.

The reports of our brethren revealed the fact that much good was being done by the establishment of Sabbath schools and Bible classes. Since our first conference a Sabbath school had been established in Sandy Hill of over one hundred scholars; and other churches were doing much good in the same direction. All seemed to be fully impressed with the idea that all our efforts should be directed towards the advancement of Bible truth, as the best and only means of preparing the church for usefulness as an instrument of God in leading others to forsake the pleasures of this world and of sin, to lead a life of holiness and obedience, in order to meet the soon coming King of glory in peace.

An effort was made to raise funds for a tent, which would cost nearly $350, according to a vote of our Oct. conference; so as to have it ready for the field of labor by June 1st. $230 were immediately pledged, as follows: Bro. J. B. White and R. L. Harrison $100 for Hoosick church. H. K. Flagg and A. W. Sibley, $50 each. J. Wilbur, $20. Geo. J. Johnson of Hartford, N. Y., and Bro. Robertson of Hoosick, N. Y., $5 each.

The conference commenced on Wednesday evening, continuing through the week and over the Sabbath, making thirteen meetings. All except three business sessions were devoted to prayer and praise, the giving in of numerous testimonies, mingled with humble confessions to God and one another, and the preaching of the Word. From twenty to thirty rose for prayer, many of whom were blest during the meetings. Good congregations attended, and evenings the house was completely packed. Yet, notwithstanding the unpleasantness of standing up, and being so crowded as to produce a bad state of the atmosphere, perfect stillness, coupled with the most eager attention to hear, characterized all the meetings. Opportunities for preaching the word of life were shared in more or less by all the preachers present. Not so much as a single word in all the decisions of our business meetings was heard which lacked christian kindness and love; no notes of discord; and judging by the fruits (not of the hearts), no breath of jealousy existed during all the business transactions of the conference.

The conference closed with a vote of thanks to the church and citizens for the generous hospitality and kind feeling manifested to all during our stay at Hebron.

Correspondence.

From Bro. John Sheffield.

Bro. Grant:—I hail with delight the weekly visits of the Crisis. It contains the only true preaching of the kingdom and nature and destiny of man that I can get according to the doctrine of the Bible as I understand it. It does my heart good to read of your travels and labors in different parts of your country, especially when you call at Montreal. It was there I first met you on your first visit to that city, and witnessed the opposition you met. But God blessed your labors signally. My name was among the few that commenced the little church at M. Was buried in baptism by you one blessed Lord's day, with many more brethren and sisters, in the St. Lawrence. Since then I have passed through deep waters, but I am still hoping for a speedy redemption through Jesus.

The doctrines of the Bible are quietly spreading thro' our country. Many I talk with will not attempt to disprove our views, and if convinced will not declare it. If you could pay us a visit I believe much good would result; but the expense would be great, and the field for labor being so wide, I scarcely need entertain such a thought. The new subscriber I sent you seems to be rejoicing in the hope of eternal life through Christ alone, and is quite taken up with the Crisis and the books I have sent him. Pray for us, brother, that we may remain faithful to the end. Your Bro. in Christ, looking for his speedy return.

Belle Vue (Yorkshire), Eng.

From Bro. J. E. Clark.

Dear Brn.:—Amid our diversities of opinions, and prolonged arguments relative to the subject of definite time, I suggest that no harsh or unkind word be spoken, but that everything be conducted in a christian manner, in the spirit of love. Although we may differ as to some things, yet we are to exercise patience and forbearance at this time of diversity. We shall not all see eye to eye in this imperfect state; but let us all desire the truth. I believe the Lord is soon coming, and we are nearer this solemn event than most people are aware of. I am glad to see a disposition on the part of many to search concerning these things—the times and seasons. All those who truly love the Lord desire and love his appearing. One great object above all others is to be found all ready when the Savior appears to go in with him to the marriage.

Pure love and christian union are of more importance than an unwarrantable definite time. I should be exceeding glad to know the definite time of our Lord's coming again; but I cannot embrace a definite time argument (and believe it without most serious doubts) when founded upon assumptions, and a misapplication of Scripture. This has been the great trouble in all our former time arguments. And I am sorry to say there are many objectionable features about the '73 and '75 time arguments, and I hope these objections as they are presented will be met. This being the fact, there are necessarily two sides to this question; and I am glad to see our worthy medium—the Crisis—admit articles relating to both sides of this question.

Let us meet this issue honestly and fairly, like christians. Let us be divested of prejudice and read both sides of all arguments presented. Let us awake to this mighty subject of the investigation of the Scriptures concerning the coming kingdom and the New Jerusalem state. The day of the Lord is at hand. Who is sufficient for these things, and all ready for this event?

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. O. A. Ladd writes from Joliet, Ill.: "We are still striving to obtain eternal life through Christ. We find it very pleasant to enjoy the company of our dear children, which was our only inducement to leave our eastern home and privileges and go west. It makes us feel quite lonely to find ourselves in a city of some thirty-five thousand inhabitants, and all but ourselves with immortal souls. It would add a great deal to our enjoyment could we find and enjoy the society of those of like precious faith; but as we felt that the Lord opened the way before us, we mean to be content with our lot, trusting in him for the future, not looking behind us. We believe that all things work together for good to those that love God. We feel unworthy, yet we do claim this promise as ours.

The people in this city are a church-going people, but their religion, we think, is deposited in their churches, for safe keeping, as it does not show itself only on days of church service. We have attended meeting at the Methodist church; their pastor seems to be a very fine man, and is laboring hard for a revival in the church. He seems to realize their situation as a people, and is making every effort in his power to rally them from the vortex to which he sees they are drifting. He believes the coming of Christ is right upon us, and that peace can never be found on the earth until it is brought by the Prince of peace, and that in person. Would to God he had the light on other kindred truths. The poor man has labored so hard trying to portray the horrors of the lost in eternal torment, with all its blackest shades, he looks emaciated and worn down with fatigue, and all to no effect upon the minds of the people. My heart has truly sickened within me whilst sitting under the paintings of such a horrible scene. O when will men see light in God's light, and embrace the truth? It is the prayer of our heart that the truth in its purity may ere long find its way into this city, and that God shall yet have a people even in this place that shall see the beauty and harmony of his word."

Bro. G. A. Streeter writes:—"In the month of August, 1853, my wife and I found our way up into Vermont, and with other appointments one was at the house of Bro. John Spaulding, in Cavendish. One evening meeting was held. The next day we left them. Bro. S. and his wife are now sleeping in the cold ground. Time passed on, year after year rolled away. Last fall at our campmeeting, a sister came and said—'I am Bro. J. Spaulding's daughter, of Cavendish, Vt. I was twelve years old when you held that meeting at my father's house. I then was convicted of the truth that I was a sinner. I fought against it some years. But I am a christian now. I am married and live in No. Rutland, Mass. I have been praying for some one to come and hold meetings. Will you come? I cannot tell you how much money you would get.' 'I will come.' How dare I refuse such a call as this?

I went, and the first meeting I knew God was in the move. I have held one series of meetings, and have been there several Sundays besides. The result is, seven have been reclaimed from a backslidden state, and been converted to God and his truth. One old man sixty-nine years old, said, 'If it had not been for these meetings I should have taken my life. I thought I had committed the unpardonable sin.' He is rejoicing in God. Three young men have been converted, others have seen the truth, and are rejoicing in the 'new light' (as they call it.) Others are strongly interested in the truth. All this is the order of God. So my poor heart is glad to know that if we acknowledge the Lord in all our ways, he will direct our paths. I am strong in the Lord, firmly believing that Jesus will soon come, and what is done must be done quickly. I go into all new places that the Lord opens. Have just returned from an eight weeks' trip. Have seen several reclaimed, and the cause of God prosper."

Bro. S. L. Manley writes:—The Lord is moving upon the hearts of the people in a special manner here (Rochester, N. Y.) at this time. Sinners are being saved, backsliders reclaimed, and the little band are waking up to their responsibility in this matter. Brn. J. H. Whitmore and J. V. Himes are doing valiant service for the truth, and the Lord is blessing their labors, with whom the membership co-operate by their works of faith and labor of love. May the Spirit of the Lord and his love fill every heart, and we be so effectually shielded by the armor of God, that we may at last be crowned as victors, and with all the redeemed be admitted to the paradise of God."

Sr. R. A. Shipman writes:—"I love the glorious truths the Crisis advocates. I have been a member of the Methodist church for twelve years. I tried to serve the Lord there, but I never had such sweet peace as I now enjoy since I got this new light. I praise the Lord that I was ever permitted to hear the truth. I ofttimes feel weary of this world, but the thought that Jesus is soon coming, fills my heart with gladness. I want to be ready to hail him with joy. I feel a hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and by God's grace I will be a better christian every day."

An afflicted Bro. ("Blind Walter") writes:—"I am destitute of means. My wife is away from home sick, and I am sick at home, unable to get out; and I feel that I am obliged to ask help of those who have to spare of the Lord's money. May God abundantly bless all who may feel moved upon to help me in this my time of trial and affliction. My address is Walter S. Woodbury, East Rush, Monroe Co., N. Y."

Bro. B. P. Manning writes:—"When I left Boston, at Goffstown I was taken down with a fit the next day, and laid five hours not knowing any thing. I had but a few dollars left to get any medicine with. The brethren have helped me some, but I cannot pay up my debts. I do not know what to do. I feel very thankful for what the brethren have done for me. I have received a number of letters without any name. Wish all would give their names in full, then I could answer them."

power to give life, and he has delegated this power to his Son. In harmony with this, we can understand the Savior's meaning in John 5: 28, 29—"Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Read also verse 35, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live."

In the above Scriptures, we find it affirmed: 1. That God the Father is the source of life. 2. That the power to impart life was delegated to the Son; 3. That this power would be exhibited, not on new-created beings, but on dead men in the graves. Now these dead men either ceased to exist when they died, or they survived the stroke of death, and lived on. Could the Savier in any sense give life to any who possessed it already? It is sometimes claimed that this refers to those who are "dead in trespasses and sins." But let it be remembered that the dead here referred to are in the graves. Let us now examine John 3: 14, 15—"And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have eternal life." Here is certainly a promise of eternal life, or immortality, dependent on conditions. This not only proves that all do not possess it inherently, but also that none can obtain it, unless the stipulated conditions are complied with. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. Again, "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life." John 3: 36. The life here denied the unbeliever, must be future and eternal life, for he is already in possession of the present life. This is in harmony with 1 John 3: 15—"No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." If immortality is inherent in man, this cannot be true; all would have eternal life, or immortality, its equivalent. But all the passages quoted above seem to converge to two points: 1. That immortality is a gift; and 2. That it is to be conferred by Jesus Christ. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." 1 John 5: 11. That all this has reference alone to the re-living of the dead, is abundantly corroborated by other scriptures. "For, as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." John 5: 21. "And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." Verse 40.

We cannot see how it is possible to get anything from these Scriptures but life only through Christ, by a resurrection from the dead. But, in order to make assurance doubly sure, we will continue our investigations. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 40. Here is a plain statement, setting forth how eternal life may be obtained (conditionally, by believing;) by whom conferred (Christ says, I will raise him up), and when obtained, (at the last day, at the resurrection). This truth was deemed of such importance by the Master, that he reiterates it no less than four times in this one discourse. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." John 6: 39.

Now, in what sense could the Savior lose any whom the Father had given him? We can conceive of but two ways, apostasy, or death. That the Savior had no reference to the first, is evident from the connection. A restoration from apostasy would not be deferred until the last day. The only other contingency, then, by which the loss could be experienced, is death. But with the popular view of death, permitting the soul, or real man, to live on, to survive the stroke of death, how could the Savior lose a saint? Yet the Savior intimates the possibility of such a loss, on the only true hypothesis that death kills; and reveals the mode of restoration—I will make alive again at the last day. "Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell [hades, or death] shall not prevail against it." Matt. 16: 18. And so, while Christ concedes a temporary victory to death, he everywhere proclaims his ultimate triumph by releasing his saints from the domain of the usurper at the last day. "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 54. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." Verse 57. If the doctrine of innate immortality be true, we have life independent of Christ. That which is immortal can never die; hence eternal life is the inalienable property of all, and in no distinctive sense is Christ a life-giver.

We will pursue our investigations a little further. We have stated that the Egyptians have left on their tombs pictorial representations, illustrating the character of the immortality they believed in and defended. So the Savior gave a practical illustration of the power he possessed as a life-giver; first, in the case of the son of the widow of Nain; but more fully in that of Lazarus. When the blessed Savior wept tears of genuine sympathy with the bereaved sisters on account of their brother's death, we may readily believe that he would afford them true consolation. What a glorious opportunity to reveal the true state of the dead! How did the Master comfort poor weeping Martha? "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Fancy the Savior giving this reply: Weep not, Martha, thy brother stills lives; he has survived the stroke of death; he is far better off now; he has gone to his reward! Did the Master thus console Martha? If not, why not? If this were all true, would he not have so spoken? These questions are worth pondering. "Jesus said unto her, Thy brother shall rise again." Did this clash with Martha's theology? "Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection, at the last day."

Perhaps it would not be inappropriate, in concluding this article, to present all that the Bible says about "Immortal" and "Immortality." The word "immortal" occurs but once: "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory for ever and ever, amen." 1 Tim. 1: 17. The word "immortality" occurs five times: "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Rom. 2: 7. "Which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality." 1 Tim. 6: 15, 16. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15: 53. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Verse 54. The other is our text at the head of this article. We think we have clearly shown the nature of that "life and immortality" which are "brought to light through the gospel." It is a re-living of the dead, in contradistinction to the Egyptian theory of continued existence. We acknowledge our absolute dependence upon Christ for a future life and immortality.

Obituaries.

PAUL. Sister Mary E., wife of Henry P. Paul, fell asleep in Jesus in South Elliot, Me., Jan. 18th, aged twenty-seven years.

Sr. Paul's hope was in the coming of the Lord and the resurrection. She leaves a loved companion and one son, who with others deeply mourn her loss. The writer endeavored to comfort them by reading our Father's will from John 6: 39, 40, showing that Jesus would come to execute it.
GEO. W. BROWN.

MCLURE. Died in Palmyra, Me., Feb. 13th, 1872, Emily A., widow of J. H. McLure, and daughter of N. F. and M. H. Nason, of Weeks Mills, aged thirty-eight years and nine months.

She said she had no choice to make between life or death, but was resigned to her lot. She was a great sufferer, but bore all her sufferings with patience. She sleeps in hope. By this affliction an only son is left an orphan, and Bro. and Sr. Nason are left childless in their old age. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope.
A. A. MILES.

LAWRENCE. Killed by the cars, Feb. 6th, 1872, Pamelia Lawrence, wife of Warren Lawrence, of Durhamville, N. Y., aged fifty-six years.

Sr. Lawrence leaves a dear husband and quite a number of children and grandchildren, besides a large circle of acquaintances, to mourn her loss. She was much loved by all, and was a true Bible christian, rejoicing in the speedy coming of Christ. She sweetly sleeps in Jesus, and we pray God to sanctify this bereavement to the good of her surviving friends. Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, who convened in the Baptist house at Durhamville. Discourse by the writer, from Ps. 116: 15. C. H. WILLIAMS.

BURK. Died in Wolfborough, N. H., Feb. 3d, 1872, of quick consumption, Hannah A., only daughter of Franklin and Hannah Burk, aged fifteen years, one month and three days.

This sister experienced religion four months since, and lived her religion ever after, dying in the triumphs of faith. She leaves a father, mother, and brother to mourn their loss, but they mourn not as those that have no hope.

Words of comfort to the bereaved friends by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13. A. STILLINGS.

SWAIN. Died in Meredith Village, N. H., Jan. 14th, 1872, Bro. John B. Swain, aged sixty years.

Bro. S. died in the full triumph of faith, looking forward to a glorious resurrection, when God's children will be gathered where death and the tomb can divide them no more. He leaves a wife and eight children. Words of comfort on the occasion by the writer, from Job 14: 14.
N. GLIDDEN.

BARNUM. At her father's residence, in Brighton, near Rochester, Jan. 19th, 1872, of typhoid pneumonia, Jennie, youngest daughter of H. O. Barnum, aged five years and six months.

DENSMORE. Died in Hartland, Feb. 1st, 1872, Roxana, wife of Frederick Densmore, aged seventy-three years, after many years of suffering. She died trusting in Jesus.

BERLIN, Feb. 22. It is officially announced that the apothecary who resides in the city of Posen, arrested here yesterday on suspicion of contemplating the assassination of Bismarck, is a Pole and a fanatical Catholic, and had formerly served in the Papal Zouaves. He came from Posen a few days since, and while on the way threatened the life of the Prince. A pistol was found on his person.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS.

It is reported that Prince Bismarck proposes to issue invitations to the Powers for an International Congress, the object of which will be to establish a system of cheap and uniform rates of postage and to facilitate the transmission and exchange of mails.

THE INTERNATIONALS DENOUNCED.

LEIPZIG, Feb. 24. The police have issued a proclamation against the Internationals, declaring that the aim of the organization is to found a Social and Democratic Republic, and to give the workingmen power therein. The artisans of this city are, therefore, prohibited from becoming members of the society or contributing money towards its support.

THE EXCITEMENT AT ANTWERP.

ANTWERP, Feb. 23. Monsigneur Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans, and Dukes of Rohan and Tremoille have arrived here. The number of strangers is constantly increasing and their presence causes much agitation in the city. To-night the streets were occupied by tumultuous crowds and the police are out in force.

ANTWERP, Feb. 24. There is no diminution in the number of persons gathered here. The streets are filled with people this morning, and great excitement prevails. Orders have been issued forbidding persons grouping at any point in the city. Disturbances are imminent.

LATER.

Feb. 26. Hostile crowds are promenading the streets, but there has been no serious rioting. Collisions between the citizens and strangers are immediately stopped by the police, and all large crowds are dispersed.

FRANCE.

ANOTHER GERMAN INVASION IMMINENT.

LONDON, Feb. 24. (New York Herald special.) The Germans are arming. Two corps are ordered to be in readiness. The cause for these preparations is the great activity of political parties at Versailles and the possibility of a change in the Government in France. Germany reserves the right to decide as to any new government there. Should she deem such governments unlikely either by inclination or incapacity to execute the treaty of peace there will be another invasion.

PARIS, Feb. 26. The impression prevails here that the present King of Spain cannot cope with the difficulties by which he is beset, and that a serious crisis in Spanish affairs is imminent.

ITALY.

ROME, Feb 22. A consistory of Cardinals is called by the Pope to meet in the Vatican to-morrow to nominate Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Russia.

Several bishops of the Roman Catholic Church are urging the Pope to hold an Ecumenical Council at Trent in Tyrol. The Austrian Government, however, does not seem disposed to grant the permission asked by His Holiness for the assembling of the Council within its dominions. Should the Pope be successful in his application he will not attend the sessions of the Council in person, but will remain in Rome and be represented at the meeting by a Cardinal.

ROME, Feb. 23. The Pope in the Consistory yesterday preconized twenty-eight Bishops, including four for dioceses in America.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE LEGITIMATISTS.

LONDON, Feb. 22. The gathering of the Legitimatists is increasing daily, and is becoming formidable. It is confined to no nationality, although the French preponderate in numbers. German and Spanish legitimatists are well represented. The ex-King of Hanover arrived yesterday with a large party of supporters. Leading Ultramontanists from Italy, Germany and France are also flocking to the city. It is rumored that all are acting together harmoniously, and the chiefs are deliberating over the plans for the restoration of all deposed sovereigns.

SCOTLAND.

DESTRUCTIVE FLOOD IN THE VALLEY OF THE TAY.

LONDON, Feb. 25. Dispatches from Dundee give accounts of a wide-spread devasting flood in the valley of the Tay. The waters of the Frith and river Tay overflowed their banks last night and poured into the plains on both sides, sweeping everything before them.

The flood extends from Dundee, at the mouth of the Frith, to a point above Perth, on the south side of the river Tay, and head of navigation. The level country around the latter city is covered with water, and portions of Dundee are rendered uninhabitable. The railroad between the two cities is washed away in many places, and much of the road bed must be rebuilt.

In Dundee the damage to property is immense. The lower stories of several large warehouses filled with jute and flax are flooded, and thousands of bales of flax were destroyed. No estimate can be formed of the losses in the country along the river bank.

DOMESTIC.

UTAH.

THE MORMONS EXCITED.

Salt Lake City, Feb. 23. There was great excitement in the Convention to-day on the passage of Section five of the ordinance, which agrees that the terms prescribed by Congress as a condition precedent to admission, if ratified by a majority vote at the time and under the regulations prescribed by this Convention, shall thereupon constitute part of this ordinance. Many of the delegates strongly opposed the passage of this section of the ordinance.

The Mormons are generally indignant at being forced to sacrifice their favorite doctrine of polygamy. The resolution was finally passed, mainly by the efforts of Prophet Fitch and Elder Cannon, who are accused by the Mormons with being influenced by the most mercenary motives.

THE BLOCKADE.

Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, Feb. 23. The first through train for the East on schedule time reached here from Ogden this afternoon. The Salt Lake Agent of the Associated Press, who is among the passengers, reports the line entirely clear and the snow is melting rapidly.

All along the line heavy winds still prevail, but there is little or no probability of any further interruption. The track, bridges and trestles all seem to be in excellent condition.

Numerous cuts indicate how prodigious has been the work of raising the blockade.

At Laramie, Rawlins and other points Superintendents Sickles and Clark are highly praised for their efficiency in clearing the road in the face of such unprecedented obstacles.

The Japanese Embassy will be here to-day and will reach Omaha in time to take the train for the East to-morrow morning.

ARRIVAL OF PASSENGERS AT CHICAGO.

Chicago, Feb. 23. The first passengers who have reached this city from San Francisco by railroad for twenty-eight days arrived last night. They numbered about one hundred and fifty. They denounce the managers of the Pacific Railroad for bad treatment. They left Ogden the 2d inst., and reached Green river, having encountered but little snow. At Green river the train stopped, and nothing could induce those in charge to go ahead.

The passengers were obliged to pass the time as best they could. When it became known that the train could proceed no further, Gov. Potts telegraphed to San Francisco advising the people not to come east by railroad, as it was blockaded by snow. He received an answer from one of the officials of the Pacific Company requesting him to contradict the statement, or his pass would be revoked. He refused to do so, and bought a ticket.

At the expiration of thirteen days the passengers got aboard the train and started for Butler Creek, sixty-one miles, which was reached without interruption. Between Separation and Simpson Hill there were several large snow drifts, and pathways had to be dug through the snow. They were eighteen days going from Ogden to Simpson Hill, two hundred and sixty-seven miles. At the latter place they encountered a hard snow-drift, at which all passengers worked eight or ten hours.

At Madison Bow they encountered seven western bound trains, and seven or eight hours were exhausted in switching past them. There was no suffering on the train, every one having plenty to eat except one of the western bound trains, whose passengers suffered from hunger and would have starved had not Mr. Sailor, who was about starting a restaurant at Green river, opened two car loads of provisions and permitted the hungry crowd to take what they wanted.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY AGAIN BLOCKADED.

Salt Lake City, Feb. 26. The Union Pacific Railroad was again blockaded by snow yesterday. The Western bound train was seventeen hours late here. The storm is likely to close communication for some time.

SOUTH AMERICA.

THE MASSACRE AT TANDIL.

New York, Feb. 26. A Buenos Ayres letter states that the massacre at Tandil was brought about by one Solares, who professed to be Christ, and is said to have performed miracles. He worked upon his ignorant followers, who accompanied him to Tandil, massacreing the people under the cry of "Death to the Masons; death to foreigners," when the people armed and captured them. Sixteen were killed of the fifty fanatics, and Solares was subsequently shot while in jail.

THE WEST.

THE RECENT SEVERE SNOW STORMS.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 22. The severe storm of Tuesday, last week, was attended with several casualties. Near Beaver Falls, a lady, in the absence of her husband, endeavored to go to the barn and care for the stock. She was accompanied by her sister, aged seventeen. Two children were left in the house. Three days after the husband returned and found the children upon the bed covered with snow, nearly dead. Learning from them of the absence of the two women, he went in search. The body of the young lady he found about half a mile from the house, and of his wife over a mile out on the prairie. There were several other cases of freezing in the vicinity of Windom.

LECTURE ON SPIRITUALISM.—Notwithstanding the extreme inclemency of the weather there was a large audience in attendance at the basement hall of the Congregational Church, last evening, to listen to Miles Grant's discourse on Spiritualism; and the attention paid to the edifying discourse was perfect. At the close of the lecture, questions were asked by persons in the audience, and kindly but sometimes keenly answered. It is evident the Elder is au fait on the questioning business, and is not easily caught napping. He was inquired of—as the final question—if he had not found that there was a great deal of toleration among the Spiritualists. The Elder replied: "Oh, yes; tolerate anything!" Elder Grant will preach in Hamilton Hall, K street, between Fourth and Fifth, to-morrow and Saturday evenings; services commencing at half-past 7 o'clock.—Sacramento Daily Record, Feb. 8th.

In Brief.

—— The Pope has asked the permission of England and Austria for the meeting of the Ecumenical Council in their dominions.——Over the western half of the Atlantic Ocean there are three times as many storms as there are over the eastern side.——There is a general giving out of wells and cisterns in Vermont. Wells that had not failed for fifty years, are now dry.——The first temperance society in in France has just been established.——The Arabic language is the spoken tongue of 60,000,000, and the sacred language of 120,000,000 of Moslems. The entire Bible has been translated into it, and is now issued in many editions, either complete or in parts. An edition of the Gospels in raised Arabic characters is also issued for the blind.——The city of Chamochi, in Southern Russia, has been almost entirely destroyed by a formidable earthquake.——Land has been purchased in Thirtieth street, New York, at a cost of $100,000, on which to erect the building for the use of Mr. Hepworth's new church. It will be built of iron, will accommodate 2,500 persons, and is to be completed in October.——The greatest revival of religion ever known in Leavenworth, Kansas, is now going on.——The ministers of the Congregational, Baptist, Universalist, Methodist and Disciples Churches in Danbury, Ct., have published a statement in the local papers to the effect that, while neither of them wishes to be held as indorsing the opinions of others, they desire cordially to unite in christian work, so far as they may. Union prayer meetings of all these churches have been held regularly for several months with good results.——The submarine telegraph cables in China are suffering from the attacks of some minute crustacean, so small as to be scarcely perceptible to the naked eye. Various breaks have been traced to the agency of these animals, who imbed themselves in the gutta percha.——The Japanese are making rapid progress in the practical application of science and the arts of civilized nations. The official "Blue Book" makes provisions for light houses, railroads, telegraphs, a postal system, introduction of machinery, cattle breeding, scientific farming, navy yards, coast and inland survey, road making and numerous other enterprises. The scientific school recently established at Fukuwi has one hundred and twenty-five pupils.

Notices.

THE MASS. ANNUAL CONFERENCE may be expected to be called the first week in April, at Chelsea, Mass. Particulars hereafter.

THE next quarterly meeting of the A. C. Conference of Northern Pennsylvania and Southern New York, will be held with the church in Hornellsville, N. Y., commencing Friday evening, March 22nd, to continue over the Sunday following.
J. W. TAYLOR, President.
A. H. BRIGGS, Secretary.

THERE will be a conference meeting in Garland Village (Town house), commencing March 14th, at seven o'clock P. M., to hold over the Sabbath. H. B. Seavey, Jer. Carr, and N. G. Reed are expected to preach the word. Call on Brn. Millet and Field. In behalf of the brethren,
O. G. TRUNDY.

THERE will be a protracted meeting held in Poultney, Vt., commencing Feb. 27th, 1872, and hold over the following Sunday. Bro. S. G. Mathewson will be present a part of the time, to assist in preaching the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for his divine blessing to attend the effort. A. W. SIBLEY.

THE THIRD Quarterly Conference of Vermont will be held with the church at Rutland, to commence Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, and close Friday, March 1st. Our last conference was one of special interest. We hope this will be still better. One brother walked to attend that conference some sixty miles. That spirit of sacrifice will give us a great gathering at Rutland. Come one and all, far and near.
H. F. CARPENTER, for the Committee.

THE NEW YORK Adv. Chris. Conference will convene with the Church in Lockport, on Thursday evening, for its next quarterly session, March 14th, and continue through the week and over Sunday. All are invited. It is hoped there will be a large attendance, and a full representation by delegates, as there will need be some judicious planning for the next annual meeting in June. Shall there be a campmeeting as last year—where? Pray for this meeting, and come praying. Do not forget the collection.
D. COGSWELL, Pres.
WM. E. BROWN, Sec.

THE THIRD Quarterly Meeting for the E. Dist., Wis., will be held with the Church at Cassel's Prairie, Sauk County, Wisconsin, to commence Friday evening, March 22d, and hold over Lord's day. Let there be a general rally at the commencement of the meeting. Come from the closet, and bring a blessing with you.
GEO. THOMPSON.

HAVING been divinely blessed in preaching the blessed gospel of Christ in different places, I feel desirous of occupying my time more fully in this heavenly calling, and so would notify any who would be willing to assist me in appointments, to address me by letter, or otherwise. WM. HOBBS, Cambridgeport, Mass.

ELD. JOHN COUCH is pastor of the Second Advent Church in Chelsea, Mass., and all communications relative to supplying the desk must be directed to him hereafter.

PRAYER MEETING at Bro. R. T. Woodward's, every Saturday evening, at 7½ o'clock, No. 42 Bradford Street, out of Waltham Street, Boston. Welcome all.

HEREAFTER all preachers wishing to preach in Wakefield, Mass., will please appoint on the first and third Sundays in each month.

☞ Preaching brethren going to Great Falls, N. H., will please call on Bro. Joseph K. Nash, No. 48 Maine Street.

NEW TRACTS.
Just published by the A. C. P. Society, Symbolization of the World's Eventful Crisis, by O. R. FASSETT.
An excellent tract of 16 pages, showing that we are living amid the events occurring under the opening of the "sixth seal"; that "we are witnessing them, and are far down in their history, and close upon the end of this world and the solemn judgment scenes."
Price, single, 2 cts.; postage, 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred, by mail.

"THE END AT HAND."
A TRACT OF 24 PAGES.
Showing that the "Gospel of the kingdom" has been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations"; and that the end of this dispensation is at hand, and the Lord about to appear in his glory. By Eld. John Couch. Just the thing to scatter by the thousands. Let it have a wide circulation. Price single, 8 cents; postage 2 cts.; 25 cts. per dozen; $2.00 per hundred by mail.

SPRING.

S. L. REED.

Spring is coming, Spring so fair,
Teeming with ambrosial air;
Coming with its perfumed breath,
Scattering the shades of death,
'Mid the varied scenes of earth
Bringing life and joy to birth.
'Tis a Spring ne'er seen before,
Of which the prophets sang of yore;
A Spring whose flowers will never fade,
A Spring whose sunshine knows no shade;
A Spring that fears no withering blight,
A Spring of never-ending light.

O haste! perpetual Spring of joy,
Of peace and love without alloy,
Bid old bleak wintry Time be gone,
And bring us the eternal morn.
Let life spring up from land and sea,
And form the blood-washed company;
Let thorns and thistles cease to grow,
And joy set every heart aglow.
Let hills and rocks and valleys sing,
Rejoicing with the new-born Spring;
Let the desert waste be glad,
The barren land with verdure clad;
Let the trees of healing grow,
Bury scenes of want and woe;
Let earth's loved ones wake to life,—
Haste, O Spring, and end the strife.

Providence, Feb., 1872.

A NEW CREATURE.

O. W. STETSON.

Christ the hope of glory formed in us is one thing, but to create us anew in Christ Jesus is quite another thing. Paul says in 2 Cor. 5: 17—"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature [a new creation,—Diaglott]; old things are passed away, . . . all things are become new." Still it is evident, from the context and all his writings on this point, that he neither understood nor desired us to believe that this creative work was completed in either himself or us (see Phil. 3: 12–14), but everywhere speaks of it as having been commenced, and to be continued unto completion in the day of our Lord Jesus. In Heb. 8: 6–13, and Gal. 5: 16–25, he shows "the old" as those things which pertain to the former covenant, the law, or the flesh, and particularizes them; but "the new" are the things comprehended in the second covenant—grace, or the Spirit; and he also specifies them—joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; nine in all. Now the possession and exercise of these, with the crucifixion of the old, is what constitutes us new creatures, so far as a moral regeneration or spiritual renewal is concerned, according to Paul's gospel. But every one of these are internal, mental endowments, or qualifications, externally manifested, and not one of them a product of the brain; for neither it or any other part of the body has been at all changed in its physical structure by this regeneration.

So far as the material man proper is concerned he is still the same flesh man that was born of the flesh, and all the nine new things combined do not satisfactorily show to me a new birth of the man, or that the man has been born again, unless we at once yield the point and submit that there is inside of the material structure another "immaterial man," "the man proper," as claimed by others, and that it is this "inner man" that has undergone the change involved by being "born again." But to yield this point is to yield the entire ground in controversy between the so designated materialists and immaterialists. But if these nine are not products of the brain (organ of flesh), what are, and whence do they come? The apostle comes to our rescue, and at once relieves us of the difficulty into which our theorizing theological notions would drive us, by saying that these are a fruit (i. e. a product) of the Spirit of Christ, which God hath sent forth into our hearts, that we might receive (in order to our reception of) the adoption of sons. 4: 5, 6. In Rom. 8: 15 he calls this the adopting spirit (i. e., the spirit which is ultimately to adopt us as sons, as is proved by verse 23), in which he says we have not yet received the adoption itself, but we are groaning and waiting for it. And in Eph. 1: 13, he informs us that the bestowment of this spirit secures to us this adoption as sons (or to sonship), which is the redemption of our body at the time set; when, according to Phil. 3: 21, these vile bodies will be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious (glorified) body. Then the substantial man proper will produce these graces of the Spirit, in and of himself, by virtue of the man himself having been born of the Spirit; the result of a work of grace wrought upon and in him; but now he has this treasure in an earthen vessel, and they are produced by virtue of the Spirit of Christ, begotten or born in him.

To my apprehension, such are the results of a work done for and in us through grace by the spirit of God (or mind of Christ), bestowed upon us in consequence of an intense desire for truth having been begotten in us by the incorruptible seed (implanted), the word of God, that liveth and abideth forever; and thus creates a hungering and thirsting after righteousness, which leads us to feed, and feast too, upon that true bread that came down from heaven, of which if a man eat he shall live forever; for man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

These processes of developing us in a new creation, as delineated by Christ and the apostles, is in complete and perfect harmony with everything in nature. Take for illustration the chicken. Take an egg from the nest subjected to incubation for a few days only. Break it into a clear glass; hold it up between yourself and the sun, and in its centre you will see a little red spot with small lines radiating from it in every direction. Watch that centre closely, and you will perceive that it pulsates quite as regularly as your own heart. What is it? Well may you ask with wonder; but that is the primary process in the development of a "new creature" in order to a birth of the creature itself. That egg does not breathe, never has breathed; no atmospheric air can reach its centre, yet there is life there, a life germ, a life centre; and in putting on its organism it begins precisely where every other life, whether animal, vegetable, or Christian, must begin—with the heart; for "out of it are the issues of life." But the egg existed before the life in it existed there. True, it existed elsewhere, and had to be begotten there; and so with us, and the Christ-life in us. And there must be a heart work in it; hence, "believing with the heart unto righteousness" is absolutely a necessary pre-requisite of Christ-life in us. A head belief, simply, will not do; it is not enough; it will not reach the fountain of life; and it is from and in the deepest innermost and hidden recesses of our being that this new creative process must begin, if begun at all, and in its beginning Christ must plant the life-seed in us, through the eternal Spirit, by his truth, and it must then be watered by the dew of his grace, until in its progressive development it shall find its completion in putting on a glorified body in the morning of the resurrection, in perfect harmony with and in obedience to "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," which shall make us free from the law of sin and death, in full and everlasting redemption, where faith shall be lost in sight, and hope shall realize a full fruition. Christ, who has deposited this life-germ in us, will hold us responsible for a faithful discharge of our trust in the performance of our daily work, until that life-force in us is fully prepared to be thus arrayed in its heavenly raiment of immortal beauty and unfading glory, in his everlasting kingdom, when born of the Spirit.

Olena, Ohio.

What do those figures mean? To different minds, different meanings will be attached. The figures alone, without any thing connected with them, simply represent the next year of our Lord, to follow the present.

To every purpose there is a time. God has an appointed day for the judgment of this world. Patriarchs, prophets and apostles, with multitudes of faithful martyrs, have stretched their longing eyes into the future, and earnestly cried—"How long?" Promises made unto the fathers long, long ago, have been believed in and waited for. Promises of land, of substance, of a new earth, a new Jerusalem, where no sorrow will be forever; of death swallowed up in victory, by this corruptible putting on incorruption, and this mortal putting on immortality; all culminating in a time—yea, a set time to favor Zion.

In the "times of restitution," God is to send Jesus. "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give unto every man according as his work shall be." When, oh, when shall these things be? Is this anxious cry ever to be answered? Must the martyred millions continue forever their anxious, importunate cry—How long? Must the saints' cry of Dan. 12—"How long to the end of these wonders"—be forever unanswered? Is there to be no stop to the busy current of this world? Must wars and tumults, hurricanes and whirlwinds, storms and tempests, floods and fires, earthquakes and tidal waves, and dreadful cyclones, carrying devastation and death in their track, continue their fearful work forever?

Ah! no. There is to be an end, and that at an appointed time. When is it? Will it be this year? Will it be next? There are many faithful, humble souls, who come to the honest conclusion that 1873 is the year marked by prophecy for the termination of the period of Dan. 12—1335 days. The signs of these days, foretold by Christ and his apostles, find their counterpart now. The power of papacy now in the dust; the world in expectation of some great change—all, all speak in tones not to be mistaken, The morning cometh, and also the night.

Will Jesus come next year, and bring his weary bride home?

"O, wake thy slumbering virgins,
Send forth the solemn cry,
Let all thy saints repeat it—
The Bridegroom draweth nigh.
May all our lamps be burning,
Our loins well girded be,
Each longing heart preparing
With joy thy face to see."

It will do us no harm to live just as though we knew his coming would be delayed no longer. To the dear loving bride, the thought of the Bridegroom's being so near, affords comfort and joy in the extreme. To cold-hearted ones, the news will afford no comfort. Bride of the Lamb, awake! trim thy lamp, and go forth to meet him.

O God! bless thy dear church, and bring them speedily to the heights of Zion. Avenge the blood of thy servants, and bring in the ransomed to Zion, with songs and everlasting joy on their heads. Amen.

J. D. MERRIAM.

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 8.

E. S. WILLARD.

God's closing up Dispensational Message to this Age.

Surely—
"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."
And oft—
"Behind a frowning Providence,
He hides a smiling face."

It is always safe to act upon principle and never succumb to evil to gain a transient peace that will only prove a snare. But rather, Mordecai-like, to stand up for the right if it does bring sackcloth and ashes, and loud and bitter cries. The crown of gold and the royal apparel are in reserve.

In fleeing into the wilderness from that Jezebel-like spirit of oppression—slavery, we little knew what God had in reservation for us there. As he sent his angel to minister to his weary and forlorn servant Elijah as he lay sleeping under the juniper tree, and he went in the strength of that repeated repast forty days and forty nights to Horeb the Mount of God, so did God prepare for us in that wilderness "a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined." A feast that has lasted us almost as many years as Elijah's journey was days; yea, and will last us on to the true Mount of God and to that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God. Amen and Amen.

Our removal to Oswego, Indiana, was in June of 1841, and in the spring of 1842, a new element in Christianity was introduced among us. This element was the counterpart of the message of John the Baptist—"Know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Lu. 21: 31. And here let me strike the highest note of praise to God that our ears were ever saluted with this joyful sound—"Behold He cometh"—he cometh to judge the earth. David said—"Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fullness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord; for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth; he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." Ps. 96: 11-13.

If at the first Advent "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward men" was sung by a multitude of the heavenly host, how much more shall earth be glad and heaven sing when at the Second Advent the "Head-stone" of the great temple shall be brought forth with shoutings, crying, "Grace, grace unto it." Zech. 4: 7. When we saw this great event in its scriptural position as David saw it, like him, we called upon our soul and all that was within us to praise the Lord and to rejoice before him. We ceased to look for a restitution before the coming of the Restorer. This was the first difficulty to be solved—a thousand years of glory before the coming of Jesus! So effectually had this Whitbyan theory overspread the christian world that I do not remember of but once before hearing it questioned.

But we searched the Scriptures and there we found the wheat and tares growing together until the harvest (Matt. 13: 30) and the harvest to be "the end of the world," verse 39th. The righteous and the wicked dwelling together as in the days of Noah and Lot. Lu. 17: 26-30. That the mission of the gospel is not to convert the world but to gather out of it (Acts 15: 14) a people for his name to be saved at the judgment, which is at the appearing and kingdom of Jesus. 2 Tim. 4: 1. Of this fancied field of clean wheat to win the coming of the heavenly "reapers" for which I was willing to deny myself of every comfort of this life, and to live on bread and water to hasten, we found not a trace in the Bible; hence gave it up as a "fable." This was a blessed discovery and brought the coming of our Lord a thousand years nearer. How contemptible this long-cherished tradition appeared to us now! The contrast was often brought forcibly to my mind. Once on coming up from the cellar my eyes rested upon a number of decaying squashes awaiting a speedy removal, and I exclaimed, "A millennium with a cellar full of rotten pumpkins!" How preposterous! How the truth shone in contrast! The instrument whom God, who had all the world to choose from, was pleased to use to proclaim these "glad tidings" in our ears rose out of obscurity in our very midst, where God had hidden him, like John "in the desert, till the day of his shewing unto Israel."

The light on prophecy which, like the star of Bethlehem, had risen in the East had traveled to the West and there shone in upon a family from Massachusetts living in a log cottage reared by their own hands, after having felled the trees in the dense forest to make a place for it. Here for years they had dwelt and by the most untiring industry and frugality had gathered the comforts of life, and many of its luxuries; such as bearing orchards, small fruits, milk and butter, and honey in abundance, with fatted fowl, and all the comforts of a farm. Here lived Stedman A. Chaplin and Sarah his wife, a true helpmate both in the flesh and in the Lord, with their growing family of dutiful children. His venerable parents, true sympathizers with him in the "blessed hope," lived approximate upon a farm of their own—also a brother a believer, and his family, two miles distant.

As John, the promised Elijah (Matt. 17: 12), to fulfill his likeness to his great prototype (2 Kings 1: 8) had his raiment of camel's hair and a leathern girdle about his loins, so did this herald of the fulfillment of John's closing up message—"The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together" (Isa. 40: 5), have his raiment of "fear not," that could face unharmed the storms, mud and slosh, that lay in the way of his mission. Dressed in "home-spun" prepared at the hands of his wife and mother from the fleece of his own flock, and dyed from the bark of his own woods, did this young man, now about thirty years of age, go forth at the bidding of Israel's God to proclaim in private houses, schoolhouses, barns and churches, as the occasion afforded, a message that is second to none on record. Possessing an intellect of the first order and a mind richly stored with learning even in Euclid and the languages, and above all with Bible literature, combined with all the modest simplicity and self distrust of Gideon did he make his appearance among us; and, like Gideon who at God's behest threw down the altar of Baal and reared an altar for God upon the rock, did he, as a "scribe instructed unto the kingdom of heaven," attack the whole system of "fables" to which the church had been turned "from the truth" (2 Tim. 4: 4), and demolish it before our wondering gaze, and set up the truth of God instead thereof upon his own base.

During these transition months "we were like them that dream—then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing." Then said we—"The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad." Ps. 126.

The last Lord's day in August 1842 was one of paramount interest among us. On that day there was a great sacrifice in the house of Father Chaplin, and the saints of God for many miles around were called to the sacrifice—and there Stedman, his son, like David in the presence of his brethren, was anointed to the holy office of the ministry. The Spirit of the Lord was present in melting tenderness upon the hearts of his children; and we wept for very joy that God had raised up and qualified this young man and given him such a spirit of consecration in this our hour of need. The tears, so unaccustomed to flow, now coursed down his cheeks as he knelt to receive the hands of the consecrators; he felt the responsibilities assumed, and, like the spirit of Moses upon the seventy elders, his spirit diffused itself upon all present. It was one of those scenes never to be forgotten. A mother's wrestling prayers were answered before her eyes, a father's fondest hopes realized, and a star of the first magnitude manifested in our spiritual constellation, and many hearts rejoicing in the hope of future guidance and light. To crown the whole we gathered around the table of the Lord, who was in our midst and made himself known to us in the breaking of bread. Blessed Jesus! Thou art the Alpha and the Omega of all our hopes.

Elder Chaplin was now serving the church (Baptist) at Oswego once a month, according to the custom in this new country, and also sister churches monthly, thus preaching every Lord's day in a different locality. Under his wise management and "single eye" things moved on smoothly; the light gradually shining more and more into our darkened minds, and we in our simplicity talking it out to each other, and asking from time to time as we met in private and in social meetings—Can these things be so? Thus we seemed a church of learners, and had you stepped in to some of our social meetings you might have thought us all rejoicing in the hope of soon seeing Jesus; and had you then told us that this truth would divide this church we should have answered—Friend, you know not whereof you affirm.

In January, 1843, the Ministerial Conference met at Oswego, and protracted its efforts, for an ingathering into the church, three weeks; twenty-eight were added. The course pursued by Elder Brown, the State missionary, during this meeting relative to the doctrine of the second coming of Jesus near at hand, also toward those who were proclaiming it, awakened a great interest to know whether these things were so. He bitterly opposed it in private conversation, and once in the presence of a large audience denounced it in severe terms. It being generally known that Eld. S. A. Chaplin, who was present, and had labored throughout the meeting but who had not struck a jarring note therein, was a believer, and abundantly able to give a reason of the hope that was in him; he was solicited at the close of this protracted effort to spend another week in giving a course of lectures on the evidences from the word of God, and the signs of the times, of the Advent near. This he did single-handed and alone, without so much as even the countenance of his brethren in the ministry. But the Lord stood by him and gave him countenance and support, and his labor was not in vain. It was a perfect Joshua and Caleb defence, in the face of unbelieving modern Israel, of the return of "the King of the Jews," in God's own promised time and way, to possess, with the spiritual Israel, the antitypical Canaan.

It was but the further development of that new element among us that was destined, like the rod of Moses, to swallow up all opposing elements—and, like Ezekiel's river, to gradually rise until it could not be passed over, waters to swim in—Praise God!

And now the Lord prepared me in spirit for what was before me. While in secret prayer, the impression seized me that deep affliction abided me. The Spirit of the Lord drew me to remain long at the mercy-seat. Cares pressed but still I lingered until I could say—Only go thou with me through the dark valley and I will fear no evil. Only let me see thy hand in it all, and I will say, Not my will but thine be done. I came out of that room a chastened child; tears of submission had bathed my face. I had kissed the uplifted rod in the hand of my Father and taken refuge in his arms. O such assurances of his love as he gave me then! It overbalanced the prospect before me dark as it was. The importance of this season afterwards appeared, for it proved to be the last I enjoyed for many weeks.

At this period husband was attacked with violent fever, and so deadly was the type that from the first he was unable to converse except during its partial remission a little while in the morning. The second week brought evident tokens of approaching dissolution. Physicians from far and near were in attendance, and many prayers were ascending to God that, if it were possible, his life might be spared.

On entering his room one afternoon his appearance was such that it seemed to me he could not survive an hour. Two faithful friends were in attendance but neither of them dared offer a word of encouragement. I hastened to my Father, and fell before him and in consternation of soul cried out—"Lord, what art thou about to do?" Over and over these words rolled from my lips and were the substance of all I could utter, and then I returned to the sick room; but he did not revive so as to respond to any address until nine o'clock in the evening and then only faintly. At one o'clock he could speak and in the morning could converse freely. But the conviction rested upon every mind that he could not survive another paroxysm of fever. This critical moment was deemed vital by his partner and some others to introduce items of business, which they said could be transacted only by himself. I sat trembling, forbearing a word for myself and infants, and begged that they cut not short the hope we might have of his life by the introduction of business; but husband offered words of soothing, saying, he hoped it would not harm him; and so it proved, for the time passed for the return of the destroyer and he came not. Judge ye of our joy! yet how many days he fluttered between life and death; but it pleased God to spare him.

At this point, when I could say, "All thy waves and thy billows have gone over me," our second son, Rolando, now nearly four years of age, and for disposition and comeliness of person, the flower of our little group of three, was taken very ill, and in one short week he died. This severe stroke brought a relapse upon his father who had been able to walk about his room a little. His grief was extreme, but it was moderated by the settled conviction that God had suffered it, and therefore this affliction would work for our good. The maternal invocation upon this little stranger was—The Lord glorify himself in the child! Has he done this, I asked, even in this dark dispensation? If so, why should I mourn? By the help of God I will not, but he only knows the anguish of my heart. But I have hope to meet him when our Savior comes. "As a child" Rolando was looking for Jesus. Never shall I forget his little voice calling to me one evening after I had left him for the night—"Mama, mama," and on hastening to his little bed he asked—"Will Jesus come before morning?" I dropped beside him and talked freely with him about this blessed event, then again offered up a fervent prayer that he might be ready to meet him at his coming. I believe he now sleeps in Jesus, who said—"Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." Mark 10: 14. And those "who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." 1 Thess. 4: 14.

"PEACE! BE STILL!"

E. A. ALEXANDER.

Is there any thing, in this world where confusion and discord reign, more consoling to the mind of man than the thought that a day is fast approaching when all these perplexing scenes of earth shall be changed; and the Prince of peace, whose right it is to reign, will sit upon the throne of his father David, and rule the world in righteousness and truth? Peace—can the mind grasp the full meaning that word conveys, or can the imagination picture it? Not until some bitter experience is passed; when the heart is overwhelmed with sorrow or oppressed with life's cares and burdens, then it is we realize the blessedness of that peace, which the world can never give nor take away.

We see a few timid disciples who have followed their Master in his many acts of love and kindness towards the souls and bodies of men; now they are upon the sea, tossed about by the tempest which is raging around them, expecting every moment their little ship will sink to rise no more, but Jesus is sleeping calmly upon a pillow, and when in their great alarm they awoke him, in the majesty of his Godhead he arises and rebukes the winds, saying, "Peace! be still!" and immediately there was a great calm.

Now do we not see daily storms of strife and variance amongst those who are reared at the same hearthstone, and who of all others should dwell together in unity; and are not our hearts pained and grieved that it should be so? And then again we witness the envy and divisions which exist in the household of God, between those who profess to love the same Savior and to be governed by the principles laid down in the Bible; the storm arising to such a height sometimes, that the very foundation of God's church is at stake; and we tremble lest is should be destroyed; and oh! how our hearts rejoice when at moments like these, we hear the divine Redeemer's voice, rising above the angry billows, and saying to the waves of discord and confusion—"Peace! be still!" Then what a change takes place. How the spirit of love prevails amongst those who but a short time before were full of hard and bitter feelings; now the hand is extended, and hearts are melted into forgiveness, each towards the other.

May we ever hear in our various trials and afflictions, which seem sometimes greater than we can bear, those gracious words addressed to us, to soothe our griefs to rest, and calm our troubled minds—"Peace! be still!" And as our feet are treading the valley of the shadow of death, even in that trying hour, when doubts and fears may arise, and the enemy of our souls assails us, may all our trust be placed upon that blessed Rock of our salvation, who shall whisper in tones of gentleness—"Peace! be still!"

WHITE AS SNOW.—Isa. 1: 18.

"White as snow!" Oh, what a promise
For the heavy-laden breast!
When by faith the soul receives it,
Weariness is changed to rest.

Red like crimson, deep as scarlet—
Scarlet of the deepest dye,
Are the manifold transgressions
That would else upon me lie.

God alone can count their number;
God alone can look within;
O, the sinfulness of sinning!
O, the guilt of every sin.

God's own law, so just and holy,
Proves my sin and shame and loss;
But what proves it still more clearly,
Is the story of the cross.

Heavy-laden, worn and weary,
To the promise let me go;
Though your sins be red as crimson,
They shall be as white as snow.

"White as snow!" Oh, have you watched it,
Softly carpeting the ground,
Wreathing with a wreath of silver
Every common thing around?

"White as snow!" Can my transgressions
Thus be wholly washed away,
Leaving not a trace behind them,
Like a cloudless summer day?

Yes, at once, and that completely,
Through the blood of Christ, I know,
All my sins, though red like crimson,
May become as white as snow.

I believe the glorious record
God has given of his Son;
I accept the free salvation
His atoning death has won.

Yet, though free from condemnation,
I am not in heaven yet;
What it cost—this free salvation—
Never let my soul forget!

Much forgiven! Quite forgiven!
Once for all, yet daily, too,
Let me live near Him who saves me,
Let me keep the cross in view.

Much forgiven! Then let boasting
Be forever cast aside;
Shall a newly pardoned sinner
Dare to lift his head in pride?

Much forgiven! O, my Savior,
If my present state be such,
May the further words describe me,
This poor sinner loveth much!

THE WORK OF GOD.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

"Hearken unto this, ... stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God." Job 37: 14.

The man to whom these words were spoken was called "a perfect and an upright man," a man of mature age and experience, a man of integrity, a man possessed of great wealth formerly; and it was said of him that "this man was the greatest of all the men of the east." And although great calamities had befallen him, and he was brought very low at this time, he still held fast his integrity, and still continued to speak words of wisdom and truth, though aggravated and taunted by false friends, persecuted and shamefully treated by the "outcasts," whose fathers he would have disdained to have set with the dogs of his flock.

The speaker was a young man comparatively, yet he felt the "inspiration of the Almighty," and after waiting till Job had spoken, and his "three friends" had become silent, he was constrained to say, "Hearken to me; I also will show mine opinion." "When I had waited (for they spake not, but stood still, and answered no more) I said, I will answer also my part, ... for I am full of matter, the spirit within me constraineth me." Speaking to Job, he said, "Remember that thou magnify his work which men behold. Every man may see it; man may behold it afar off." Then he spoke of the light, and the clouds, the rain also, the thunder and the lightning, the snow and the frost, the whirlwind and the cold, thus directing attention to those works which were to be seen, or felt, or heard, by all. But is there not a special work of God, aside from these which "every man" may behold? a work which concerns us to know, to feel, to experience? How is it, brethren? Is mere theory a satisfying portion? Is it enough that we acknowledge God in his works of nature, and assent (theoretically) to the truth of his revealed word? No, no, we must have more than this; we must go beyond this.

Certain people asked Jesus—"What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" His answer was—"This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Now we are getting nearer to the essential point.

"Believe on Him." Do you believe? All men have not faith. Have you faith? We must get nearer. It is not enough to believe on him, for thousands profess to believe who never knew him, and who are not of his fold nor of his flock. The word on does not give the full force and meaning of the original. The word into comes nearer. "Believe into him." This is the work of God. This is being "grafted in" to the living vine. O, my brethren, are we living branches, fruit-bearing branches, of the true vine? Thousands of professors are not; but what are we? Are we in Christ? Have we been made new by the wondrous work of God? Are we awake to these things? We believe that the great trumpet is about to sound that will wake the dead. Shall we sleep on till then? Or will we awake now, and make our calling and election sure? Have we oil in our vessels, with our lamps? Are our lamps trimmed and burning? O, Lord, send out thy light and thy truth. Arouse the sleeping virgins ere it is too late!

To you, my dear brethren, I would say very earnestly, and in love, if you are not quite ready, not all on the altar, do not delay another hour. Delays were always dangerous, but now more so than ever. Now is the accepted time. Seek a closer union with Christ now. Jesus says—"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." "It is God that worketh in you." Now it is our part to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. Haste thee! "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed."

BURNING OF ROME.

E. PRATT.

Many have supposed that the expression (Rev. 18: 8)—"He shall be utterly burned with fire"—must be literally fulfilled by the burning of Rome by the Italians. That there is a crusade forming by the Catholics for the purpose of retaking Rome, is apparent even from the Encyclical of the pope. There is also a scheme on foot to meet such an emergency, and a society already formed which is determined, rather than yield the city, to burn it. The following is from the New York Herald of Aug. 11th, 1871:—

"THE ALFIERI SOCIETY OF ITALY.—The Alfieri Society is one of the new institutions of Rome. The members are said to be numerous, but the outside world has not yet been made acquainted with much concerning it beyond the fact of its existence, and the object it proposes to accomplish. The latter will be best ascertained from a publication which appears in the extreme revolutionary paper, the Gazetta del Popolo of Turin, probably one of the official organs of the Alferists. The publication in question is entitled Statutes of the Society, and the following articles may be taken as a fair sample:—

'Art. 3d. Every one claiming admission to membership must have for political basis Italian unity, and for religious principles free thought, or he must belong to any sect or schism whatsoever antagonistic to Catholicity.

'Art. 4th. He shall be bound to sustain, propogate, and spread the policy and duty of an alliance between Italy and Germany. In religious matters he shall combat Catholicity by every means by supporting Protestantism.

'Art. 5th. To devise and prosecute the abolition of the papacy, the removal of the pope from Rome, and the suppression of the civil rights of the priests.

'Art. 6th. In case of foreign war, the society shall proceed to operate upon its field of action, even before hostilities shall have been formally declared. First, by burning as many churches as possible, and especially the Vatican. Second, in compelling all the priests, and those whose principles are manifestly hostile to the nation, to emigrate; and Third, in exciting the masses to the historic traditions of the Sicilian Vespers.' (The era of the general massacre of the French in Sicily on Easter evening, 1282, at the toll of the bells for vespers.)"

God has put it into their hearts to fulfill his will. "And she shall be utterly burned with fire." Amen.

— "My Beloved is mine," for he has given himself to me; "and I am his," for he has bought me with his own blood! Living or dying, we are "the Lord's."

— The true christian is like an anagram. Read him up or down, right or left, and he always bears the name of his Master.

— He who would reprove the world must be one whom the world cannot reprove.

— A steady gaze at God's love to us, and his promises in the gospel, is the best means to excite our love to God.

— Man, being essentially active, must find in activity his joy, as well his beauty and glory; and labor, like everything else that is good, is its own reward.

— Study contentment. In these days of inordinate greed and self-indulgence, keep down the accursed spirit of grasping. What they don't have makes thousands wretched.

— Look at your mercies with both eyes; at your troubles with only one.

— God's gifts put man's best dreams to shame.

McCheyne said, "I should pray much in peaceful days that I may be guided rightly when days of trial come."

— No indulence of passion destroys the spiritual nature so much as respectable selfishness.

— Action hangs, as it were, "dissolved" in speech, in thoughts whereof speech is the shadow; and precipitates itself therefrom. The kind of speech in a man betokens the kind of action you will get from him.

BEING SOMEBODY.

"What is the use of being in the world unless you are somebody?" said a boy to his friend.

"Sure enough, and I mean to be," answered the other. "I began this very day. I mean to be somebody."

Ashton looked George in the face. "Began to-day! how? What do you mean to be?"

"A Christian boy, and so grow up to be a Christian man," said George. "I believe that is the greatest somebody for us to be."

George is right. There is no higher manhood than Christian manhood; and it is in the power of every boy to reach that. Every boy cannot be rich; every boy cannot be President; every boy cannot be judge; but God asks you all to a Christian manhood—to be his sons, and so, with his Son Jesus Christ, to be heirs of heaven.

WAKING GRANDMA WITH A KISS.—A sweet little incident is related by a writer. She says: I asked a little boy last evening—

"Have you called your grandma to tea?"

"Yes. When I went to call her she was asleep, and I didn't know how to wake her. I didn't wish to hallo at grandma, nor shake her; so I kissed her cheek, and that woke her very softly. Then I ran into the hall, and said, pretty loud, 'Grandma, tea is ready,' and she never knew what woke her."—Ex.

A LORD IN THE FAMILY.—A pompous, silly school-boy was one day boasting how many rich and noble relations he had; and, having exhausted his topic, he turned with an important air, and asked one of his school fellows:

"Are there any 'lords' in your family?"

"Yes," said the little fellow, "there is one, at least; for I have often heard my mother say that the Lord Jesus Christ is our eldest brother."

The boy was right; and as he grew up, it became his privilege to know more of this elder brother, and tell to famishing multitudes the tidings of his grace.

Blessed are they who have one Lord in the family, and who know him as their elder brother and everlasting friend.—Sunday School Messenger.

WHAT HE WAS GOOD FOR.—"What are you good for?" said a gentleman to a little boy.

"Good to make a man of," was the prompt, appropriate, and significant reply.

Teacher, think of it, and be careful what kind of man you make.

"I HAVE given my tongue to God," said a little boy, "so I must take care how I use it."

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

A PLEA FOR NIGHT AIR.

But in heaven's name what air, as Miss Nightingale says, can we breathe at night except night air? The choice lies between pure night air from without and foul night air from within; most people prefer the latter, it is true, but it is night air all the same, though they may not be aware of the fact.

Did you ever test these two kinds of night air by going early in the morning into the room of a person brought up to sleep with closed windows, and immediately afterward into one where the sash has been lowered six inches from the top, and raised six from the bottom? Well, what did you find? In one, however pretty and well arranged, however healthy, neat, and well-bred its occupant, a smell of bed-clothes, of damp towels, of dust, of carpet—all slight, but all indicative of that used-up condition of the atmosphere which is so fatal to a sleeper. In the other, no better situated or furnished; an elastic feel, a perfume of freshness which made breathing pleasant. Was it not so?

Or did you ever compare your own sensations after sleeping in fresh air with those produced after sleeping in foul? How many of the failures, the mischances of life, the morning dullness which hindered this or that, the refusal of the brain to work at a critical moment, the apathy, the blindness of perception, date back to that un-aired bed-room which sent us forth unrefreshed to our work, and ushered in a depressing and discouraged day.

But it is useless to contend with so deeply-rooted a prejudice. Let us go back to our exiled friend, who certainly has a day-time claim, though he be denied a nightly one, to our sufferance.

How few of us recognize, as the long winter creeps away, and, shrinking from the outward chill, we cower into fire-side corners and warm wraps, how day by day we are insensibly contenting ourselves with the same breathed over air which, scarcely renovated since, supplied our lungs yesterday and the day before. "Open the windows, indeed," we cry; "why, it's all we can do to exist with them tightly shut!"

Yes, but, parodox as it seems, there is warmth in the very cold which an open window would admit. That is, the oxygen of the purer air, quickening the circulation and bringing the temperature of head, hands, and feet into proper balance, will of itself induce a glow which helps the fire to rewarm the room after its airing. And with the equipoise of circulation good-humor comes, and cheerfulness, and the capacity to be amused. How we lose these things—how dull we grow stewing over registers, or before anthracite-burning stoves. The winter seems to get into us—our wits stiffen and freeze; we don't laugh or enjoy, we simply endure life, and with desperate longing sit waiting for the spring.—From "Home and Society;" Scribner's for March.

MILK AS A REMEDIAL AGENT.

Considerable has been said in medical journals concerning the value of milk as a remedial agent in certain diseases. We notice an interesting article upon this subject that lately appeared in the London Milk Journal in which it is stated on the authority of Dr. Benjamin Clark that in the East Indies warm milk is used to a great extent as a specific for diarrhœa. A pint every four hours will check the most violent diarrœa, stomach-ache, incipient cholera and dysentery. The milk should never be boiled, but only heated sufficiently to be agreeably warm, not too hot to drink. Milk which has been boiled is unfit for use. The writer gives several instances to show the value of this simple substance in arresting this disease, among which is the following. The writer says: "It has never failed in curing me in six or twelve hours, and I have tried it, I should think, fifty times. I have also given it to a dying man who had been subject to dysentery eight months, latterly accompanied by one continual diarrhœa, and it acted on him like a charm. In two days his diarrhœa was gone, in three weeks he became a hale, fat man, and now nothing that may hereafter occur will ever shake his faith in hot milk."

A writer also communicates to the Medical Times and Gazette, a statement of the value of milk in twenty-six cases of typhoid fevers in every one of which its great value was apparent. It checks diarrhœa, and nourishes and cools the body. People suffering from disease require food quite as much as those in health, and much more so in certain diseases, where there is rapid waste of the system. Frequently all ordinary food in certain diseases is rejected by the stomach, and even loathed by the patient; but nature, ever beneficent, has furnished a food that in all diseases is beneficial—in some directly curative. Such a food is milk. The writer in the journal last quoted, Dr. Alexander Yale, after giving particular observations upon the above mentioned, viz., its action in checking diarrhœa, its nourishing properties, and its action in cooling the body, says: "We believe that milk nourishes in fever, promotes sleep, wards off delirium, and, in fine, is the sine qua non in typhoid fever."

We have also lately tested the value of milk in scarlet fever, and learn that it is now recommended by the medical faculty in all cases of this often distressing children's disease. Give all the milk the patient will take; even during the period of the greatest fever, it keeps up the strength of the patient, acts well upon the stomach, and is every way a blessed thing in this sickness. Parents, remember it and not fear to give if your dear ones are afflicted with this disease.—Vermont Watchman.

THE END OF ALL THINGS.

The end of all things is at hand;
The end of life, the end of time.
Lord, even now our footsteps stand
On the eternal brink sublime.
A moment more, our eyes may see
The splendors of eternity.

The end of all things is at hand;
The end of each relation here;
Nor kindred tie, nor friendship's band,
However strong, however dear,
But must at one fell stroke be riven,
Unless their roots be fixed in heaven.

The end of all things is at hand;
The end of our probation's space;
None then can linger on the strand,
Nor for repentance find a place.
Hark, how it sounds along the shore!
Then time shall be no more, no more.

The end of all things is at hand;
The end of pain, the end of sin—
Of exile in this foreign land—
Assaults without, and strife within.
The end of Satan's short-lived power,
The end of death's terrific power.

The end of all things is at hand;
Yes, of our faith the end draws nigh.
Now watching, waiting, Lord, we stand—
Soon will thy glory meet our eye.
Amidst creation's funeral wail
Thy long-for advent we shall hail.

HARMONY OF THE SCRIPTURES.

O. R. FASSETT.

The Scriptures are a harmony. They are in harmony with themselves; and one part is in harmony with every other part of the word of God. It must be so, since God is the author through the medium of the Holy Spirit. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." 2 Tim. 3: 16; 2 Pet. 1: 21. It has ever been the effort of atheists, deists, skeptics, and infidels, to make out that the Scriptures are a disharmony, filled with contradictions and discrepancies; knowing that if they could establish this as a matter of fact, they could destroy their divine inspiration. But all these efforts to this day have proved abortive, and will to the end. D'Aubigne likens all these attempts to "so many ants endeavoring to undermine Mt. Blanc!"

Apparent contradictions and discrepancies, then, are in the Bible, but they vanish before a critical examination and study of them; and all that it wants is a better knowledge of the Scriptures, to learn their beauty and power are a harmonious whole. All opinions, theories, and theological systems and doctrines, which do not accord with the Scriptures, as well as harmonize the Scriptures themselves, must be false, erroneous, and unscriptural. With this legitimate fact, it must be confessed that most of the prevailing doctrines and theological systems of the present day are gravely at fault, inasmuch as they do not agree with the teaching of the Scriptures, and introduce into them endless confusion and contradictions. Outsiders and unbelievers, seeing the confusion into which the Christian world is thrown by their various interpretations of the Scriptures, and the conflicting opinions which prevail among theologians, are led to reject the Bible itself as the sole source of all these multitudinous beliefs, and as giving rise to the thousand conflicting religious opinions which prevail throughout Christendom. Whereas the trouble arises from that ignorance of the Scriptures which lamentably prevails, even in the professed church of God; the figurative and metaphorical interpretations put upon them, and the traditional corruptions grafted into the Scriptures, which make them void and contradictory.

It is irreverently said—"The Bible is like an old fiddle; you can play any tune upon it you please." I repudiate the assertion intended by such statement. It is sometimes repeated by professed believers, when driven to the wall in an argument which shows up their errors and corrupted religious theories unfounded in the Scriptures, but in the religious teachings of the age. The Bible is a well-tuned and perfect instrument (adopting the figure), and in most perfect harmony; and all that is necessary is a skillful player to make its harmony of sounds and charming music manifest. A most perfect musical instrument, all in requisite tune, with a novice to play upon it, would make it produce such a jargon of sounds as to set one's nerves in craziness at the attempted melody. But a well practised and educated musician would make it discourse such wonderful harmony of sounds and charming symphony, as to carry you away with the rapture of the melody to the highest admiration. Such is the Bible. There are novices, who show themselves to be of this class by their unskillful interpretations, and the muddled and contradictory theories and doctrines they teach. But there are also those who "study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen who need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2: 15), who give to the Scriptures such interpretations as the Holy Spirit teaches in the sacred volume itself; and the people are beginning to see the Bible in its true light, and admirable merits; and that the fault of the diversity of views and contradictory systems of theology lies not at the door of the Bible, but of the men who are ignorant of the knowledge it contains, and are unskillful interpreters and expounders of it. There are of interpretation, which should be understood generally, and adhered to rigidly, in the expositions and teachings of the Scriptures.

1. The Bible is given to the world of mankind, as a revelation from God, for them to understand and profit therefrom.

2. The simple, plain, and intelligible texts, and parts of the word of God, which can be understood as they are written by the common people, should be so interpreted and received by all the world.

3. The literal texts, with their common-sense meaning, should not be converted into figurative language or sense; nor figurative language into a literal sense or meaning.

4. The plain and easy-to-be-understood Scriptures should always be the exponents and interpreters of the more obscure and harder-to-be-understood portions; and not the latter, with the sense put upon them by any one, govern the meaning of the former.

5. The simple, plain and intelligible Scriptures should not be interpreted or explained away, by the figures, metaphors, similes, parables, or symbols, of the word of God. This is a common error of our times, and followed by the learned divines, to darken the understanding of the multitude, hide the counsel and knowledge of the Almighty, that they may retain place, pride, and power. God will yet make manifest their folly, and bring them to strict account for the mischief they are doing.

5. Figures of speech, metaphors, hyperboles, parables, symbols, etc., should be interpreted and explained, as given in the Scriptures themselves (as most of them are there explained); or as by common consent, and in general use.

It is by not observing such common-sense rules, patent to every intelligent mind, that endless confusion of ideas and interpretations prevail at this day, to the disparagement of the Scriptures, and division of the religious world; ruinous alike to the influence of both the Bible and the church of the living God. Every man, and every religious sect and class of teachers almost, have come to interpret the word of God according to his own or their united denominational fancy. And what will be the end thereof? Almost every one we converse with on religious and biblical topics, in this day, has his or her own private judgment or opinion respecting these things, and mostly made up from traditional teaching, or the opinions of the leaders they follow, or ignorant and fancied imaginings. Thank God, there are a few who, like the noble Bereans, are searching the Scriptures daily, and making them the sole arbiter of their faith, as interpreted in a common-sense way.

THE SEVEN YEARS WAR.

J. S. WHITE.

The length of this war has been called in question. I have not yet seen any authority for saying that the war between the Jews and Romans was seven years. To prove that it was, we are referred to history, the only way to prove it. We are told that Marsh says this war lasted seven years. I do not know but he does say this; but if he does, there is quite a difference between him and Josephus. To make out the seven years war, we are told that "Nero began to reign Oct. 14th, A. D. 53"; and that "the war began on Jerusalem in the twelfth year of his reign." The writer says, "Add twelve to fifty-three, and you have A. D. 65, just where the seventy weeks ended, and the one week began." But if we add twelve years to Oct. 14th, A. D. 53, we are brought to Oct. 14th, A. D. 65. If the one week began in Oct., 65, it did not begin in the spring, in the month Nisan, 65. We are told that Nero reigned thirteen years and eight days, and that he died Oct. 22nd, A. D. 66. If he died at this date, then he did not reign but twelve years, by the author's own showing. Nero did not die in 66, unless every writer I have seen has made a mistake in saying that he died in 68. Among the number are Smith's "Classical Dictionary," and the "American Cyclopedia."

We are told that Vespasian was made emperor in 68. But history affirms that he "was proclaimed emperor the first of July, 69." It also says that Nero sent Vespasian to subdue the Jews at the end of 66, or the beginning of 67. From the time he arrived at Jerusalem to the end of the war, there were about two years and seven months.

This is seen by the following:—Josephus heads Book 3 thus—"Containing the interval of about one year, from Vespasian's coming to subdue the Jews, to the taking of Gamala." Book 4—"Containing the interval of about one year, from the siege of Gamala to the coming of Titus to besiege Jerusalem." Book 5, "Containing the interval of near six months, from the coming of Titus to besiege Jerusalem, to the great extremity to which the Jews were reduced." Book 6, "Containing the interval of about one month, from the great extremity to which the Jews were reduced, to the taking of Jerusalem by Titus."

Here we have about two years and seven months. Book 7, Josephus heads thus—"Containing the interval of about three years, from the taking of Jerusalem by Titus, to the sedition of the Jews at Cyrena."

In this book, chapter 1st, and second paragraph (the first is short), Josephus says, beginning with the first line—"But Cæsar resolved to leave there as a guard the tenth legion, with certain troops of horsemen, and companies of footmen. So having entirely completed this war, he was desirous to commend his whole army on account of the great exploits they had performed, and to bestow proper rewards on such as had signalized themselves therein."

Thus we see that when Jerusalem was taken, and much of it was destroyed, Josephus says—"So having entirely completed this war."

But we are told that "the end of the seven years war is not yet." That is true, for there was no seven years war. Josephus says the end of the war was not yet. That is, it was at the end of the two years, and about seven months from the time Vespasian arrived under the order of Nero. Cæsar left a guard of his army at Jerusalem after the war was brought to an end. This is what has been done at the end of nearly all wars. This is done by the victorious army to keep everything quiet, and to put down any disturbance or insurrection that might arise. This act does not prolong the war. The Prussians have had a garrison in France ever since that war ended; and they have had some work to do to keep things quiet. But the war ended when Paris was given up. So in the late war in our country, a portion of the army has been in the south to this day, to keep order, and to put down Ku-Klux operations. But the war ended when Richmond was taken and Gen. Lee surrendered.

Why are we directed to nearly the end of the three years, which Josephus has marked off, from the taking of Jerusalem, to find a point to make seven years from the spring or fall of the year 65? Why not go to the end of these three years in Book 7? For Josephus fills up the whole time in speaking of the war, of its results, and of the condition of the Jews. Is it because that would make eight years from the month Nisan, or from Oct. 65? I say spring or fall, for I do not know which, as the writer has both points, for the beginning of the one week, or seven years war.

We are referred to the latter part of the ninth chapter of Book 7, there being but eleven chapters in the book, to find a point for the ending of the war. There, Josephus notices in that place the slaughter of more than nine hundred Jews, men, women, and children, by their own hands. This took place, as he says, on the fifteenth day of the month Nisan, which answers to our April. It is said—"Now run back seven years, from the fifteenth day of the first month Nisan, which was the fourth year of Vespasian A. D. 72, and we shall reach the fifteenth day of the first month Nisan, A. D. 65, the very time the gate opened of its own accord, and in the twelfth year of Nero." So, by this, the writer would have us understand that the week, or seven years war, began in that month. But in another place he gives us to understand that the week began in Oct. 14th, 65. We find the account of the gate opening in Book 6, ch. 5, sec. 3. This and several other strange things took place at the feast which was on the eighth of Nisan. I find nothing in Josephus, nor from any other author, to show in what year that was; but I admit that it might have been A. D. 65. Now if the writer had read fifteen lines above the one about this gate, he would have seen that there was no war at that time, and no prospect of one. Josephus says—"Thus also before the Jews' rebellion, and before those commotions which preceded the war, when the people were come in great crowds to the feast of unleavened bread, on the eighth day of the month Nisan." This was the time this gate opened. But Josephus says this was before the Jews' rebellion, and before those commotions which preceded the war. By this it appears there was no rebellion, which was the cause of the war, and no excitement or commotion about anywhere when that feast was held. Why begin the war at a time when the people had never thought of it? The war could not have commenced anywhere near that time.

I have seen authority for saying that the war began somewhere in the year 66. And this is the earliest date I have seen. There is nothing in Josephus to show that the war began before the latter part of 66. And this agrees with what he has said of a man who cried "Wo to Jerusalem" for seven years and five months, and that he began his cry four years before the war commenced. It was but a short time before Vespasian was sent by Nero, as Josephus shows, that Cestius made a move upon the Jews, besieged the city, and then withdrew, without accomplishing anything. Whoever says that this war was seven years long, he says it in direct opposition to plain and positive statements of Josephus, who was an eye-witness of the war from the beginning to the end. If it be said that the war began in Nisan 65, Josephus shows that there was no rumor of a war at that time. And if it be said that the war extended two years after Jerusalem was taken, Josephus shows that when the city was taken, and what Jews that remained were taken prisoners, the war was at an end—"entirely completed." Hence Josephus cuts off a large slice from this seven years war at both ends.

As Vespasian was declared Emperor the first of July, 69, he would not reach his fourth year until July, 72; and he would be in the fourth year of his reign until July, 73. The month Nisan, or April, would fall in the spring of 73, and in his fourth year. It was in this month that the slaughter of over nine hundred Jews took place, not by the Romans, but by their own hands. Now if you run back from Nisan, in the year 73, which was in the fourth year of Vespasian, to Nisan 65, you have eight years. From the record Josephus makes of it, it is evident that the act referred to was done in Nisan, 73. For he places it as one of the last acts in his history of three years, after the end of the war. As proof of a seven years war, we are referred to a "note" in Josephus. I will give the "note" as we have it in the paper of Feb. 7th. "The whole number of Jews that were destroyed during the entire seven years, is summed up by Archbishop Usher out of Josephus, and amounts to 1,337,490." This is the quotation as we have it in the paper. I will now give the "note" as it is in the book. "The whole multitude of Jews that were destroyed during the entire seven years before this time in all the countries of, and bordering on, Judea, is summed up by Archbishop Usher, from Lypsius, out of Josephus, at the year seventy, and amounts to 1,337,490." I have emphasized the words which were left out of the quotation; from which quotation one might suppose that Bishop Usher meant by seven years, seven years war. Again, he might suppose this seven years began in Nisan 65, and ended in Nisan 72, as the writer brings it in to help him make out this time. The Bishop neither says nor intimates any such thing. It will be seen from the correct quotation, as I have given it, that the Bishop ends the seven years at the year 70. So, if the writer wishes to use this note to support his seven years' war, he must begin in A. D. 70, at the end of the war, and run back to 63 for its commencement. The Bishop makes up the number from Josephus during seven years with the destruction of the city, "at the year 70."

The war referred to, and of which much is said, is the war in which Jerusalem was taken, in A. D. 70. The cause of this war was the rebellion of the Jews against the Romans. We are told that the seven years war should be dated in the month Nisan, 65, at the feast, at which time the gate opened of its own accord. But Josephus says this feast was "before the Jews' rebellion, and before the commotions that preceded the war."

The city, the capital of the Jews, was taken, and those of the Jews that remained were taken prisoners, and the nation brought to an end in A. D. 70. To say "the end is not yet," is an absurdity of which Josephus is not guilty.

NOTE. We have been referred to Josephus, Book 2, ch. 14, sec. 9, to find that he says the war began in the twelfth of Nero's reign. There is nothing of the kind said in that place. Reference is thus made to show that Nero's twelfth year was A. D. 65. I find a note at the bottom of the page, under sections 1 and 2, as follows: "Florus, the wickedest of all the Roman procurators of Judea, and the immediate occasion of the Jewish war, at the twelfth year of Nero, and the seventeenth of Agrippa, or A. D. 66."

How does this prove that the twelfth year of Nero was in A. D. 65? The reign of Nero, in Smith's "Classical Dictionary," is thus,—A. D. 54–68. This brings his twelfth year into 66, just where the above note places it. The note was not written by Josephus. In reference to it, the writer did not give us the date,—A. D. 66, which puts an entirely different construction on what he tries to prove by quoting a part of the note. J. S. W.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

JOHN WESLEY.

Q. 12. Does, then, Christian perfection imply any more than sincerity?

A. Not if you mean by that word love filling the heart, expelling pride, wrath, evil desires, self-will; rejoicing evermore, praying without ceasing, and in everything giving thanks. But I doubt few use sincerity in this sense. Therefore I think the old word is best.

A person may be sincere who has all his natural tempers, pride, wrath, lust, self-will, in some degree. But he is not perfect in love till his heart is cleansed from these and all its other corruptions.

To clear this point a little farther: I know many that love God with all their heart. He is their one desire, their one delight, and they are continually happy in him. They love their neighbor as themselves. They feel as sincere, fervent, constant a desire for the happiness of every man, good or bad, friend or enemy, as for their own. They rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks. Their souls are continually streaming up to God in holy joy, prayer, and praise. This is a point of fact. * * *

Q. But can one that is saved from sin be tempted?

A. Yes: for Christ was tempted.

Q. 15. However, what you call temptation I call the corruption of my heart. And how will you distinguish one from the other?

A. In some cases it is impossible to distinguish, without the direct witness of the Spirit. But in general one may distinguish thus:—

One commends me. Here is a temptation to pride; but instantly my soul is humbled before God. And I feel no pride; of which I am as sure as that pride is not humility. A man strikes me. Here is a very strong temptation to anger. But my heart overflows with love, and I feel no anger at all; of which I am as sure as that love and anger are not the same. A woman solicits me. Here is a temptation to lust. But in the instant I shrink back; and I feel no desire or lust at all; of which I am as sure as that my hand is cold or hot. Thus it is, if I am tempted by a present object; and it is just the same if, when it is absent, the devil recalls a commendation, an injury, or a woman, to my mind. In the instant the soul repels the temptation, and remains filled with pure love. And the difference is still plainer when I compare my present state with my past, wherein I felt temptation and corruption too.

Q. 16. But how do you know that you are sanctified, saved from your inbred corruption?

A. I can know it no otherwise than I know that I am justified. Hereby know we that we are of God, in either sense, by the Spirit he hath given us.

We know it by the witness and by the fruit of the Spirit; and first by the witness. As when we were justified, the Spirit bore witness with our spirit, that our sins were forgiven; so when we were sanctified, he bore witness, that they were taken away. Indeed, the witness of sanctification is not always clear at first (as neither is that of justification); neither is it afterward always the same, but like that of justification sometimes stronger and sometimes fainter. Yea, and sometimes it is withdrawn. Yet, in general, the latter testimony of the Spirit is both as clear and as steady as the former.

Q. 17. But what need is there of it, seeing sanctification is a real change, not a relative one only, like justification?

A. But is the new birth a relative change only? Is not this a real change? Therefore if we need no witness of our sanctification, because it is a real change, for the same reason we should need none that we are born of, or are, the children of God.

Q. 18. But does not sanctification shine by its own light?

A. And does not the new birth too? Sometimes it does. And so does sanctification; at others it does not. In the hour of temptation Satan clouds the work of God, and injects various doubts and reasonings, especially in those who have either very weak or very strong understandings. At such times there is absolute need of that witness; without which the work of sanctification, not only could not be discerned, but could no longer subsist. Were it not for this, the soul could could not then abide in the love of God; much less could it rejoice evermore, and in everything give thanks. In these circumstances, therefore, a direct testimony that we are sanctified, is necessary in the highest degree. "But I have no witness that I am saved from sin; and yet I have no doubt of it." Very well. As long as you have no doubt, it is enough; when you have, you will need that witness.

Q. 19. But what scripture makes mention of any such thing, or gives any reason to expect it?

A. That scripture, 1 Cor. 2: 12, "We have received not the spirit which is of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we may know the things which are freely given us of God."

Now surely sanctification is one of the things which are freely given us of God. And no possible reason can be assigned why this should be expected, when the apostle says, "We receive the Spirit for this very end, that we know the things which are thus freely given us."

Is not the same thing implied in that well known scripture, Rom. 8: 16, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God?" Does he only witness this to those who are children of God in the lowest sense? Nay, but to those also who are such in the highest sense? And does he not witness that they are such in the highest sense? What reason have we to doubt it?

What if a man were to affirm (as indeed many do) that this witness belongs only to the highest class of Christians? Would you not answer, the apostle makes no restriction? Therefore doubtless it belongs to all the children of God. And will not the same answer hold if any affirm, that it belongs only to the lowest class?

Consider, likewise, 1 John 5: 19—"We know that we are of God." How? "By the Spirit that he hath given us." 1 John 3: 24. Nay, "hereby we know that he abideth in us." And what ground have we either from Scripture or reason to exclude the witness, any more than the fruit of the Spirit, from being here intended? By this then, also, we know that we are of God, and in what sense we are so. Whether we are babes, young men, or fathers, we know in the same manner.

Not that I affirm that all young men, or even fathers, have this testimony every moment; there may be intermissions of the direct testimony that they are thus born of God. But those intermissions are fewer and shorter as they grow up in Christ. And some have the testimony both of their justification and sanctification, without any intermission at all; which I presume more might have, did they walk as humbly and as closely with God as they may.

Q. 20. May not some of these have a testimony from the Spirit that they shall not finally fall from God?

A. They may. And this persuasion, that neither life nor death shall separate them from him, far from being hurtful, may in some circumstances be extremely useful. These therefore we should in no wise grieve, but earnestly encourage them to "hold the beginning of their confidence steadfast to the end."

Q. 21. But have any a testimony from the Spirit that they shall never sin?

We know not that they have. Besides, we do not find any general state described in Scripture, from which a man cannot draw back to sin. If there were any state wherein this was impossible, it would be that of those who are sanctified, who are fathers in Christ, who rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks. But it is not impossible for these to draw back. They who are sanctified may yet fall and perish. Heb. 10: 29. Even fathers in Christ need that warning, "Love not the world." 1 John 2: 15. They who rejoice, pray, and give thanks without ceasing, may nevertheless "quench the Spirit." 1 Thess. 5: 16. Nay, even they who are "sealed unto the day of redemption," may yet "grieve the Holy Spirit of God." Eph. 4: 30.—Plain Account.

REVIVAL WORK.—"That pastor cannot fail who understands how to develop the powers of his people. 'I envy Dr. S—— more than any other minister in New York,' said the late Dr. Alexander, 'for he has the art of keeping all his people at work.' It is a rare art, and one acquired by prayer and experience. The most effectual way to make a working church is to feed the church in strength with solid gospel food, and to fire it into enthusiasm, kindling in their souls the love of Jesus. This is the one undying inspiration. If you want a revival, give your people searching, arousing, practical discourses. Use God's fire, and not your own devices. When you get the most bountiful contributions to a benevolent cause, it will not be by elaborate begging; it will be after you have roused and kindled their hearts by the glorious gospel of Christ. Pitch your preaching to a heavenly key! Magnify the cross of Calvary! Pour on your people's hearts overwhelming claims of God. Come to them every Sabbath with Christ in your heart and Christ on your tongue. The power from on high will then come with you, and the baptism of fire will give you a pentecost. The church that is mighty in prayer is mighty in work."—Pulpit and Pew.

— Infinite toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist; but, by ascending a little, you may look over it altogether. So it is with our moral improvement. We wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit, which would have no hold upon us if we ascended into a higher moral atmosphere.

— Christ is God manifested, God touching our humanity, and apprehended by our humanity.

"WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST? WHOSE SON IS HE?"

J. B. COOK.

Mr. H. W. Beecher's book—"The Life of Christ"—seems to evade all proper or distinctive notice of, or answer to, this and like questions; yet the question often recurs; and as often it may, I humbly conceive, be answered in Bible language, so that the mind and heart can grasp and hold it, for the nourishment of faith.

But so far as I see, Mr. B. does not even approach the subject of this inquiry; nay, he goes still further, so as to make the answer impossible, if not impertinent, from his standpoint. He gives the drift of doctrinal discussion in the church through the past, and then quoting some texts embodies his own conception, thus—"How Jesus was the Son of God, and yet the Son of man, is nowhere spoken of in these simple records. The evangelists and apostles content themselves with simply declaring that God came into the world in the form of man; that the divine Spirit enveloped himself with the human body; that Jesus, a divine person, brought his nature into the human body, and was subject to all its laws and conditions." p. 49.

Mr. B. quotes general texts that do not assert the point that he himself makes—"How Jesus was the Son of God, and yet the Son of man." But other texts, that he omits, do give us the desired information. Let each recall "the promise" (Gen. 3: 15) as to the seed of the woman; the seed of Abraham (Gen. 22: 17, 18); the son of David (Ps. 89); the virgin's "son" (Isa. 7: 14). These texts teach some of the stages of the gradually unfolded promise that give us the lineage of "Jesus—the Son of man." The maternity is thus made plain and palpable, and unmistakably consistent through over four thousand years. No one need to miss this concentral and prolonged truth.

The Fatherhood is stated in terms alike precise, emphatic, and unerring in their import—"The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that Holy [One] which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Luke 1: 30–34. Note. This is the most complete assertion of the truth of God, on the point, that the author himself makes, as to Jesus' being "the Son of God, while yet he is the Son of man."

Elizabeth conceived by Zechariah, and bare a son whose name was John. Mary conceived by the power of the Most High, and bare a son whose name is Jesus—the Christ—"the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Amen! No words are more plain.

The paternity is divine; the maternity human. "This is the record that God hath given of his Son. God sent forth his Son made of a woman." Gal. 4: 4; 1 John 5: 10–17. "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also took part of the same" (by having been born of the Virgin Mary). The genealogy makes him descend from Adam, through Abraham and the virgin daughter of David; and so "he took part" of our nature. But being "the only begotten of the Father," he was "the Son of the Father in truth and love." 2 John 3.

The Levitical priesthood is proved to be inferior to that of Melchizedek, by Levi's being in the loins of Abraham when Melchizedek met and blessed him. Thus St. Peter says of Christ, "Who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you." 1 Pet. 1: 20. Thus "Jesus came forth from the Father"—came "down from heaven." "Therefore that Holy One born of thee [Mary], shall be called the Son of God." Thus also "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself" (2 Cor. 5: 19); and this form of expression is as easily apprehended as any statement of the case. Nay, it has the merit of being authorized, and confirmed by many repetitions.

The "pilot-idea" of Mr. B. seems to pilot the reader away from the most precise and complete terms of the inspired word, and along the line of "the philosophical views which [he says] have divided the church." It is in this way he swings off into the mystic sphere of dogmatic theology, and sums up the drift of his "philosophical" range with a partial but somewhat popular statement that "Jesus, a divine person, brought his nature into a human body." In this and his other primal statements of this subject, the author ignores, as I see, all the relations of both "the Father and the Son." 1 John 2: 22. If, as he asserts, "the apostles content themselves with simply declaring that God came into the world in the form of man," then there is, I think, neither Father nor the Son declared at all.

The text and context of Mr. B.'s Scripture quotations confirm those here given as to the reason why Jesus is called the Son of the Father, while yet he is the Son of man. Then "what think ye of Christ? whose son is he?" He is "the Son of God"—"the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth"; but being "born of woman," he is also "the Son of man," the second Adam, and the Restorer "of all things spoken by all the prophets." Amen and amen. Acts 3: 19–21; Ps. 72.

Note. No assumption of a full knowledge is indulged as to this loftiest pinnacle of revealed truth by Mr. B., nor by the writer; but my aim is to call attention to the more appropriate texts that teach "the doctrinal basis" of faith in "God, the Father," and in Jesus, the Christ, as "the Son of God, and yet the Son of man."

Mr. B.'s "doctrinal basis" omits all the Bible that gives a statement of the precise and central truth involved in his own words, quoted above; while this brief does, at least, note the widest range of revelation that shows "how Jesus was the Son of God, and yet the Son of man." Nay, this [illegible] expressed or implied everywhere "in these simple records." Respectfully submitted for the truth's sake.

DO THE SCRIPTURES FORBID WOMEN TO PREACH?

The following extracts we take from a sermon on the above subject, preached by Henry Ward Beecher, Feb. 11th:—

"Are those words of Paul, which I have read, of universal application in our time and everywhere? And are they final?

"There are three views of this matter. First, there are those who regard this utterance as official and conclusive, and who therefore forbid women to speak, no matter how gifted they are. They accept the Word of God as the rule of faith and practice; and they accept this utterance as meant to cover the whole future, and to determine the condition of women generally; and they comply with it. However much we may differ from them in opinion, we honor their consistency.

"Secondly, there are those who regard this testimony as explicit, covering the whole question in all time, but do not believe in the authority of the apostle to settle the question. They say simply this: "Paul forbade them, but he had no business to." This is an easy deliverance so far as they are concerned.

"Then, thirdly, there are those who admit the binding authority of Scripture upon faith and practice when its meaning is fairly and finally interpreted, but who regard this command as local, national, and transient. They hold, as much as the first, to the authority of sacred Scripture; but they differ from them by supposing that this is one of the transient commands which was enforced only in a particular place, and for a particular reason, and at a particular time; and that it is not the utterance of Christianity; that it is not the final word spoken on this subject. I am of the number of those who hold this view. . . .

"It was not the design of Christianity to determine manner and customs, nor to determine the shapes and peculiarities of religious ordinance or institution, nor to mark out the whole future economy of human society. It did not undertake to build by the external at all. Christianity aimed at a spiritual development of man by bringing him into direct relations with God. Its aim was a new creature in Christ Jesus; a noble manhood; assemblies and communities made up of men of a larger pattern, and of endowments supereminent and supreme over any that had ever been known before. To this corrected and inspired manhood was left the utmost liberty in respect to external things. It was left free to determine all economies in the church, in the school, in the family, and in the state, according to the mature experiences of good men from age to age. . . .

"The civil state has been revolutionized since the time of Christ. The family has changed. Our household is not a transcript of the Jewish household; certainly it is not a transcript of the Roman household. The domestic organization does not stand on civil foundations as it did in the time of Christ and the apostles. It is changed. There is no one element of organization now resembles the organizations of two thousand years ago, any more than species resemble species under the same genus.

"The presumption is that under such circumstances, when Christianity was leaving everything else to the wisdom and experience of after times, it did not step in with this single exception, and fix the position of woman, and determine exactly what her privileges were, beyond which there should be no exception, and shut her mouth, and paralyze her tongue forever after. . . .

"Now, I say that if, in the providence of God, women are called to preach; if they show that they are fitted for the work; if mankind are called to hear them; if their discourse is accompanied with power from on high; if men who are in darkness are enlightened; if men who are living in torpidity are inspired with a new desire for a holier life; then the Holy Ghost bears witness to the validity of the ordination and of woman's right to speak. . . .

"I am asked, then, 'Do you think that a woman ought to speak in meeting?' No, unless she has something to say. But if she has that to say which, being said, men are glad to hear, and are benefited by, she ought to have the privilege of saying it. The objection which is pleaded against women speaking, is its interference with her gentler and more refined offices. If she can medicate humanity by public services, I would have her do it; but I would not transmute her nature. I do not ask a woman to become a man. The beauty would then be gone. I would have her to retain all that sweetness, all those instinctive delicacies, all that refinement of the inward life and affection, which are peculiar to her.

"Because I would cull a lily of the valley from its half-shade and shelter, and bring it into the house, that it may diffuse its fragrance abroad, do I want to transmute it into a large sunflower? It is because it is so sweet; because it is what it is, that I cull it, and bring it in, and put it where I can see it. . . .

"If one is called to absolute domesticity, let her follow that calling. If you do not wish to speak, and you do not desire to speak, you are not called to speak. If home, and the joy of wedded love, and the care of the nursery, and the right training of the young, are pointed out as your duty, rejoice in it. I would not pluck you out of it. Whatever your sphere may be on earth, if you have faithfully performed the duties of that sphere, God will smile on you. And if you have brought up a family of boys and girls to an honorable manhood and womanhood, you will be honored in the heavenly land. But if God has given you a heart and a soul for something other; if you are not called to serve in the household, as many are not; if you are set apart from it by sorrows or dissolving bereavements; if in your ripe age you discover that you have talents which you have not before suspected; if in maidenhood or womanhood you have the voice of the singer, or the pen of the poet, or the lips of inspired eloquence, then there is nothing in God's word, nothing in your nature, and nothing in the true church of Christ, in the best interests of society, that should hinder you from exercising those gifts. On the contrary, there is much in history, much in the community, much in you, and much in the witness of the Holy Ghost, that should inspire you to go forward, patiently and meekly bearing the scoffs and persecutions of your fiery adversaries, and work according to the power which God has given you, and work to the end, and rise to be crowned, and to shine as the stars in the firmament, because you have turned many from their sins to righteousness."

SACRAMENTO.

We are now (Feb. 13th) holding meetings in the Academy of Music, in the city of Sacramento, the capital of California. This city is located on the Sacramento river, which is the principal one in the State, and receives much of the water from the mining region, thus rendering it very muddy. This river has been some twenty-three feet above low water mark during the winter, and is now about seventeen. It is expected that another freshet may come when the snow melts on the Sierra mountains. This river is navigable for large steamers from San Francisco to Sacramento, one hundred and twenty miles; and smaller boats go on to Red Bluff, two hundred and fifty miles further. On account of the vast amount of earth washed into the river by the miners, on the foot hills, the bed of the river has been so filled up, that at the time of high water Sacramento was badly flooded. As a remedy, a considerable portion of the city was raised some ten feet. It is still low, and much troubled by the high water, at the time of great freshets, like the one this year; and which have occurred once in about ten years. It is said to be very pleasant here during March and April. It is quite hot in the summer days, but the nights are very agreeable. We would not choose Sacramento for a residence.

The morals of the city are not the first class. There is an abundance of liquor saloons, drunkenness, and licentiousness. It leads one to think of ancient Sodom. There are many who are naturally intelligent, generous, noble-hearted, and kind, but who have yielded to the baser passions of human nature, having thrown off the restraints imposed by a pure christianity, because but little of it appears in society. Satan has the supreme control over the people; and seems determined to keep the reins in his hands. We find here abundance of proof that "the love of money is the root of all evil." Many fortunes have been made and squandered in riotous living. Many of the original miners are now in a degraded condition, and rushing to perdition. The sight is a sad one.

We commenced meetings here Wednesday evening, Feb. 7th, in the lecture room of the Congregationalist meeting-house, which is the largest in the city. Although it was a rainy night, a large and attentive audience was present. The subject was Spiritualism. Many Spiritualists were present, and improved the opportunity for asking questions at the close of the lecture. Spiritualism has a strong hold in this city, and has destroyed the confidence of its patrons in the Bible. It acknowledges no Savior but man, and denies every cardinal doctrine of the Scriptures.

On our arrival here, we learned that Dr. A. P. Truesdell, a true christian gentleman, free from sectarianism, whom we met last winter in San Francisco, had been to nearly all the churches to secure a place for our preaching, but was refused the privilege, because we believed in the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked. He could only secure the Congregationalist house for one night. Thus situated, we were obliged to hire a hall, or leave town. We felt assured that it was the will of the Lord that we should hold some meetings in this city. We succeeded in hiring a hall for Friday and Saturday nights, and for Sunday morning. At this time a theatrical troupe was performing in the Academy of Music. We learned they were to close their engagement on Saturday evening, Feb. 10th, and we succeeded in leasing the Academy for fifteen days for our meetings, to commence Lord's day evening, Feb. 11th, and so advertised; but found the following notice in Saturday evening's Daily Bee:—

"MILES GRANT.—The Variety troupe will give its last entertainment at the Academy of Music to-morrow night. Financially, it has not been a success. Elder Miles Grant will open at the same theatre on the following Monday night. Nothing will be said or done to offend the taste of the most fastidious."

This notice brought out a number to witness the last performance of the theatrical troupe; while our published notice was for the same place at the same time. Of course some were taken quite by surprise to find a man praying and preaching on the stage, instead of singing comic songs, dancing, and acting low comedies. The Lord was our helper. We confess it was rather trying at the commencement, and we felt that Satan thought we were quite out of place,—perhaps some good people thought so too, for we learned they were unwilling to be seen there to hear preaching. We felt assured, in answer to prayer, that it was the Lord's will we should lease that place for our meetings, and that we should receive his blessing.

Last night, Monday evening, Feb. 12th, there was a very marked change in the spirit of the meeting. Prominent citizens were out, and a large audience, which gave excellent attention to a discourse on the prophecies of Daniel. The Lord gave special help in presenting the truth, and the people seemed astonished to know such things were in the Bible. To-day we learn that several have come twenty miles by private conveyance to attend the meetings. Several ministers, besides two Catholic priests, and members of the Legislature, have attended. The prospect is very encouraging, and we expect the Lord will be present by the power of the Holy Spirit, to apply the truth to the hearts of the people, and thus accomplish glorious results.

After we had announced our meeting at the Academy of Music for last Sabbath evening, we met Bro. L. Nash, a Presbyterian minister, of good report here, who said he intended to have given us an invitation to occupy his pulpit that evening. We appreciated his christian spirit, but was obliged to decline because of our published notice. It is pleasant to find some who know the difference between Bhristianity and Churchanity.

LATER.

Our meetings in Sacramento are increasing in interest daily. The Academy of Music is crowded about every night, although the weather is against us; and frequently many have to go away for want of room. People who had lost all interest in religious maters, and did not attend any church, now come every night, and are among the most attentive hearers. They had thought the Bible unworthy of their serious consideration; but now they are listening to the expositions of its teachings with profound respect.

Dr. H. Cummings, Chaplain of the Assembly, has attended our prophetical lectures, and stated to the audience that he was satisfied the evidence presented afforded clear proof that Christ is about to return to this earth and set up his kingdom. He exhorted the people to examine the evidence, and prepare for the coming of the Son of man. Last evening (Feb. 16th), we closed an interesting discussion with Dr. A. P. Truesdell, on the subject of future punishment. Dr. Cummings was our chairman. Dr. T. is a true christian man, free from sectarianism, and is nearly convinced that our position on punishment is correct. We think he will soon be fully satisfied that the doctrine of eternal misery is not in harmony with the Bible. We never met before an opponent in debate who manifested so great willingness to know the truth, rather than to obtain a victory. We have become warm friends in Christ. We have found but few such men during our twenty-nine years of christian experience. We are hoping he may feel it duty to act as a watchman over the interests of those who may embrace the blessed hope in this city. We have received much kindness from him and his amiable christian wife. Pray for us.

CALIFORNIA CROPS.

California is noted for its wheat, fruits, flowers, and vegetables. There are but few places on our globe that afford so great a variety and such an abundance of these products. Fresh vegetables are found in market every day in the year. The apples, peaches, pears, strawberries, and grapes, are remarkably large and plenty. Figs, almonds, English walnuts, and oranges abound, giving a good supply. Sweet potatoes grow finely, and the common potatoes yield enormously.

We were talking with a gentleman connected with the Sacramento Daily Record, who has a ranche on Brannon Island, between Sacramento and San Francisco, who showed us a fine specimen of the second crop of potatoes raised last year. The first crop was planted Feb. 4th, and dug June 23d; the second crop was planted June 23d, and dug Oct. 31st and Nov. 1st. The first crop yielded about three hundred bushels to the acre, and the second crop about two hundred. He also raised two crops of corn, and showed us specimens of the ears, which were well filled, and ripe. Potatoes were sold for ten dollars per ton. These crops were raised in the dry season of last year. This year it is so wet, they will raise only one large crop. The land produces sixty and seventy bushels of wheat to the acre. There are thousands of acres of this land on the banks of the Sacramento river, that may be bought from $5 to $20 per acre. It is overflowed in time of the large freshets. Many of the houses are surrounded by water at the present time, and have been for some two months. At Alfava, hay is cut seven and eight times a year.

THE PAPAL POWER.

The temporal power of the Pope is now dead, and his ecclesiastical control is waning. He is in the very condition he has endeavored to place his enemies by his terrible curses. The cup that church has prepared for the so-called Protestant heretics is now at her own lips, with a necessity for drinking its bitter contents to the very dregs. "God hath remembered her iniquities" (Rev. 18: 5); and "the cup which she hath filled" is to be filled "to her double." Rev. 18: 6. Her plagues are begun, and soon we may expect her to fall like the "millstone," "cast into the sea," to "be found no more at all."

When we arrive at the state of things now existing, we must be very near the greatest and grandest event ever beheld by the inhabitants of this world, which is the second coming of Christ. There is one important fact, worthy of notice at the present time. It is this: the real christians in all churches are being impressed by the Spirit of the Lord that we are living in the last days of the present dispensation. Those who have not heard a sermon nor read a book on the subject have an abiding feeling that Jesus is coming soon; while the worldly professors and lovers of pleasure are becoming more and more thoughtless and reckless in relation to their eternal welfare. As were the days of Noah, so it is now with the present generation. Though warned, they believe not; hence are making no more preparation for the coming of Christ, than did the antediluvians for the flood. This was foretold by the Savior. The indifference of the masses is continually increasing. Satan is administering all kinds of opiates to keep the people stupid in relation to their highest interests. It is a heart-rending sight to behold the state of society at the present time, especially on this Pacific coast. We think if the old inhabitants of Sodom were here, they would not feel much restraint by the customs of society. A very large number of the men bear unmistakable marks of the evil effects of the use of tobacco, wine and whiskey, gin and brandy; and other evil things. One might well think the people had been schooled in the society of the Sodomites. There are some noble exceptions—some Lots and Noahs, with their families, but they are a very small minority. The signs of the times show in a very clear manner that "the end of all things is at hand." Let us be ready.

TRUTH SPREADING.

At no period, since the long-buried truths of the Bible have been seen, have they been spreading so rapidly as at the present time. Many intelligent and devoted ministers are now opening their eyes to the fact that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is not a Bible doctrine; and, consequently, the eternal misery of the wicked is not a necessity from their inherent immortal nature; and still further, that the Scriptures do plainly teach the utter destruction of all the finally impenitent. These candid men are astonished at the plain teaching of the Bible on this subject, and now wonder how they could have read the Scriptures so carelessly, or been so blinded by tradition, as not to have seen the truth at an earlier date; but such is the power of human creeds, that it is very difficult to see a truth not embodied in their articles.

The doctrine of the destruction of the wicked and the sleep of the dead, in connection with a belief in the speedy coming of Christ, is spreading rapidly in Europe, especially in the Church of England and the Congregational churches. The Rainbow, edited and published by Dr. Wm. Leask, London, is a valuable monthly, and may be obtained of Kent & Co., Paternoster Row, E. C., London, England, with postal money orders, for $2.50 per year. We recommend it to our readers.

In the Rainbow of Oct. 1871, a Christian lady says, in connection with the subjoined letter:—

"I forward an exact copy of a letter I have recently received from the Rev. H. Constable, the Prebendary of Cork, the writer of a very able and masterly work, entitled 'The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment.' This letter is one of several which I have had the privilege and comfort of receiving from Christian ministers—all of the same and confirmed mind on the same point. What renders Mr. C.'s letter so highly satisfactory is, I think, the decisive testimony which it bears, from personal proof and experience, that the Scripture, unaided and alone, is altogether sufficient, as it is exclusively authoritative, for the establishment of the blessed truth which you and he, with others, are laboring to make known. I felt, therefore, very desirous to have such testimony published; so I wrote to Mr. C. to ask his kind permission, and his reply has been in the affirmative."

"DESERTMORE GLEBE, OVENS, CORK, 3d April, 1871.

My Dear Madam:—I am very much gratified at your approval of my work—'The Duration and Nature of Future Punishment.' The subject is, indeed, an absorbing one. Strange, that so many appear indifferent about it. I derived my view of it entirely from Scripture. I had been educated, as you, in the ordinary belief, and forced myself to think that it must be right. A conversation I had one day with a friend, who was, I could plainly see, shaken as to the truth of the common view, made me resolve to study it more clearly than I ever had.

I sat down to my Bible; wrote down every text in full, from beginning to end, that appeared to me to refer to the subject; wrote after each text a few lines—giving my opinion of its meaning; and when I had got to the end, rose convinced of the truth of the theory of life in Christ only. I had at this time never read a book on either side of the question; and all my subsequent reading has only confirmed me in the belief of a glorious truth; for opening my eyes to which, I thank a gracious God.

It gives me deep satisfaction to find the truth spreading; as it most undoubtedly is. For this reason your letter gave me sincere pleasure. I remain, dear madam, faithfully yours, HENRY CONSTABLE."

Rev. D. W. Leask, Congregationalist, Editor of the Rainbow, in a recent article on "The Gospel in the Light of Human Nature," says—"As the last of these positions—immortality only in Christ—covers the whole field of argument, by embracing in itself the most conclusive proof, I respectfully submit it to your thoughtful consideration. If I fail to establish all that I have said, I pray you to lay the failure on me, and not on the doctrine; for I am morally, mentally, logically, religiously certain, that no human being that ever trod this earth will live forever except he be a partaker of the divine nature by union with the divine Redeemer. On this I stake every thing in this momentous controversy, which is destined to shake all the churches in the world, and to effect a doctrinal reformation equal in all respects, and greater in some, than that of the sixteenth century. May the Lord God of truth direct us!"

A NEW THING.—Recently Prof. Abraham de Sola, LL. D., a Jewish Rabbi, from Montreal, P. Q., was invited to open Congress with prayer in the House of Representatives. The people of the world and the enemies of the cross of Christ consider this event as a bright omen for good; but we fail to see wherein the nation has done honor to itself by inviting one to pray who denies that Jesus Christ is our Savior. While Congress may have honored the Rabbi by the invitation, was it showing respect to the Savior to ask one to pray who would not deign to acknowledge or even notice him? Is God pleased with the man who rejects his dear Son? We are taught to present our petitions to our Heavenly Father in the name of Jesus; this the Rabbi refuses to do. Are such prayers acceptable? Does Congress desire the prayers of one who denies Christ? Is this praying in the right direction?

CALICO BALL.—"A Grand Calico Ball" came off in Platt's Hall, San Francisco, Feb. 12th. Among the executive committee were some of the leading women in the Congregational and Presbyterian churches. One of them is the wife of the most popular Congregational minister on the Pacific coast. "Cards of admission," $5. All this was done to raise some money for charitable purposes. Truly, these are strange times.

THE SPIRIT OF SPIRITUALISM.

The character of any system of religion or politics may be known in part by the effect produced upon its believers and supporters. If we find them led to oppose any other system, then we may reasonably conclude that the two are not in harmony with each other. If Spiritualism is in harmony with the Bible, and the God of the Bible, then those who enter most fully into it will be their firm supporters, and delight in their defense against those who scoff at the sacred Scriptures and their Author. Whenever the God of the Bible is attacked, or any effort is made to have him or his word set aside, we should expect to see the settled Spiritualist ever ready to stand in the front ranks among those who love our heavenly Father and the blessed Bible. But if, on the contrary, Spiritualism is opposed to God and the Bible, then it would be reasonable to expect to find its followers arrayed against Jehovah and his word, and doing what they can to destroy confidence in their teaching, and refusing to accept them as authority.

In the report of the Vermont Quarterly Convention of Spiritualists, held at Stowe, June 22nd, 1871, and published in the Banner of Light, July 22nd, 1871, we find the following:

"Whereas, Certain evangelical Christians of the more superstitious and unintelligent class are industriously engaged in efforts to obtain an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by which the Jewish Jehovah and the Christian religion shall be recognized as factors in the organic law of the republic: be it

Resolved, That the members of this Convention, commiserating the infatuation which thus attempts the subjugation of religious liberty and the progress of free thought and unobstructed development, will argue at all proper times and places the entire independence of the American government of the favor or disfavor of the Jewish Jehovah and the ecclesiastical system known as Christianity, and will strenuously resist every such end to prostitute the ægis of the American Republic to the protection of sectarian bigotry."

Resolved, That the principle of justice precludes the possibility of one person being saved upon the merits of another; therefore, no son of God or man, no child of earth or heaven, ever did or can save another from the inevitable consequences of sin. 'Whatsoever man soweth, that must he reap.'"

In these resolutions we have the true spirit of Spiritualism. It is wholly antichristian. He who should claim that Spiritualism was not opposed to the Bible, and the God of the Bible, would be as far from the truth as the one who should say sin is not opposed to holiness, error to truth, drunkenness to temperance, or vice to virtue. The two systems of Spiritualism and Christianity are as wide apart as the Devil and Christ. They can never be harmonized. As truly as Christianity is right, Spiritualism is wrong.

Let it be remembered that this system, which stands so completely opposed to the Bible and the holy religion of Jesus, has for its foundation the doctrine of the immortality of the soul; which finds no support in the Old or New Testament. Is it not time for good men to open their eyes to this fact, and inquire for "the old paths?" Let us believe the Bible, if all human creeds are spoiled. If the belief of the truth brings reproach upon our heads, then let us not be ashamed of Jesus and his words. When he comes, he will wipe away all the disgrace heaped upon us by a scoffing world, or a backslidden church. Let us glory in the cross, till the time arrives for Jesus to return, and give eternal life to all who love him and his appearing.

CHINESE NEW YEAR.

The Chinese New Year began this year, Wednesday evening, Feb. 7th. They celebrate the commencement of their year very much as the Americans do the fourth of July. They burn a large amount of fire crackers, and suspend all business. Their festivities continue for about a week. They array themselves in their best apparel, and entertain their friends with their choicest food. In San Francisco, there are 11,817 Chinese, of whom 9,777 are males, and 2,040 are females. Of the latter class, it is said not one of them is virtuous. The women wear no bonnets on the streets. They have fair and plump cheeks, and are rather good looking. They dress their hair in a fantastic manner—perhaps no more so than fashionable American women. It is nicely braided on each side into wing-like appearances. They wear small wooden shoes, which are very inconvenient for walking.

The men wear large shoes, with white stockings, having their pants tied around their ankles, as we tie them around our boots in New England, when we are to wade in deep snow. The men have their hair shaved off their heads, excepting a round spot covering the top, and a part of the back side, from which hangs their long, braided cue, which reaches down within a foot of the ground. The women do not wear cues. The men wear coats shaped quite like a shirt, with large, long sleeves, no collars, and generally made of cheap material. Some of them dress richly. They live very economically. Rice is one of their principal articles of diet. They are industrious, and quite quick to learn how to do various kinds of work. Most of the washing is done by China men. The women do little or no work. They are not employed at all as servants; but the men are the common servants in California, as are the Irish women in the Eastern States. They live so cheaply, that they lay up money much faster than the American laborer, who receives twice as much as the Chinaman. There is much bitter feeling towards them on the part of the laborers from other nations, especially the Irish. The Chinese are obliged to put up with considerable unkind treatment. They appear to be a peaceable, inoffensive people, but very loose in their morals, and superstitious in their religion. We think it was a serious mistake to introduce them into California. Of course, many have made money out of their services; but they have brought with them their idolatrous worship of artificial gods, and their common licentiousness, which are exerting a very demoralizing effect upon community. They pay but little or no regard to the customs of civilized and Christian society. They are allowed to work the same on the Lord's day as on Monday. When on our way to meeting, they may be seen sawing wood, washing and ironing, as on other days.

"The Chinese in this city, representing $1,880,000 in personal property and $74,800 in real estate, will commence the celebration of their New Year this evening (the eve of the year), and continue the rejoicing for three or four days. The festivities observed by respectable families are divided into five parts; First, the sacrifice to heaven and earth; second, the worship of the gods and idols; third, the worship of deceased ancestors (the California Celestials have a proxy arrangement similar to that adopted by the members of political Conventions); fourth, prostration before living parents; fifth, the making of New Year's calls. Presentations, consisting of rice, vegetables, tea, wine, incense, candles, an almanac for the ensuing year, and a few loose skinned oranges, are placed upon the tables near the front doors of residences or stores, and, after contemplating the collation for a few moments, reflecting upon the relative merits of heaven and earth, the Celestials indulge in a fusilade of fire-crackers, to give eclat to the sacrifice. After propitiating the gods and goddesses, paying the customary tokens of respect and remembrance to deceased ancestors and worshiping the surviving heads of households, the Celestials indulge in the usual temperate pleasures, including calls and receptions. Commercial transactions cease for a week or more, according to the importance of the respective mercantile houses. Formerly a large proportion of the business houses remained closed for ten days or more, and the religious observances were carried out with scrupulous care and marked zeal, and it is owing in a great measure to the efforts of the missionaries that the Chinese have been gradually weaned from the worst features of their Buddhistic theories. Large sales of goods are seldom effected among the Chinese during the first half of the first month, though there is no objection to dealing with foreigners. The initial day is one of festivity and rejoicing among all classes and in the annual respite from the cares and responsibilities of business, the fashionable fellows find recreation in gambling houses and theatres. All debts not paid are declared 'off,' though the delinquent Celestial is advised that the news of his demise would be acceptable to the Chinese portion of the community."

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE.—The following leading politicians and members of Congress are said to be in favor of woman's suffrage:—Sumner, Wade, Morton, Trumbull, Wilson, Carpenter, Sprague, Nye, Pomeroy, Stearns, Harris, Arnell, Maynard, Banks, Julian, Burdett, Lynch, Woodward, Ela, Morrill, Vallandigham, Kerr, Chase, and Black, with a host of others. We are convinced that universal suffrage will yet prevail.

A TRUE SAYING.—When Soini Tomomi Iwakura, the Junior Prime Minister of Japan, was in San Francisco, after witnessing the manifestations of human nature there, he remarked, "I see that the passions of all men are alike in all lands."

BRO. WM. SHELDON, having become worn with his labors at the South, has recently returned to his home in Brodhead, Wis., where he may now be addressed.

☞ That portion of the Conference Report published in last week's Crisis beginning with the appointment of E. P. Woodward, Secretary, in the absence of Bro. Barnes, and ending with the adjournment at the close of Bro. Pratt's remarks, was furnished by E. P. W., and is a record of the last day's session. The remainder is from C. E. Barnes.

PENTECOST KINGDOM.

A certain class of advocates of a spiritual kingdom very tenaciously contend that the kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost, and always refer us to the second chapter of Acts for proof. But reflection will manifest the shallowness of the claim; for,

1. Not a word is said about the setting up of a kingdom at that time.

2. If it is thought that the matter can be mended by insisting that the church is the kingdom, and that the church was then organized, we deny the assertion. Not a word is said about the organization of a church on the day of Pentecost. A church of "one hundred and twenty names" already existed in Jerusalem; and as the result of the revival on the day of Pentecost, "there were added unto them about three thousand souls." The church already existing was simply enlarged.

3. But it is said Peter bade them be baptized. Well, that was nothing new; the apostles had baptized hundreds before that day. If baptism ushers men into the kingdom, multitudes must have got into the kingdom before the day of Pentecost. Peter's keys of the kingdom did not relate to the ordinance of baptism, as that had been previously instituted. The keys referred to indicate power to open the kingdom to men in the same sense in which the Pharisees "shut the kingdom of heaven against men," long before the day of Pentecost; that is, Peter had power to enlighten men, and lead them into the road to the kingdom, and the Pharisees used their power to keep them out of the road.

HOW TO PREACH THE TRUTH.—There is a right way and a wrong way to do everything; and the right way is always preferable. The command, "Preach the word," can be incorrectly heeded.

1. It is possible to preach the truth in such a contentious spirit as to kindle the same spirit of pugilistic warfare in the hearts of hearers, instead of reaching their judgments.

2. It is possible to furnish the new hearer with such a variety of new themes all at once that he cannot digest any of them, and so casts them all away; whereas, if each theme had been presented and digested one at a time, all would have been received. The same is true of tract distribution. Give time to digest one subject before mixing it with another.

WHO ARE THE SAINTS TO REIGN OVER?

"It is often stated that the saints are to reign: who are they to reign over, unless over mortals?" It is not only affirmed that the saints are to "reign" in the future state, but it is as clearly asserted that "they shall reign forever and ever" (Rev. 22: 5), and that, too, after the introduction of the new earth state, concerning which it is affirmed "there shall be no more death;" and if the saints are to reign after the deathless state is introduced, and consequently after mortality is extinct, even "forever and ever," there is certainly a scriptural sense in which the saints are to reign without reigning over mortals.

If, however, the saints must have mortals to reign over, in order to reign in the new earth, then it follows (1) that the Revelator was mistaken in saying, "There shall be no more death," for mortals cannot live forever, and must die soon or later; and (2) it would involve the propagation of the species in the state of which Jesus affirms, "They neither marry nor are given in marriage," for without this, a race of mortals would soon become extinct.

There is no evading the fact that the saints are to reign after mortality comes to an end, and consequently must reign in some other sense than ruling mortals. As but one reign is promised them, they are to reign in no other sense. When we speak of the reign of death, the reign of winter, or the reign of terror, we simply mean a state of supremacy, or an ascendency of the things referred to. The supremacy of the saints is referred to in the same manner. It indicates their triumphant state.
W. S.

CHRIST THE TREE OF LIFE.—In a recent sermon, I heard the claim set up that Christ was the tree of life referred to in the garden of Eden. If that tree of life was really an emblem of Christ, God must have taken great pains to keep Adam away from Christ, by placing "cherubim and a flaming sword" to guard it. The arrangement of Heaven, from first to last, has been to lead men to Christ, instead of keeping them away. The tree of life could not impart holiness, else man would not have been kept from it. It could only impart a deathless nature, which God did not wish man to possess while a sinner. W. S.

THE REPORT OF THE WORCESTER CONFERENCE.

I am very sorry, and much grieved, to behold the report as it has appeared in the Crisis of Feb. 28th. In the first place it has not appeared in the order as presented at the meeting, and then a part is left out. But in the report by Bro. Woodward great injustice is done to some of the speakers, if our memory serves us. So far as I am concerned, I am represented as uttering sentiments I do not believe nor hold.

Where I am first introduced as replying to Bro. Barbour, the subject is so indistinctly stated, that the reader would not know what "events" were referred to by either of us. Then as to "the restraining of transgressions" for "seventy weeks," and that the word "echol is to restrain"—I did not use the word echol; I used the Heb. term kah-lah, which means "to restrain." I said that seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety years, were "cut off" from the vision (of the eighth chapter) upon the Jews, and their city Jerusalem, to restrain the transgression—singular, not plural.

Again, I am made to say—"If the vision had not been broken off there, it would never have been shut up." What we did say was—If Gabriel had not ceased in his explanation of the vision at that point, i. e., after having explained all the points in the vision except the time, but had continued and explained the time, the 2300 days, with the rest, at his first visit, there would have been no seal on the vision. Not that the vision was broken off, but Gabriel stopped explaining.

Then in reply to E. G. Higgins—"Which part of the sixty-nine weeks reaches to Christ?" my reply—"They do not terminate at the birth of Christ." I believe the sixty-nine DO terminate at the birth of Christ. I think Bro. Higgins' question was in reference to the seventy weeks, not the sixty-nine; and then my reply would have been relevant, if Bro. Higgins' question had been correctly reported.

There are other points in the report that are not as they should have been, but we will pass them. Out of justice to the cause of truth, leaving myself out of the subject, I have said what I have in the foregoing. Those who read the report, who were not at the meeting, will receive a very unfavorable impression as to the character of the discussion, by this unfortunate report.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

THE N. H. A. C. CONFERENCE.

Pursuant to notice, the first quarterly meeting in 1872 of this conference convened in the new Chapel in Hampton, N. H., Jan. 12th. A business session of the conference was called by the President, Eld. John Couch. The Secretary being absent, Geo. W. Brown was chosen Sec. pro tem. Passed the following Preamble and Resolution:

Preamble.—Whereas Elder H. M. Bryant, member of the N. H. Conference, having by his unchristian course again betrayed the confidence of its members to that degree that, while they would pray the Lord to forgive, and would do all they can to encourage him to live a christian life, they cannot sanction his labors as a teacher; therefore,

Resolved, That said H. M. Bryant be dismissed from said conference.

Great Falls matters were taken up and discussed by several brethren, after which the following Preamble and Resolution was passed:

Preamble—Whereas, the expectations of the committee sent by this conference to Great Falls, N. H., to adjust their difficulties have not been met, and that such action has placed those worshiping at the Town Hall under restrictions, without accomplishing the design of said committee; therefore,

Resolved, That all those restrictions be now removed, and that they be permitted to continue their meetings. Adjourned, sine die.

A goodly number of preaching brethren were present and seemed to have a good time. The new Chapel was dedicated on Thursday afternoon, the 11th. Eld. J. Couch preached the dedication sermon. Bro. C. did as well as he could, and the good Lord did the rest, and we all had a good time, for which we praise the Lord. May God bless the people of Hampton. They have done well to build the house, and will do better if they make good use of it. The Lord guide and help, and have all the glory. Amen.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 11.

Came to the city of Nashville, Tenn., and commenced a meeting in a hall, Feb. 8th. Had a fair congregation of interested listeners. I came to this city by the request of Bro. Hyde from Maine, who is here to teach the people how to convert cotton into cloth without sending it to foreign markets. But being a lover of truth, he cannot content himself without having the eyes of this people opened to see the truth. He has been laboring to this end in various ways; and finally I have come to his help.

Unexpectedly we could have the hall in which we commenced meetings no longer than Saturday night (Feb. 10th), on which night one unconverted person requested prayers. Many were getting interested to hear, and it seemed too bad to close. Our limited means forbade our hireing a costly hall, and a meeting house a little out of the city being offered us gratuitously, we commenced meetings there Sunday, Feb. 11. On a short notice we got out a fair congregation, and the people opened their eyes and ears; and we trust they will also open their hearts to receive the truth in the love of it. We continued each night through the week, and over Sunday the 18th.

A goodly number were interested to hear the reasons for our hope, and treated us with great kindness, and some subscribed for the Crisis and Banner. I have also left works in their midst setting forth the different features of our faith. We leave Bro. Hyde to water the seed that has been sown. He is an earnest brother, and will let his light shine.

It has not been my object on this mission to organize churches, but to spread the light among all churches, without waging war on their organizations, leaving all free to enjoy the new light where they are, as long as they can feel liberty to do it, with the special caution never to smother the truth of God to please men. But I am receiving news from different quarters indicating that a line must soon be drawn.

One Bro. writes: "A cloud of opposition seems to be rising against those who are searching the Scriptures for the truth." I have news that one minister expects soon to be tried for believing and preaching this system of truth. Another minister thus writes me: "We now feel sure that sooner or later we will have to separate and organize for ourselves."

When the matter comes to this point, that men must give up the truth, or seek a new home, the lover of truth will soon decide what course to pursue. Much seed has been sown already, and much is springing up. Every effort now to exterminate the crop, will only help scatter the seed. The cry of "heresy" comes too late to keep the truth out of the South. The South, as well as the North, contains some men who dare think for themselves, and who dare believe God rather than men.

☞ BRO. H. PRATT wishes to make the following correction:—

"I am made to say in the Report of the Worcester Conference, that I owned 'nine houses in Springfield.' Now as this seems somewhat extravagant for an Advent preacher, and as many are inquiring if these things are so, I would simply say that when I was at Portsmouth I was told that a report was in circulation that I owned 'nine' houses in Springfield. I accepted it as a part of the christian's legacy. So when at the Worcester Conference Bro. Brittan said 'it would be a good time to sell out,' I said that it had been reported (this part I suppose the reporter of the Conference did not hear) that I owned nine houses in Springfield, and in pleasantry I said that I would 'sell the whole nine.' Here I would let the matter rest; but for the sake of my friends and the cause, I would say that the report to which I alluded was utterly false."

SUCCESSFUL EDITORS.—An English writer says:—

"A good editor, or competent newspaper conductor, is like a general or a poet, born, not made. Exercise and experience give facility, but the qualification is innate, or it is never manifested. On the London daily papers all the great historians, novelists, poets, essayists, and writers of travels, have been tried, and nearly every one has failed. 'I can,' said the late editor of the London Times, 'find any number of men of genius to write for me, but very seldom one man of common sense.' Nearly all successful editors are of this description. A good editor seldom writes much for his paper; he reads, judges, selects, dictates, alters, and combines; and, to do all this well, he has but little time for composition. To write for a paper is one thing, to edit a paper is another."

— To judge without reserve of any human action is a culpable temerity, of all our sins the most unfeeling and frequent.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. P. Moore.

Beloved Brn. and Srs., Greeting:—It is a long time since you heard from me through the columns of the Crisis, yet I have not been idle all this time, I assure you. I have been doing what I could in spreading the "gospel of the kingdom" "at hand."

Since leaving the Crisis Office last spring, my health has very greatly improved, so that I have gained twelve pounds. I worked out of doors through the spring and summer through the week, and preached Sundays as the way opened. We came into this new field trusting in God. We soon found prejudice was very strong. Some would look at us and shun us as though we were wild animals; but we paid no attention to it, and kept right along serving the Lord daily. I saw it was no time for me to commence meetings here till we could live down some of the prejudice. We soon saw it giving way like dew before the rising sun. I attended the Baptist church, and the minister came to me at the close of the services, and invited me to preach for him when it was convenient. I told him I would. Seeing that Bro. Couch was coming out to Western New York, I tried them for their house for him to preach in, and they very readily granted it, and he came and preached two good strong discourses on the prophecies, which caused some considerable stir.

I have preached twice in the same house since, and once in the Presbyterian church, and assisted at communion, where a few years ago my wife was excluded from their table because she was an Adventist. Have since started a meeting in a school-house a mile from home, in a small village where there is no meeting-house, but one about a mile and a quarter from there. Have had a full house, and the interest has increased from the first. I hope, I expect to see a church raised up that shall with us wait for the Lord from heaven, because we have prayed for it ever since we have been here, and have waited for the Lord to open the way before us. We feel greatly encouraged.

It has been my lot to labor mostly in new places since I came into this State. Have missed some of the blessed associations of the East. Have traveled the past year, to preach the gospel, nearly four thousand miles, and have received $70.02 more than my car fare, yet the Lord has stood by us, and we will continue to serve him to the best of our ability. I was offered a position where I could receive $1456 a year if I would give up preaching, but could not do it.

Several churches were very desirous that I should settle with them, but my health was such I did not dare do it. Have a little place where I keep a horse, cow, and fowls, and have raised corn and potatoes to live on through the winter. Am willing to work. I believe the truth that has called us out, and feel the woe upon me if I do not preach it, and so I will still go on doing the best I can, trusting in the Lord, for we have ever found that it is not in vain to trust in him. "No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly," and if it does not come in one way, it will in another. I preached six Sundays to one congregation, and only received $2.85, yet the Lord blessed his truth, and we expect a recompense "at the resurrection of the just." How many of you Eastern preachers would preach on that salary long?

Well, we mean by God's grace to be faithful and "sow beside all waters." The Judge standeth at the door, and men must be warned. Pray for us, that we may have grace to endure unto the end, and hear Jesus say unto us at last—"Well done, good and faithful servant." Yours in the "highways,"

A. P. MOORE.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. O. W. KIMBALL writes:—"I am still in the field. Have labored some during the past six months at Snaptown, East Concord, and my labors with others have been blest. The brethren have been over from the Street and held prayer-meetings; which have been the means of doing much good. Sinners have found Jesus, and others are interested. Would that other churches might do the same, and, when an opportunity presents itself, go out into the highways and hedges; for time is very short. If we work, we must work quickly. How much responsibility rests upon us as ministers.

Met with the church at Dover, Sabbath, Feb. 18th. Here they are still holding on and looking for Jesus. They seem to be determined to face the storm until Jesus comes. Had a good congregation at Keene, Feb. 25th. Here the place of worship is small, but neat and convenient. Congregation not very large, but very attentive. This is the home of Bro. T. L. Hall, who seems to be a faithful man of God. Called on Dr. H. H. Darling, who has been a believer in the coming of the Lord for many years. He has done and is still doing much for the cause; is a generous, free, and open-hearted man. Also called on Bro. Stiles, of the Cheshire R. R. Co.'s works. Had an interesting talk about Jesus and his coming.

This world has lost all its charms for me. I am glad that Jesus loves me, and I expect soon to meet him face to face, when all trials will end."

BRO. S. GOODHUE writes:—"I notice by what Bro. Munger wrote a few weeks ago that somebody owes the Crisis office $10,000. Now it does appear to me that there is a fault with somebody, and perhaps I am guilty. If you will send me a list of names of those who take the Crisis in this town (Wilmot, N. H.), and how much is due from them up to the first day of April, 1872, I will square the account by sending the money by return express; and if I cannot get it of those who owe for the paper, I will give it. I believe it is best to square up the bill at once.

I know of some who have not paid anything for the paper for years, but who use tobacco, and say at the same time that they cannot be saved unless they cease to use it. Now we have the poor who want the paper; and as they receive it from week to week it is like 'heavenly manna,' and I say let them have it without money and without price, and I will help pay for it. And I want to say to the brethren in every town in this State, let some one in every town take hold of this business in earnest, and let us square up what is due from New Hampshire before the first day of April, 1872. It the Lord is coming within a few short months, what is the use of adding farm to farm, or merchandise to merchandise, and thus be heaping up treasures for the last days?"

BRO. P. G. BOWMAN writes:—"The opposition heretofore existing against us, seems to be giving way to a better feeling. So much for returning good for evil. Glory be to God, the truth is spreading, and the people are embracing it. Last Sabbath was a glorious day at both of my appointments. The congregations are increasing. In the morning one soul united with us, and in the afternoon the power of God came upon us. The people wept in the house and out of the house. We had a shout in the camp and six more cast in their lot among us. My soul was on the wing. Blessed be his name, my soul has heaven and peace within. O, when will the love of God take possession of every heart? the love that casteth out all fear that hath torment; that overcometh the world; that burns like fire within, and consecrates all we have and are to our royal Nobleman, whom we soon expect to see coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."

BRO. W. H. H. ARNOLD writes:—"I have been holding meetings in Exeter, R. I., in a small place called Tug Hollow. Twenty-one have found peace in believing. One has been baptized. The Lord is doing a great work in this part of his vineyard."

BEST BOOK FOR EVERYBODY.—The new illustrated edition of Webster's Dictionary, containing three thousand engravings, is the best book for everybody that the press has produced in the present century, and should be regarded as indispensable to the well-regulated home, reading-room, library and place of business.—Golden Era.

ELDER GRANT.—Last evening the Academy of Music was completely packed, it being the occasion of the delivery of the last of Elder Grant's series of lectures on Prophecy. After devotional exercises, the speaker began by an allusion to the theories of previous lectures and directed the attention of his hearers to the allusions in the book of Revelations to the woman that rode upon the beast with seven heads. The woman, dressed in scarlet, represented the church. The beast, the temporal power by which the church was sustained. He then proceeded to illustrate from history in verification of prophecy, his theory of the rise, existence and fall of the Church of Rome. The seven heads, he remarked, represented first the seven hills of Rome; then the seven original powers and nations that have since the reign of Justinian supported the church. From the reign of Justinian to the late disaster to the Napoleonic dynasty he contended that the prophecies had been verified; and claims that Napoleon III. is the power that is represented by the seventh head of the beast. This head according to the prophecies was to be cast into the depth, and was to rise again. This he illustrated by the fate of Napoleon I. and Napoleon II. He believed that should this step in the prophetic course occur we shall be much nearer the coming of Christ than many imagine. He averred his belief in the prophecies, and urged upon his hearers the necessity of preparing for the great event. The audience listened with the closest attention, and appeared to be greatly impressed with the discourse. This evening a discussion on the nature and destiny of man will take place between Elder Grant and Dr. Truesdell. The Elder holds that man is not endowed with an immortal soul, but that immortality is exclusively the gift of God through Jesus Christ; that the dead are unconscious and will so remain until the literal resurrection; that this earth is to be restored to its Eden state, and made the saints' home, Christ the King, dwelling in the New Jerusalem, the metropolitan city, that is to come down from the heavens, and be located where is now the land of Palestine. The wicked, the finally impenitent, are, according to the Elder's views—which he will express in debate to-night—be cut off, destroyed, burned up; shall become as though they never had been. Dr. Truesdell, an accomplished speaker, will maintain the orthodox doctrines of natural immortality, and eternal misery for the wicked as the penalty of their transgressions.—Sacramento Record, Feb. 15th.

WILLIAMS—MUGRIDGE. At Portsmouth, N. H., Feb. 17th, by Eld. Joseph W. White, Mr. MARTIN V. B. WILLIAMS, of Kittery, Me., and Miss MARY E. MUGRIDGE, of Portsmouth, N. H.

Obituaries.

HICKS. Sr. Celia A. Hicks, wife of Marcena A. Hicks, and daughter of Alvin Cudworth, of New Rutland, Ill., fell asleep in Jesus, Feb. 19th, 1872, aged thirty-four years, eleven months, and two days.

Sr. Hicks embraced the Lord Jesus as her Savior when about twelve years old, and joined the Methodist church, and remained a consistent member of that society till 1853, when she embraced the faith of the soon coming of the Lord, and was baptized by Bro. Pratt. Of her it may be said that she constantly and faithfully fought the good fight, and perseveringly pursued the christian course, and kept the faith. She rests from all labors and suffering, which were very great during the last eight weeks of her life, but in them all not a murmuring word escaped her lips. She was happy and resigned to her Father's will. Her great loss to the afflicted husband and dear children and aged father cannot be told.

RAYMOND. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Plymouth, Mass., Feb. 3d, 1872, E. S. Raymond, aged sixty-two years and six months.

Bro. R. was a christian, loved by a large circle of friends and kindred, who deeply mourn their loss. He leaves five children and a sorrowing widow to drink the bitter cup of affliction, and henceforth to tread alone life's uneven way, and yet not alone, for the widow's God is with her. The church has lost a faithful, zealous worker, and a bright and shining light. Funeral service conducted by the writer. MRS. J. R. BOYNTON.

QUIMBY. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Deerfield, N. H., Jan. 26th, Bro. Timothy Quimby, aged sixty-seven years.

Bro. Quimby had long been looking for the appearing of Christ, and had passed through trials and disappointments; but he never regretted the sacrifice he had made. He was faithful unto the end, and died in the triumphs of faith, with the assurance that in a few months he would hear the voice of Jesus, and come forth to immortality. Opening prayer at funeral service by Bro. Payne. Sermon from Ps. 17: 15, by the writer.

E. MORRILL.

SMITH. Died in Portsmouth, N. H., Feb. 15th, 1872, Willie Forrest, son of Frank P. and Elma M. Smith, aged four years and five months.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Brn. Piper and Owen. Words of comfort were spoken from 2 Kings 4: 22.

GREAT BRITAIN.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF THE QUEEN.

LONDON, Feb. 29. [World's Special.] As the Queen was re-entering the court-yard at Buckingham Palace after a drive through the park to-day, Arthur O'Connor, a Fenian, eighteen years of age, sprang over the wall, rushed up to the carriage and struck the Queen on the breast with an unloaded pistol, at the same time presenting a petition for amnesty to Fenians, exclaiming "Sign or die!" Prince Leopold, who was seated in the carriage with the Queen, knocked the man down. O'Connor was seized and conveyed to prison. The Queen was perfectly calm. When O'Connor was questioned, he said his design was to frighten the Queen into doing justice to Ireland.

LONDON, March 3. [New York World special.] There is the best reason to believe that the British Government are prepared to consent to allow the arbitration of the Alabama claims to proceed, under agreement that in no event shall the sum awarded for damages exceed a certain stipulated amount.

FRANCE.

PARIS, Feb. 29. The Rappel, the publication of which was suspended some time ago, has again appeared.

The Count Chambord has made arrangements for a temporary residence at the Hague.

It is reported that President Thiers has again offered the Pope the hospitality of France, and that Austria has tendered His Holiness Salzburg Castle for a residence.

GERMANY.

BERLIN, Feb. 29. The extension of the fortifications of Metz and Strasbourg has been decreed.

BERLIN, March 2. The North German Gazette says that the latest communication of Antonelli to the Bishop of Strasbourg, with regard to the Concordat, in its application to Alsace and Lorraine, does not alter the situation. Each party desires to have the present arrangement abrogated, and it seems a new one is wanted by the Pope. The Gazette further says, apparently by authority, that the German Government will seek to arrange matters by legislation as favorably as possible to the interests of the church in Alsace and Lorraine.

ITALY.

ROME, Feb. 29. Gen. Magnani, Minister of War, has requested the Chamber of Deputies to vote an appropriation of 12,000,000 livres, to enable him to provide for the proper training of the army, and for the erection of buildings for the proper accommodation of the troops.

Garibaldi has published a denial of the report that he is connected with the International Society.

THE POPE TO VACATE THE ETERNAL CITY.

ROME, March 2. It is now believed that the Pope meditates departing from this city at an early day. The archives and jewelry in the Vatican are being securely packed, so as to be in readiness for removal. It is said that the Pope will go to Trent in the Tyrol.

ROME, March 4. Pere Hyacinthe delivered an address at a Protestant meeting to-night, on the diffusion of the Bible.

IMPERIAL NUPTIALS.—The Emperor of China is soon to be married, and has imported a pair of elephants to assist at the ceremony. His future consort is undergoing a careful training in the etiquette of court life. For three years the looms of Nankin, Hongchau and Canton have been engaged on the silks and satins for her bridal trousseau, and just now they are announced as completed, at a cost of nearly half a million in our money. While the bridegroom, who has the sun for his emblem, goeth forth drawn by elephants, his bride, who represents the moon, is to be borne to her palace on a palaquin composed entirely of strings of pearls.

DOMESTIC.

THE INTERNATIONALS.

New York, March 3. Garibaldi has accepted with thanks honorary membership of section 35 of the Internationals of New York. His letter bears the date of Caprera, Feb. 6. The organization has arranged for a mass meeting in Tomkins square on the 7th inst. to advocate the employment by the Government of all persons out of work.

THE JAPANESE EMBASSY.

Washington, March 4. At noon to-day the principal members of the Japanese Embassy, ten in number, were officially presented to the President.

THE INTERNATIONAL of Europe is now reported as working with extraordinary activity to reorganize on a basis which will defy all attack. Sections are formed in all parts of France. Agents heavily paid by the Supreme Committee fill the provinces and are recruiting adherents. The Central Council are making every effort to obtain payment of subscriptions in arrears, and are attempting to obtain, not only in France, but in all countries, an exact statement of the strength in men and money of the International. Its adherents are classified by categories of age and capacity.

In Brief.

—— One of the young Japanese students in this country has become a convert to Christianity, and now is awaiting the arrival of the Embassy that are soon expected from California, in order to get permission to make an open confession of his faith. One of his young countrymen did so not very long since, and was immediately called home to give an account of himself; but the account he gave was so far satisfactory that he has been sent back to America as an interpreter, with the present Embassy.——A very pleasant and appropriate custom is reported of a physician in North Yarmouth, Me., who, during the fifty years of his practice, has appropriated the proceeds of his professional services on the Sabbath, to benevolent purposes.——Yokohama, Japan, is to be lighted with gas. The company is of native formation, and the works are to be supplied from Glasgow, Scotland.——One of the passengers who was in the blockaded trains on the Union Pacific Railroad has died since reaching San Francisco, from the effects of fatigue and exposure.——The origin of the English newspaper is shrouded in mystery. So far as known, the first printed intelligence transmitted to different parts of the country, in a form somewhat resembling the newspaper, was the news of the descent of the Spanish armada in 1588.

Notices.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Mass. Second Advent Conference for the choice of officers, will commence in Chelsea, Mass., at the Second Advent Chapel on Heard Street, Tuesday evening, April 2nd, continuing day and evening, and over the following Sunday. The church of Christ worshiping at the Advent Chapel send greeting, and invite their brethren far and near to come up to this meeting and enjoy the freedom of the gospel in praying, singing, preaching, and exhorting one another, and so much the more as you see the day approaching. Let all the Advent churches in the State be represented at this meeting.

C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

We purpose this Conference to take the place of conferences occasionally held in Boston, which have been so profitable and successful in bringing together the lovers of the Savior's return from all parts of the country. We do not intend the business shall interfere more than possible with the time and spirit of worship. We earnestly invite all to come to this feast. We shall do our best to take care of and make you comfortable.

We expect to get a reduction of fares on the railroads coming to the city, which will be published in due time. J. COUCH, Pastor.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN Conference of Eastern Maine and New Brunswick, will convene with the church in Milltown, Me., March 28th, 1872, and continue over the next Lord's day. Come praying, and unite for the salvation of sinners. Brn. A. Ross, J. M. Tozier, and others, are expected to be present to preach the word.

M. W. CORLISS.

THE church raised up at Ooltewah, Tenn., under the labors of Sr. Hastings and Bro. Davis, are trying to build them a place to worship in. They are very poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, and are ardent lovers of the south. Any one wishing to help them, can send to Hezekiah Davis, Woodstock Valley, Conn., or Mrs. H. B. Hastings, 19 Lindall St., Boston, Mass.

THE next quarterly meeting of the A. C. Conference of Northern Pennsylvania and Southern New York, will be held with the church in Hornellsville, N. Y., commencing Friday evening, March 22nd, to continue over the Sunday following.

J. W. TAYLOR, President,
A. H. BRIGGS, Secretary.

THERE will be a conference meeting in Garland Village (Town house), commencing March 14th, at seven o'clock P. M., to hold over the Sabbath. H. B. Seavey, Jer. Carr, and N. G. Reed are expected to preach the word. Call on Brn. Millet and Field. In behalf of the brethren,

O. G. TRUNDY.

THE NEW YORK Adv. Chris. Conference will convene with the Church in Lockport, on Thursday evening, for its next quarterly session, March 14th, and continue through the week and over Sunday. All are invited. It is hoped there will be a large attendance, and a full representation by delegates, as there will need be some judicious planning for the next annual meeting in June. Shall there be a campmeeting as last year—where? Pray for this meeting, and come praying. Do not forget the collection.

D. COGSWELL, Pres.
WM. E. BROWN, Sec.

THE THIRD Quarterly Meeting for the E. Dist., Wis., will be held with the Church at Cassel's Prairie, Sauk County, Wisconsin, to commence Friday evening, March 22d, and hold over Lord's day. Let there be a general rally at the commencement of the meeting. Come from the closet, and bring a blessing with you.

GEO. THOMPSON.

HAVING been divinely blessed in preaching the blessed gospel of Christ in different places, I feel desirous of occupying my time more fully in this heavenly calling, and so would notify any who would be willing to assist me in appointments, to address me by letter, or otherwise. WM. HOBBS, Cambridgeport, Mass.

ELD. JOHN COUCH is pastor of the Second Advent Church in Chelsea, Mass., and all communications relative to supplying the desk must be directed to him hereafter.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

"THIEF ON THE CROSS,"

BY ELDER GEORGE THOMSON.

A New Tract.

One of the best ever published on the above subject. Just the thing to scatter widely. Price, 8 cts. single; postage, 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred, by mail. AG'T.

NEW TRACT.

We have just received a new tract of 24 pages, entitled, "The Coming Reign of Terror, or the Commune," by W. N. Pile. The writer shows that the "Reign of Terror" of 1792 was produced by the workings of Socialism, Spiritualism, Infidelity, Free-Love, and the Commune; and then reasons that as these elements are now at work everywhere, they must produce the same results. The tract treats of the living issues of the present, reveals the awful condition of society, and shows that we are on the verge of "the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

For sale at this office. Price, by mail, single copy, 7 cts.; five copies, 30 cts.; ten copies, 50 cts.; fifty copies, $2.00; one hundred copies, by express, $3.50. AG'T.

Also sold by the author at Springfield, Mass.

THE DURATION AND NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

BY HENRY CONSTABLE, A. M., PREBENDARY OF CORK. Reprinted from the second London edition, with an Introduction by Prof. C. L. Ives, M. D., of Yale College. 8vo. 68 pp. Price 40 cents.

All things considered, we regard this the best work on the subject treated of now before the public, and the one to distribute, especially among our friends and neighbors who do not hold with us on the subject. We have procured a large lot of the publisher, and put them at the following low prices:—1 copy, 40 cts.; two copies, 75 cts.; three copies, $1; one dozen for $3.50;—all sent by mail, postpaid. Please order freely. AG'T.

"Paul's Earnest Exhortation and Hope."

BY O. R. FASSETT.

A tract of twenty pages. Perhaps the best ever published upon this subject. Get it, read and lend, or give it away. Two copies for 10 cts. postpaid; 50 cts. per dozen. For sale at this office.

THE GOSPEL HOPE.

By a CONGREGATIONALIST. A letter on the Prominence and Importance of the Lord's Coming as shown in the Scriptures. To which is added other important matter from Luther, Tyndale, Wesley, and others. 12 pp. $1.00 per one hundred; 20 cents per dozen, by mail. For sale at this office.

THE FAITHFUL WATCHMEN.

By Rev. J. R. MACDUFF, D. D., and Rev. J. H. BROOKES, D. D. A valuable tract on the Second Coming of Christ, and the duty to watch for his coming. 12 pp. $1.00 per one hundred; 20 cts. per dozen, by mail. For sale at this office.

"TALKS ABOUT HEALTH."

BY DR. DIO LEWIS.

A choice little work of about 125 pages, which will be sent by mail on receipt of the price—25 cents.

"THE MIDNIGHT CRY."

BY N. H. BARBOUR.

A pamphlet of one hundred pages. Second edition. Presenting evidences of the coming of the Lord in 1873. Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

This work discloses the Bible time of the second coming of Christ, and the providential sanctions of the Advent ministry beyond all others. It will richly reward the most careful reading.—J. B. Cook.

NEW TRACTS.

Just published by the A. C. P. Society, Symbolization of the World's Eventful Crisis, by O. R. FASSETT.

An excellent tract of 16 pages, showing that we are living amid the events occurring under the opening of the "sixth seal"; that "we are witnessing them, and are far down in their history, and close upon the end of this world and the solemn judgment scenes."

Price, single, 2 cts.; postage, 2 cts.; 20 cts. per dozen; $1.50 per hundred, by mail.

"THE END AT HAND."

A TRACT OF 24 PAGES.

Showing that the "Gospel of the kingdom" has been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations"; and that the end of this dispensation is at hand, and the Lord about to appear in his glory. By Eld. John Couch. Just the thing to scatter by the thousands. Let it have a wide circulation. Price single, 3 cents; postage 2 cts.; 25 cts. per dozen; $2.00 per hundred by mail.

THE ADVENT OF CHRIST.

CLINTON COLEGROVE.

Full in mid heaven, in robes of gold,
Our royal King and Priest behold!
From an unmeasured height I see
Jesus, my friend, coming to me!

Majestic on thy radiant road,
Welcome! thou coming Son of God;
Thy track illumed with flames of fire,—
All hail! the woe-worn earth's Desire.

To right and left the skies divide,
Cleaving a pathway bright and wide,
While round and round in endless fold
Ten thousand crowning clouds are rolled.

What face of love so fair as thine,
Thou world-redeeming Chief Divine?
Its look of rapture and of rest
Flames through my captivated breast.

Take thy possession, King of kings;
Rule and restore terrestrial things;
Far be thine empire spread abroad,
Thine is the kingdom, Son of God!

A STORY OF GRACE.—No. 9.

E. S. WILLARD.

God's closing up Dispensational Message to this Age.—Continued.

By a kind recovery, husband was able in the spring to superintend the building of a house of worship in Oswego. By the first of June the house was so nearly completed as to accommodate the Northern Indiana Baptist Association which met at that time. We had attended it the year previous at Laporte where we made some precious acquaintances, and we anticipated much joy in meeting them at this time. But when the friends arrived, not one of those so dear to us was among them—not one that was looking for Jesus. The meeting was lifeless, and only one baptised. It seemed to us very much as did the sepulchre to Mary when they had taken away her Lord. We felt that we had had our labor for our pains—and a labor it was, as hundreds were accommodated at our house. To some this may seem an exaggeration, but it is far from it, as many can testify. On the Saturday night of that meeting one hundred took supper at our house each seated at the table with clean plate, knife and fork. Twenty-five sisters slept in one room, and other rooms as full, while a score and more brethren went to the barn. On Sunday we fed the multitude, and on Monday it was a stream of comers and goers, the table upon the floor from morning till night. Long before it was over I could not wear a shoe of mine but had to be accommodated by another size; and such prostration followed that we deemed it wise to avoid a summer's exposure to this unhealthy air and concluded to return to Cincinnati on a visit to my dear father and sister and greet once more those so dear to us in the Lord.

Meanwhile, and all unknown to us, and I think I mistake not when I say, a result of counsel at this association, another minister in full sympathy with them in their opposition to the Second Advent near was called to serve the church in connection with Elder Chaplin, half the time, and he—Eld Barnes, to reside in Oswego. On our return, greatly to our surprise, these facts were made known to us; but charity thinketh no evil, nor did we, and we moved on in harmony. But little did I think that the accommodation of this minister and family for weeks after his arrival would fall to us, but so it proved. True to the word, however, this worked for good.

The preaching by this ministry was like oil and water in the same vessel, for a time; by constant agitation, they seem to unite, but ultimately the oil, true to its nature, overrides the water. So great was the desire of these men to keep the peace that the preaching was a little like the compound alluded to, neither the one thing nor the other—a position of more vile endurance cannot be conceived for a "man of God" or for a church, and why Elder Chaplin consented to take such a position I can only solve, thus knowing him as I do and all the circumstances that must have weighed upon his mind. It was not for earthly emolument, for he had no need; like the woman of Sheenam, he dwelt among his own people. His labor was as free as the gospel he preached. It was not for the pleasure of riding back and forth a distance of twelve miles, for he uniformly made the journey on foot. It was not for love of controversy, for to this, no man could be more averse. But here lay the secret: he dare not do otherwise lest he offend God. God had set him over his people and until released by Him he must hold his position though difficulty pile mountain high; and this he did, and God honored him in the sacrifice, making him victorious at the last.

Elder Barnes' coming to our house, as the world would say, was quite fortuitous; but to me it was no more so than the coming of Saul to Samuel. I was introduced to him—now an elderly man, and to his wife much younger, and to their two sons nearly half grown, by a company of sisters from the female prayer meeting just as he had turned his horse to come up to Deacon F.'s, whose wife stood in the door at the time, but who, upon seeing them, instantly withdrew, and shut the door. In a few moments I found myself alone in the street with these strangers. Whereupon, with concern I inquired:—

"Where are you going to put up? here?" alluding to Dea F.'s.

"I do not know," he replied; "I am not particular where we go so that we are welcome."

"Then come with me," said I, "and you shall be welcome."

Without hesitation he headed his horse the other way and drove to our house. Had he come to this place to defend Baptist tenets against Bible truth at the expense of our feelings, from this moment he was disarmed; and the most tender regard for us was manifested by him ever after. I could talk as freely to him upon my change of views as to Bro. Chaplin, and he never but once truly grieved me by an unkind allusion in public, to our discrepant views. Elder Chaplin was still more careful of the other side; hence we followed after the things which make for peace; completed the meeting house, kept up all the means of grace, talked freely of the coming of our Lord and no opposition seemed to be excited; but the children of God were passing through a season of drill, which enabled them to act promptly when the word of command from headquarters came.

But the sequel I did not know, and the pressure that was upon me from time to time seemed insupportable. I had light to see the sword coming, but, like one under an incubus, had no power to give the adequate warning or to inspire others to do so.

I cried to God at times with many tears that he would bring out our ministers to sound the alarm, that the church might awake to her duty, and sinners flee to Christ for refuge before the coming storm. Words can give but a faint picture of the travail of soul through which I passed during this duplicate ministry among us. At times I cried to God to put the words into my own mouth, and he did fill my mouth with argument; but this only added to my sorrow for I found no place of utterance. The words of Joel seemed applicable—"Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vinedressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished." Ah me! the harvest is now perishing, was my lamentation. "O Lord, send by whom thou wilt send, only let thy truth be manifested in our midst!"

After this long struggle a sweet confidence in God filled my soul; and for myself I could say, Thou wilt lead me. And in due time this Gethsemane sorrow of soul and wrestling brought relief to the church. There is a due time for every deliverance, and there was a due time for the one before us.

The second week in February, 1845, a protracted meeting was proposed by the church. We, hearing that Elder Cook—our true "Evangelist," was laboring in Indianapolis, the capital of the State, wrote to him our circumstances and besought him to come to our relief, which he did in his own private carriage over roads almost impassable, a distance of one hundred and twenty miles. At one point in his journey he became so discouraged at the accumulated difficulties that he seriously contemplated a return. While in this state of mind he alighted and sought a retired spot and there earnestly sought guidance from above, when these words were given him—"Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind." 1 Pet. 4: 1. Thus was he armed for his future journey and for the rougher way that awaited his arrival.

He found the meeting proceeding upon the usual plan with direct effort for the conversion of sinners. The anxious seats were employed and no pains spared to save souls "after the most approved plan." Elder Barnes led the meeting. Brother Chaplin soon came and was with us through the meeting, also Elder Greenleaf and Father Martin as helpers in the ministry.

At the close of the first meeting after our brother's arrival an invitation was given, as usual, to the unconverted. My impulse was to do what I could to encourage them forward. Soon two consented, provided I would go with them. I did so and took my seat with them, upon which I suddenly felt forsaken of the Lord. I trembled lest I be asked to pray for them—and presently I was thus solicited, but it was evident to me that the Spirit did not help; I was weak and powerless, and was given there to feel that this course was out of God's order for this meeting; and was confirmed in my long cherished conviction that the first work now to be done was with the church. That God had a controversy with his people here and would not use them for the conversion of sinners until this was settled. Upon this anxious seat, for such truly it was to me, I made up my mind to have nothing more to do in that direction until further light.

The next morning commenced the feast of fat things from the lips of Elder Cook, who, like an householder brought forth out of his treasure things new and old. How we feasted meal after meal, day after day! we felt like a person long shut up in prison fed on bread and water, suddenly brought out to a sumptuous fare and bidden to eat without fear of injury. And we improved our time and supposed our fellow-christians were enjoying it equally as well, hence how great was our surprise after a time to find them grumbling about the fare.

Said they, "All the preaching is about the judgment; we want preaching to sinners. The object of the meeting was to convert sinners. None are converted." Elder Barnes and Bro. D. looked grum. What was to be done? "Oh, go and talk with them and it will soon be all right." This was done, but no relief. Well, we could not stop feasting.

God's plan from Paradise lost to Paradise restored was spread before us in its own true light, which was so new and so captivating that even the disaffection of our brethren, which under other circumstances we should have deplored to the loss of all comfort, was a small matter in comparison. We were hearing for eternity in the face of speedy judgment. All were requested to bring their Bibles so that, as our brother said, two senses might be employed to impress truth upon the mind. It was remarked that more Bibles had been sold in that place since Elder Cook came than in a year before.

The preaching had the same effect as had that of Paul while a prisoner in Rome—when we departed we had great reasoning among ourselves. The Lord was at work. Prayer was being answered—the sunlight of God's truth was now beaming upon us—we must hear and the only question was, shall we so hear as to live? Never had I such an experience since first I gave my heart to God. It was like a new conversion. Even Jesus seemed new for I saw in a new light the whole plan of redemption. The Bible was new for its treasures were being unfolded as never before in my hearing. What could I do? I was not my own but bought with a price—hence it was not for me to turn aside to confer with flesh and blood. Will you hear? will you believe? will you obey? and do it now? were the stern questions propounded and to be solved. Oh God! what searchings of soul as well as of Bible were here. On the one side a church that I loved, that I had prayed for, and had seen grow up from infancy—the young converts—the Sabbath school so long my nursery that I tenderly loved, and those with whom I had taken sweet counsel in the female prayer meeting to whom my heart was knit in christian bonds—in short, my all seemed to centre there. On the other hand was the Truth of God. To embrace it was to give up all these! What shall I do? Have I strength for the step? I have! was my decision; my fate for time and for eternity is bound to that of Truth as was Ruth bound to Naomi; and thus I said—"Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Amen and Amen. The struggle was over, the burden of many months lifted, and I at peace amid the storm.

By this time the whole community for miles around was moved, and the house crowded every evening to hear the "certain strange things" brought to our ears. The visions of Daniel and John made plain upon tables, Habakkuk second, were a fruitful source of marvel and brought great numbers; and it was also soon noised abroad that some were offended. This reached a class that nothing else could, and they came to see the fray.

Elder Cook continued his daily and nightly labors until the opposition rose beyond endurance to his weak frame. Elder Barnes would sit in front of the desk and sigh as "with the breaking of his loins" during the exercises which so wore upon Bro. Cook that on one evening he left the desk to be filled by another. Great disappointment was manifested when it was announced that Eld. Cook was unable to fill the appointment, and Father Martin, much against his will, urged to go forward and speak to the people.

Purposes were now ripening fast. The next morning our conference meeting revealed a state of things truly deplorable. The language of these leaders was like this—"Ye take too much upon you; seeing all the congregation are holy; every one of them, and the Lord is among them; wherefore lift ye up yourselves against the congregation of the Lord?" Num. 16: 3. As Moses fell upon his face at the utterance of these words, so even were those humbled on this occasion, in whom was the Spirit of Moses. One dear brother of blessed memory, upon whom came the Spirit of God in mighty power, threw his arms about the neck of Eld. Barnes and entreated him, with tears, not to be offended; that no one had meant him harm:—then to others in the same spirit of exhortation, that was heard at a great distance. There were few dry eyes in that house. But as Moses clave to the Lord and stood up for the right against rebellion and strange fire, so did these stand up for God in his long buried truth.

It was clear to my mind, on this memorable morning, that if we, as a church, did reject the second coming of our Lord as now made plain to us "in the Scriptures of truth," as God rejected Saul from being king over Israel, so would he reject us from being his people. I felt it my duty to give this testimony on this occasion; and so strong was my impression that the die was already cast, that as I left the house I turned and wrote upon the side-post at its door—"Ichabod." 1 Sam. 4: 21.

In the evening Elder Cook preached to a densely crowded house, gallery and all. During this sermon I suddenly felt a trembling of spirit, as if unprepared for what was coming, accompanied with the impression—"Go home and pray." I slipped out, being near the door, and ran home, but a little way off, and there, all unobserved by the family, wrestled with God until reassured and calm, then returned to the church just in time for what follows.—The climax had come. At the close of this discourse Elder Barnes, who that evening had taken his seat far back in the body pews, arose and said, "I have very carefully examined the beautiful theory which has been set before us the two weeks past. I have wished to believe it if it be true. But last night, as I lay pondering, the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation was spread out as a map before me, and I saw nothing of this theory upon it. Therefore my mind is made up that it is false. I can neither receive it, nor preach it, nor countenance it in any shape."

Now came the word of command that called for prompt action. Surprised as you may be at the one who first stepped forward it cannot equal my own as I review the scene. We would naturally suppose that some Aaron or Phineas would have stepped between the dead and living on this occasion, but not so. As David, little and despised, was called to face Goliath, so a woman was the first to hear the voice and to obey.

Instantly, upon Elder B.'s resuming his seat, was I, by an impulse that I could not resist, upon my feet with this message upon my lips—

"If this is Elder Barnes' decision, and settled conviction of duty, I must beg to be excused from any longer sitting under his ministry. I believe what we have heard to be the truth of God, and if he cannot preach it, I must go where it is preached."

This was said in a calm, firm voice and in all kindness. Whereupon Elder B. turned and looking me full in the face, with a confused smile said:—"Sister Willard, you have set down a firm stake." "Yes," I replied, "and may God make it stand." And, I may add, he has; for there it is unto this day."

Now follows Elder Chaplin's time of release from his irksome position so long and wisely endured for Jesus' sake. In his valedictory sermon, the spirit of which may be readily seen by a single quotation used by him on that occasion—"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul entice thee secretly, saying, "Let us go and serve other god's, thou shalt not consent unto him nor hearken unto him." Deut. 13: 6–8. It was a masterpiece of faithfulness and decision in which he, Samson-like, broke the seven green withs wherewith the deceptive Delilah of Sectarianism had bound him to afflict him, and went out God's free man never more to be bound.

Now followed open doors to him throughout that whole region, and he went forth preaching the gospel of the kingdom nigh at hand to attentive listeners, and God was with him, giving efficacy to the word spoken, and great grace was upon his people. My husband also asserted his liberty so ominously foretokened in the following rather amusing incident He was in advance of us all in the reception of the glorious truths that man is mortal and that God only hath immortality. 1 Tim. 6: 16. This light came to him in a two-leaved tract richly laden with scripture quotation by Elder J. B. Cook, entitled "MAN." Never was he so blessed—it was to him a new conversion; and so great was his zeal to have others see it with him that, in a spirited exhortation in the church one evening he unconsciously burst a button from his coat. The next morning during a lively conversation with Dea. F., husband happened to espy his missing button, and remarked upon its loss—whereupon the Deacon with his significant blink, said—

"I guess you burst that off last night, for I thought something had broken loose." The button was found in the pew and its wearer found himself a free man, freely relinquishing all his interest in church and house for which he had spared neither labor nor treasure, and with melting voice invited the homeless ones for truth's sake to his own house, saying—

"It is large enough; come there and you shall be welcome, and the Lord be with us all."

The breach was now made, and as a brother remarking upon it, once said: "When one sheep leaps the fence the whole flock is sure to follow," so it was here; the people of God acted upon their conviction of duty and the separation was complete. (The lambs, and disabled ones that could not leap the enclosure, the "Good Shepherd" will take care of. Bless His name!)

Now for the sad sequel. Would it were otherwise; with melting heart I record it. In a few years from this that once flourishing church was scattered—their pastor is in his grave, and their beautiful house, with its steeple and bell, once our pride, rented out to another denomination—and thus it is to this day. "The glory is departed."

And as the Lord would prove to that people the bitterness of departing from him, a young man of great promise, and a candidate for the ministry, who saw his duty, and came out from among them and returned a license to preach, given him by that church, and began with great liberty to speak for God upon "present truth," was induced to return to the church and again ask for his license, under this influence was led to go to California to set himself up in business—where, alone and unfriended, in a fit of despondency he shot himself; and the following note was found by his side—"Life is more bitter than death." Let us, the living, heed these words: "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Heb. 10: 38. "Yea, woe also to them when I depart from them." Hosea 9: 12.

BRANCH CHAPEL, BOSTON.

This Chapel is pleasantly situated at the extreme south end of Boston, near the Highlands. It is in a good neighborhood for the growth and prosperity of a religious meeting, and the place where a church of this kind is much needed. It will comfortably seat about four hundred persons. Meetings were started here about a year ago by Bro. John G. Hook, and under his labors and management the meetings have, by the blessing of God, become an established success. The power of God has been signally manifested in these meetings from the commencement. Many poor sinners have here found Christ to be a Savior who cleanses the vilest, and backsliders have returned to their Father's house, and found the "Bread of Life" as sweet to their taste as when they first started on the heavenly journey.

The precious truths which we so fondly cherish have here been fully and faithfully preached to many who never before heard about the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of Jesus to give eternal life to his waiting saints; and these truths have here found many who were eager to hear and ready to embrace them.

During the past few weeks this Chapel has been blessed with the labors of Bro. M. Lutz, of Philadelphia, one who is a walking miracle of divine mercy, and a wonderful illustration of the cleansing power of the blood of Christ. About fifteen months ago he was a Tom Paine infidel—not in theory only, but in practice also. He was a swearing, stealing, drinking criminal; had been in prison about fifty times. He was so vile that he was properly called the "wickedest man in Philadelphia." He was considered too bad to be saved, too far gone to be reached by the saving power of the Gospel. He went into the tent "Evangelist" in Philadelphia, to annoy and persecute the people of God, and make fun of religion; but God was too much for him; the Spirit in answer to prayer took hold of the heaven-defying infidel; he felt that he was a great sinner in the sight of God and men; he asked for and received pardon at the foot of the Cross, was baptized by Bro. Hook in the Delaware river, and for fifteen months has been preaching Jesus, who saved him, and who having saved him can save the most depraved. Whereas he once loved to talk about Tom Paine and Voltaire, his greatest joy now is to tell the old, old story of Jesus and his love.

The labors of Bro. Lutz are being abundantly blessed. The Chapel is too small to hold the eager multitude. People flock in from the various churches to hear the converted infidel preach. They not only hear him tell what Jesus has done for him, but they also hear from his lips doctrines that are new to them concerning the coming of Christ, resurrection of the dead, inheritance of the saints on this earth, and the destruction of the finally impenitent. Tracts are freely distributed, and we trust the seed that is being sown will bear much fruit to the glory of God. Yesterday morning (Sunday, Feb. 25th) ten arose for prayers, and in the evening a young man, with tears in his eyes, said that on the previous Sunday evening he was playing cards for money, but now he was determined to be a Christian. Bro. Lutz was intending to return to his home this week, but he feels that duty will compel him to stay in Boston a few weeks longer. Brethren, pray that he may as an evangelist make full proof of his ministry, and that by the blessing of God he may be the means of bringing many to Christ.

We hope that Bro. Hook will be guided by divine wisdom in his future labors at Branch Chapel, and that it may continue to be one of God's light-houses; not only to show the toiling mariner the rocks of destruction that beset his pathway on every hand, but also to point out the true way to the harbor of life, the haven of eternal rest and blessedness.

Boston, Feb. 26th, 1872. P.

WORDS OF SYMPATHY.

I notice a call for help in the Crisis in behalf of Sister Herron, a widow, worthy, sick, needy, with fatherless children. I have no doubt this call will be responded to by those who have this world's goods, for it is a primary part of "pure and undefiled religion." Yet we must admit this duty is too often neglected. There are many widows and orphans in the land who need aid, sympathy, care. Who will seek them out and administer to their needs?

I cannot offer much of this world's goods, but I propose to offer a tribute from my pen of consolation, sympathy, and christian affection. Wherever you may be located, and whatever constitutes the peculiarities of your case, we shall for your benefit try to write words of heavenly consolation.

Probably in your hours of deepest affliction you have exclaimed—"Our grief is too deep to be assuaged by words of human sympathy. We experience a sense of loneliness almost insupportable. The widow is a tree riven by the thunderbolt, and her children are like torn-off branches. The feelings of no heart meet and mingle with our own as formerly, in the warm tide of sympathetic love." This we acknowledge to be true as to all human hearts, however they may be disposed to "weep with those who weep." But God our heavenly Father, however, can and does compassionate your case in your peculiar grief; so to you his promises glow with peculiar effulgence. It is your privilege to taste the sweetest streams from Zion's hill. Not only are the great and precious promises emphatically yours, but many of them entirely yours. How expressive of the divine tenderness is the declaration of the Psalmist—"A Father of the fatherless, and a judge of widows, is God in his holy habitation."

But you may say—"My faith is weak, for my experience is,—We live in a covetous age, where the rights of the defenceless are often infringed." Here our Father has surrounded you with a mountain of rocks. How strongly is this point guarded in the divine oracles: "Ye shall not afflict any widow or fatherless child. If thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry, and my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword, and your wives shall be widows, and your children orphans." The one who dares break this prohibition will be himself the greatest sufferer.

But you sigh for those days of peace, prosperity, and happiness, when the husband and father lived to provide the morning repast and the evening luxury, the glittering toy, and the replenished wardrobe. "Alas!" you say, "the hand which has been accustomed to minister to our daily wants is palsied in death! Whence are to come our food and raiment?" He who heeds the raven's cry will not be deaf to thine. He who said to his covenant people, "When thou cuttest down thy harvest, and hast forgotten a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it, but it shall be for the widow and orphan." What! the God of heaven as mindful as that in giving direction to his people as to remember the widow? Yes, that is our heavenly Father's care; earthly parent may forget, but he never. "Not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice." The Lord will provide for the destitute who trust in him.

How often we have been constrained to admire the goodness and faithfulness of God in the fulfillment of his gracious promises. Often does he provide for the widow in a most unexpected manner.

The following incident will illustrate this position: In one of our New England villages an aged widow lived alone in a small tenement remote from any other habitation. It was a bleak, cold evening in a most severe winter. The snow driven by the furious wind was piled in deep banks along the streets. She was unable to step beyond her doorstep. Her last morsel of bread had been consumed, and none heeded her destitution. She sat shivering by her small fire during the evening, half famished from hunger, thinking of the dreadful fate that threatened. She thought she had prayed in faith in the morning—"Give me this day my daily bread"; but the shadows of the evening had descended upon her, and no answer had been vouchsafed. While these fearful thoughts were passing in her mind, she heard her outer door open suddenly, and as suddenly shut, upon which she found deposited in her entry a basket, crowded with articles of food. Many days elapsed before the poor widow learned through whom God had sent that timely aid. It was at the impulse of a little girl, who, on that dismal night, seated at the cheerful fireside, was led to express the generous wish, that the poor widow whom she had sometime visited might share in her numerous comforts. The parents carried out the benevolent suggestion by sending a servant with a plentiful supply. What a beautiful glimpse of causes, all fastened at the throne of God. There was no pomp or circumstance of the outward miracle, but an angel stirred the breast of a noble-hearted child;—the widow's prayer was answered.

In your hours of sorrow and despondency, call to mind the dealings of God with others in like circumstances. If you are compelled by poverty to leave your residence for some more humble one, you know not where, think of Naomi and Ruth as they turn their back on a spot where they had been very happy in the land of Moab. Unbefriended save by an unseen hand, they commence a tedious journey on foot of more than a hundred miles. Their case affords not an alleviating circumstance. Their safe arrival and prosperity are matters of history, and are designed for the encouragement of others. Some of you have the bitter lot to see the little which has been left you continually consuming, without knowing whence your stores are to be replenished. Think of the widow of Zarephath. Here the widow's extremity proved to be God's opportunity. "For thus saith the Lord God of Israel, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail," all of which was verified in the sequel. Some of you are afflicted by loss of children, so that you are broken-hearted as well as disconsolate; then think of the short, touching narrative of the widow of Nain. Although the day of miracles is in the past (for we do not expect the dead to be raised now), yet Christ is the resurrection and the life. Weeping mother, thy child shall live again!

Sad and afflictive is the lot of the widow and orphan, in some cases heart-rending, and yet not altogether cheerless. Though often slighted, forgotten, and wronged by man, they share largely in the sympathies of the Eternal. When the salvation of a world was at stake, Christ would not die till he had made provision for his widowed mother. Who can doubt but the heart of infinite benevolence does now beat in sympathy for the unprotected widow and fatherless.

Our words of cheer are—the christian's final reward, the resurrection, immortality, the promised inheritance, the new earth, "the tabernacle of God with men"; "and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." O what a glorious hope is ours! Precious promises! O Lord, "let thy kingdom come."

Your sister in Christ, T. F. SARGENT.

— Do with trials as men do with new hats—put them on and wear them until they become easy.

— Any holding back of heart in believing, or of the tongue in confessing, limits the Holy One and checks the fulness of salvation.

— Labored sermons sometimes sweep over the mind as winds sweep over the sea, leaving it more troubled than before.

— The faults of christians are watched with more rigid scrutiny than their virtues; hence the importance of sustaining an unblemished character.

— Ostentatious charity is one of the standard temptations of human nature.

— If we have been made to feel the evil of sin, no one can persuade us that it is not an evil.

— Lies are hiltless swords, which cut the hands that wield them.

— Our religion is to be estimated, not by a few intensities, but by a vital and generous glow and activity throughout our whole life. We are not to mourn because we do not feel; but if, having feeling, we find no expression for that feeling in life, we may well mourn.

— Moderation is the silken string running through the pearl-chain of all virtues.

IN MEMORIAM.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."—Ps. 37: 37.

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate,
Is privileged above the common walks of life,
Quite on the verge of heaven."

How truly was this realized at the death-bed of Bro. Gideon Gray, who fell asleep in Jesus, in Bristol, R. I., Dec. 13th, 1871, aged sixty-seven years.

Bro. Gray was brought into fellowship with Jesus Christ in the great outpouring of the Spirit in 1820. His conviction of sin was pungent, and his conversion clear and unclouded, insomuch that when he embraced the Savior by faith, the seal of the Holy Spirit was visible on his countenane. He united with the Methodist church, and advocated the doctrine of "holiness to the Lord"; and for fifty years he showed his faith by his works, and set an example worthy of imitation, so that even those who despised his faith, were forced to admit his consistent christian character.

He continued in fellowship with the M. E. church until 1843, when the light respecting the speedy return of the Savior shone upon his mind, and he became intensely interested in the subject. As in the case of many others, this rendered his connection with the church inharmonious, as he could not hide his light under a bushel. The consequence was, as they would not tolerate those who preached the coming of the Just One, and no sectarian motives could swerve him from the path of duty, he had to leave those with whom he had so long labored and prayed. Uniting with a few others of like precious faith, who had also been cast out of the synagogue for the truth's sake (one of whom was Bro. D. D. Reed, who is now doing such good service in spreading the truth in California), he contributed most liberally from the means acquired by unremitting toil on his farm, to erect a house of worship, and support the heralds of the Bridegroom; and, though living at a distance, was ever among the most faithful in his attendance, besides being instant, in season and out of season, to give a reason for the hope that was in him.

He leaves a widow, two sons, and two daughters (all christians), and a number of grandchildren to mourn his loss; and the little church in Bristol has lost in him one of its main pillars.

"He shall sleep, but not forever,
There shall be a glorious dawn."

This thought, which enabled him to triumph over the fear of death, and to "approach the grave as one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams," cheers the sorrowing friends, while they mourn not "as those that have no hope." The funeral sermon was preached Sunday, Feb. 4th, by Elder Durfee.—Com. by T.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."

SENSIBLE.

The following are sensible thoughts, and worthy of a candid consideration. But few are aware of the importance of having an unpolluted body. The stomach has a very intimate connection with the brain, which is the organ of thought. No one who over-eats, or uses unhealthy food, can feel as well as he would if he ate temperately of that which is healthy. We are most fully convinced that the number of backsliders would be greatly diminished if professors of religion did not abuse their stomachs. Those desponding, unpleasant feelings, gloominess, and darkness, often have their origin in a diseased, abused, and overloaded stomach, stuffed with unhealthy food and drink. This produces irritability and fretfulness, and condemnation follows. Satan knows how to take advantage of all these things.

Let us deny ourselves of all worldly lusts, and keep our bodies under, that we may be ready to meet Jesus.

But here are the "sensible thoughts" to which we referred:

PHYSICAL SINS.

"We hear a great deal now-a-days about national and individual sins, sins of omission and sins of commission, original sin and acquired sin, sins against the gospel, sins against the State, sins against the community, and so on, through interminable varieties and gradations; but, strange to say, we scarcely ever hear the parent of most of these sins adverted to, much less combatted. Unfortunately theologians have not given that prominence in their systems to the laws written by the Almighty in the human constitution which they should have done, but have regarded health and disease rather as dispensations of a mysterious Providence than as the result of obedience to or sin against unyielding laws. The connection between mind and matter in this life, and the consequent dependence of the former upon the latter, have been too much ignored. It is an indisputable fact that a pure mind cannot occupy a polluted body, nor moral excellence exist along with physical depravity. Until christians pay that respect to the physical and organic laws which they do to the revealed, and get rid of the most pernicious idea that disease is the arbitrary visitation of an inscrutable Providence, Christianity cannot perform half its work, nor the flood-gates of crime and misery be closed. Until then even those who profess to be our moral exemplars will not cease to build up with the one hand what they would demolish with the other."

A NEW AND MALIGNANT DISEASE.—The Cincinnati Times and Chronicle has an editorial upon the new and terrible disease which has so far baffled the best skill of physicians, and which, for lack of a better name, they call "cerebro-spinal meningitis." According to the Times it is the name, rather than the disease, which is new. Both in Europe and this country a strange disease, called sometimes "the black plague" and sometimes "the spotted fever," has followed in the track of war. Of late, however, it has manifested itself without any seeming connection with the bloodshed of war. Maryland has been most seriously affected with it, and within the past few weeks it has made its appearance in New York. During the past week four children of one family have died of it in that city, and with all of them there was scarcely twelve hours between the attack and the death. The symptoms were all nausea and sudden chills at the inception, and purpuric and rose-colored spots on face, chest and body at the death. Physicians declare it to be the result of a blood poison, and that its direct cause is generally traceable to the filthy condition of drains, sewers, or garbage piles. Active stimulants are said to be the only hope after the disease has once secured a hold upon its victim. Of course, the chief precaution against it, as against all diseases, is cleanliness of person and surroundings. It will be remembered that it was to this disease the physicans in the Wharton trial, attributed the death of Gen. Ketchum.—Boston Journal.

THE POWER OF LOVE.

Here is a little story which illustrates the great power of love. A kind christian lady, in one of her visits of charity, found a poor, destitute little orphan girl, and brought her to her own house. The little stranger at first would take no comfort, but sat down weeping in the hall. The children of the house endeavored to make friends with her and draw her into the parlor, but they could not; and so they said to their mother: "She will not come and play with us. She will not leave the hall."

"There is a secret," said the lady, "by which you can bring her where you like. It is a secret in four letters. Try if you can find it out."

The eldest sister took the lead, searching eagerly among all her prettiest playthings. "I know what it is," cried she, "it is D-o-ll." So she brought her best doll, and offered to give it to the child if she would come into the parlor. No; it was a failure.

The next in age said to herself: "Muff is spelt with four letters;" and brought her a fine muff—a Christmas present; but she would not touch the muff, nor even look at it.

Grace, the youngest, could think of nothing worth offering after this, but stood looking on in sorrow, until at length, following an instinct of her own, she sat down beside the little stranger and cried too. Then presently, she took her by the hand, and encircling her neck with her own tiny arm, she drew the weeping head softly nearer and nearer, and imprinted a gentle kiss upon her cheek. This decided the battle. There was nothing said but Grace soon led the way into the parlor holding her captive by the hand.

"Well, girls," said the mother, "Grace has found out the secret, and the four letters are L-O-V-E. Love is the strongest rope in the world—even God will follow when you draw with that."

Ah! yes, love is a great power. It draws all things to itself. It drew the Son of God down to earth to die for us, and led him back to heaven to intercede for us; and is able to draw him down again, any day and every day, to dwell with us in our hearts.—It will draw down blessings on our labors. It will draw down answers to all our prayers.—Kind Words.

"COULD I KEEP THE GOOD NEWS?"—A New Zealand girl was brought over to England to be educated. She became a true christian. When she was about to return, some of her playmates endeavored to dissuade her. They said:—

"Why go back to New Zealand? You are accustomed to England now. You love its shady lanes and clover-fields. It suits your health. Besides, you may be shipwrecked on the ocean. You may be killed and eaten by your own people; everybody will have forgotten you."

"What!" she said, "do you think that I could keep the good news to myself? Do you think that I could be content with having got pardon, and peace, and eternal life for myself, and not go and tell my dear father and mother how they may get it too? I would go if I had to swim there."—Apostolic Times.

SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN.—God's holy angels love children. The Lord Jesus Christ loved and loves little children. Jesus, who knew, said of such is the kingdom of heaven. Can little children love play and love Christ? Most certainly. Suffer little children to be christians. The Christlikeness is not destroyed by these childish sports and little enjoyments. Children may love God and keep his commandments. They are children to be trained up in the ways of the Lord. They must be children. God the Father loves them as such. Suffer little children to come to Christ, and forbid them not. They will shine among the good.—Children's Herald.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THAT REMARKABLE STATEMENT.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

In the Crisis of Feb. 21st, Bro. J. S. White takes exceptions to a statement of mine, that "the period of the reign of Justinian, emperor of the East, is where all Catholic and Protestant writers of any note place the supremacy of the papacy." The main point at issue is, in the expression—"of any note." My understanding and application of this is—correct writers of historical facts; sound expositors of prophecy; those that have made an application of the facts of history, agreeable to the express conditions of the prophecies. It appears from the large number of quotations, mostly from post-millennial writers, in Bro. W.'s article, those of this school are to be regarded as writers of note, in his estimation. If such writers as these have perverted facts of history, they are not writers of note, in my estimation, although they may be learned and popular men. It is by this class that the truth has generally been perverted and covered over; and while such may be men of note in the estimation of the world, they are not such in the estimation of the lovers of truth. We would not be understood as regarding such writers as willful perverters of history, or that they may not be correct in the main, and so far be noted writers. Perhaps if I had been a little more careful in the choice of terms to express my views, I should not have become an offender in the use of a word that is used with various significations.

As to the date of the supremacy of the papacy, we will quote from Hale's "Manual," pp. 85–88:—"We have before us a work on the Apocalypse, by Rev. George Croly, of England, published in 1827, and dedicated to the Right Rev. Thomas Lord, Bishop of Salisbury, in which he gives a detailed history of the acts from which the supremacy of the pope is to be dated. We give an extended quotation from his work, which we consider decisive testimony of the time when popery was 'set up,' that is, when the saints were formally and publicly given into its hands. See also 'Prospects of the Church of Christ,' by Hon. G. T. Noel, p. 100; 'Political Destiny of the Earth,' by Wm. Cunninghame, Esq., p. 28. 'Encyclopedia of Rel. Knowledge,' art., Antichrist.

"Mr. Croly (pp. 113–117) says: A. D. 533 the pope was declared head of all the churches by the emperor Justinian. The circumstances of a transaction so pregnant with the most momentous results to the Christian world are to be found at large in the annals of Baronius, the chief Romish ecclesiastical historian. (Vol. 7, p. 194, fal. Ant.) Justinian being about to commence the Vandal war, an enterprise of great difficulty, was anxious previously to settle the religious disputes of his capital. The Nestorian heresy had formed a considerable number of partisans, who, conscious of the emperor's hostility to their opinions, had appealed to the Bishop of Rome. To counteract the representations of Cyrus and Eulogius, the Nestorian deputies, the emperor sent two distinguished prelates, Hypatius, bishop of Ephesus, and Demetrius, bishop of Philippi, in the character of envoys to Rome. Justinian had been remarkable for taking an unkingly share in the dubious theology of the time: he felt the passions of a disputant, and to his latest day enjoyed the triumphs of controversy with the delight of a zealot, as he sometimes signalized them by the fury of a persecutor. On this occasion, whether through anxiety to purchase the suffrage of the Roman bishop, the patriarch of the west, whose opinion influenced a large portion of Christendom, or to give irresistible weight to the verdict which was to be pronounced in his own favor, he decided the precedency which had been contested by the bishops of Constantinople from the foundation of the city, and in the fullest and most unequivocal form declared the bishop of Rome the chief of the whole ecclesiastical body of the empire.

"His letter was couched in these terms—'Justinian, pious, fortunate, renowned, triumphant, emperor, consul, etc., to John the most holy archbishop of our city of Rome, and patriarch. Rendering honor to the apostolic chair, and to your holiness, as has been always and is our wish, and honoring your blessedness as a father; we have hastened to bring to the knowledge of your holiness all matters relating to the state of the churches. It having been at all times our great desire to preserve the unity of your apostolic chair, and the constitution of the holy churches of God which has obtained hitherto, and still obtains. Therefore we have made no delay in subjecting and uniting to your holiness all the priests of the whole East. For this reason we have thought fit to bring to your notice the present matters of disturbance; though they are manifest and unquestionable, and always firmly held and declared by the whole priesthood according to the doctrine of your apostolic chair. For we cannot suffer that anything which relates to the state of the church, however manifest and unquestionable, should be moved without the knowledge of your holiness, who art the head of all the holy churches, for in all things, as we have already declared, we are anxious to increase the honor and authority of your apostolic chair.'

"The letter then proceeds to relate the matter in question, the heresy of the monks, and the mission of the bishops, and desires to have a rescript from Rome to Epiphanius, Archbishop of Constantinople, giving the papal sanction to the judgment already pronounced by the emperor on the heresy. It further mentions that the archbishop had also written to the pope, 'he being also desirous in all things to follow the apostolic authority of his blessedness.' The emperor's letter must have been sent before the 25th March, 533. For, in his letter of that date to Epiphanius, he speaks of its having been already despatched, and repeats his decision that all affairs touching the church shall be referred to the pope, 'head of all bishops, and the true and effective corrector of heretics.' In the same month of the following year, 534, the pope returned an answer repeating the language of the emperor, applauding his homage to the See, and adopting the titles of the imperial mandate. He observes that among the virtues of Justinian, 'one shines as a star, his reverence for the apostolic chair, to which he has subjected and united all the churches, it being truly the head of all; as was testified by the rules of the fathers, the laws of princes, and the declarations of the emperor's piety.' The authenticity of the title receives unanswerable proof from the edicts in the 'Novellæ' of the Justinian code. The preamble of the 9th states that 'as the elder Rome was the founder of the laws, so was it not to be questioned that in her was the supremacy of the pontificate.' The 131st on the ecclesiastical titles and privileges, chapter 2, states—'We therefore decree that the most holy popes of the elder Rome is first of all the priesthood, and that the most blessed archbishop of Constantinople, the new Rome, shall hold the second rank after the holy apostolic chair of the elder Rome.'

"The supremacy of the pope had, by those mandates and edicts, received the fullest sanction that could be given by the authority of the Roman world. But the yoke sat uneasily on the bishop of Constantinople; and on the death of Justinian the supremacy was utterly denied. The Greek, who wore the mitre in the imperial city of the east, must have looked with a national contempt on a pontiff whose city had lost the honors of the imperial residence, and whose person was in the power of the barbarians. Towards the close of the sixth century, John, of Constantinople, surnamed for his pious austerities the Faster, summoned a council and resumed the ancient title of the See, 'Universal Bishop.' The Roman bishop, Gregory the Great, indignant at the usurpation, and either hurried away by the violence of controversy, or, in that day of monstrous ignorance, unacquainted with his own distinctions, furiously denounced John, calling him an 'usurper aiming at supremacy over the whole church,' and declaring, with unconscious truth, that whoever claimed such supremacy was anti-Christ. The accession of Phocas at length decided the question. He had ascended the throne of the east by the murder of the emperor Mauritius. The insecurity of his title rendered him anxious to obtain the sanction of the patriarch of the west. The conditions were easily settled. The usurper received the benediction of the bishop of Rome, and the bishop in 606 vindicated from his rival patriarch the gorgeous title that had been almost a century before conferred on the papal tiara by Justinian. He was thenceforth 'head of all the churches' without a competitor, 'Universal Bishop' of Christendom. That Phocas repressed the claim of the bishop of Constantinople, is beyond a doubt. But the highest authorities among the civilians and annalists of Rome spurn the idea that Phocas was the founder of the supremacy of Rome; they ascend to Justinian as the only legitimate source, and rightly date the title from the memorable year 533.

"And again referring to these transactions, pp. 8–9, he says—'On reference to Baronius, the established authority among the Roman Catholic annalists, I found the whole detail of Justinian's grants of supremacy to the pope formally given. The entire transaction was of the most authentic and regular kind, and suitable to the importance of the transfer. The grant of Phocas was found to be a confused and imperfect transaction, scarcely noticed by the early writers, and, even in its fullest sense, amounting to nothing beyond a confirmation of the grant of Justinian. The chief cause of its frequent adoption by commentators seemed to be its convenient coincidence with the rise of Mahometanism." Bar., An., cen. 6.

Alex. Keith (Signs of the Times, vol. 1, page 96) says—"The edict of Justinian was never rescinded; no earthly code of laws was ever more extensive or permanent than his; it was published A. D. 529; it continued to be the base of European legislation, till it began to be shaken by the revolution of France and the code of Napoleon. . . In thus constituting or confirming an ecclesiastical supremacy, the emperors of Rome were preparing the way of a more lordly domination than they or their predecessors had ever exercised, and the purple was soon to be outshone by the scarlet." . . . . Again, page 98, he says the "papal monarchy was thus founded; the supremacy of Rome was thus restored; the imperial power bowed down before the papal triumphs; and the pope magnifying himself above either a Gothic king or a Roman emperor, became lord of the ascendant. Out of the fourth monarchy or Roman empire, 'the king' (a term used in other instances to denote a form of government or succession of rulers), diverse from the rest, did according to his will; he exalted himself and magnified himself against every god. The pope not only exalted and magnified himself against earthly governors, or kings, to whom the designation of gods is applied in Scripture (Ps. 82: 6; John 10: 34; 1 Cor. 8: 5), and assumed the right of 'lawfully chastising them,' but as the successor of St. Peter he laid claim to far higher authority."

Again (vol. 2, page 445), speaking of the papal supremacy, he says—"No era in history seems to be more marked than that of the age of Justinian, whether we look into the pages of the ecclesiastical or civil historian." On page 584 he says—"From the days of Justinian to those of the French Revolution, during the appointed time in which the saints of the Most High were to be tried, and times and laws to be given into the hands of the papal power, the suppression of light was the work of the papacy, and persecution the means. But they who kept the testimony of Jesus loved not their lives unto the death; to whatever bodily torture they were subjected, faith and patience was theirs."

Prof. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switz., in a discourse on Antichrist, delivered before the students of the theological seminary, under his tutorship in Switzerland, and published in the Advent Lib., dates the supremacy of the "little horn" of Dan. 7th, or the papacy, in the reign of Justinian. In Dr. Butler's Church History, pp. 138-142, he recognizes the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome from the period of Justinian, and speaks of the grant of Phocas as being "unaccompanied by any new powers." Dr. Litch says of those that date the supremacy of the papacy in the reign of Phocas—"They do not attempt to show the concurrence of a single circumstance predicted by the prophet to precede it, and point out the time. But what does the grant of Phocas amount to? Just nothing at all; it only served to increase the animosity which invariably subsisted between the patriarchs of Rome and Constantinople. Nor did the conferring of the title of 'Universal Bishop' give the saints into his hand. Moreover, they had been given into his hand sixty-eight years before, and we shall in vain look for another such grant of power over them."

Bro. W. says in "Note 2"—"I had supposed, until I saw the statement at the head of this [his] article, that the Catholic writers generally claimed the supremacy of their church from St. Peter." (I am happy to inform him to the contrary.) And yet he says in Note 3, of Bowers—who had been a Catholic before he wrote his History of the Popes—"Probably no man has ever lived who has been better prepared to give a correct history of the papacy." "It will be seen that Bowers says the papal supremacy was first introduced by the act of Phocas in the year 607."

Now there appears some ambiguity, to say the least, in Notes 2 and 3 of the foregoing. If, according to Bro. White, Catholic writers date the supremacy of their church from St. Peter, they must have been very ignorant; for Bowers, the most competent authority as to the history of the papacy (according to Bro. W.) dates its supremacy as late as A. D. 607.

The conditions of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 25, relate to the giving of the saints into the hands of the little horn, or times and laws, or both, for 1260 years. Now the first point to be settled is, first, Is this little horn the papacy? We answer, Yes, and are ready to prove it, if such proof is again wanted. Second, Were the saints ever formally given into the hands of this power? We again answer, Yes, and the proof may be seen in the extracts of history, in the foregoing quotations, that we have given in this article. We will now give an extract from Dr. Litch's Proph. Ex., pages 103–104. He speaks of the removal of the imperial, or dragonic, power from Rome to Constantinople in A. D. 329, and from this date to A. D. 476, the imperial power balanced between the east and the west, and then was legally removed entirely to the east; and then Rome passed into the hands of the barbarians. Thus it continued till 536, when Justinian sent Belisarius, who took Rome from the Gothic king in March, 538, and gave it to the papacy. Also, after referring to the extinction of the Roman consulship in A. D. 541, he asks—"Where (now) was the supremacy of Rome vested? in the emperor or his general? No. For the army of the Norses was withdrawn to Ravenna, and the civil government of the emperor over Italy was located in that city, under the title of Exarch of Ravenna. If the pope was not left supreme in Rome, what was the supreme power? Twice Justinian conquered Rome, but neither time did he attempt to establish a civil government in the city. But we are told that the pope did not receive his supremacy as a civil power until Pepin, king of France, conquered the Exarch from the Greeks in 755, and gave it to the pope in perpetual sovereignty; thus constituting him a civil prince. But what, I ask, had that gift of Pepin to do with the gift of the dragon of his seat, Rome, to the beast? France was not the dragon, nor was Ravenna, Rome, the seat of the dragon and afterwards of the beast. The possession of Rome by the pope in 538 and onward, as the conquest of Justinian, was a gift of the dragon to the beast, who already possessed the dragon's power as head of the church, and 'the true and effective corrector of heretics.'"

Jesus says (John 12: 35), "Yet a little while is the light with you; walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you; for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." The Savior once asked the question—"The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men?" John was the forerunner of Christ, and must of necessity precede him. So we will ask the question—The Advent proclamation, whence is it? from heaven, or of men? If from heaven, we had better accept it. If of men, then reject it. We believe it is from heaven, therefore we accept it. Amen.

THE DAY OF WONDERS.

J. B. WELLS.

The last great day is fast approaching; the day when earth will be freed from sin; the day when sickness, sorrow, and death, will flee away; the day when the lowly One of Nazareth, the babe of Bethlehem, the Mighty to save, will come in glory, with a shining cohort of angel attendants. But not as the persecuted One; not as the lowly Nazarene, will he then come; but as the King of kings and Lord of lords; for "unto him every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess." In thought the day of judgment, the day of wonders has arrived, and behold down the unseen pathway from heaven comes He who has the keys of death and the grave; He who will unlock the chambers of death, and bid his own come forth to immortal life. How glorious the sight to some, and to others how fearful. A glorious sight to those who have long been waiting for their Savior's appearing, and have often been disappointed; but now with eyes uplifted, and arms extended, they joyfully exclaim—"This is our God, we have waited for him." To those who would not have this man to reign over them, the sight is fearful indeed, for they realize that probation is past, that mercy lingers no longer for them, and that God will no longer strive with man; and in this awful agony of mind they call for rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the living God.

The golden city appears, poised in mid-heaven, and Jesus commands the reapers (angels) to go forth and gather the elect from a sin-cursed world. At His word the graves are opened, and they who were dead come forth to live forevermore, and, with the holy ones who have not tasted death, are caught away to meet the Lord in the air. Glorious sight! Jesus the Conqueror leads his people to the city, the new Jerusalem. He approaches the pearly gates, where shining ones keep constant watch, and as he draws nigh a voice is heard, saying—"Lift up your heads, oh, ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in." And one of the shining ones cries—"Who is this King of glory?" and the response is—"The Lord strong and mighty; the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, oh, ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in." And again the question—"Who is this King of glory?" "The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory." And through the gates of pearl the multitude of redeemed ones follow their King.

The scene is changed. The earth below is shrouded in impenetrable gloom. The endless night of death to a godless world is fast approaching. The lightnings begin to flash, the thunders to roar, and earth trembles violently as the fiat goes forth—"I will destroy them that destroy the earth." And now from mountain-sides and peaks the liquid lava rolls, while from the clouds above comes a rain of fire, and all unrepentant men and women are fuel for the flames. "This is the second death."

Once more the scene is changed. The earth is restored to its pristine beauty and glory. "The desert and the solitary places blossom as the rose. And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

WHEN WAS PAGANISM ABOLISHED?

C. E. BARNES.

It has been and still is claimed by some of the Advent preachers that the "daily" (Dan. 12: 11) refers to the pagan system of religion, and the taking away of the "daily" refers to the abolition of paganism as a national religion, and that said abolition, destruction, fall, or taking away took place in 508 A. D., from which period the twelve hundred and ninety days are to be reckoned. These positions, however, are disputed by some; they are unable to see the conclusiveness of the reasonings which would identify the "daily" and paganism as being the same, and they further fail to see evidence that the abolition of paganism occurred in 508. Without however here disputing the claim as to the signification of the "daily," the writer does dispute the latter, as to the removal of paganism from the Roman empire in 508.

Mosheim and Jones, in their respective church histories, refer the downfall of paganism to the reign of Theodosius the Great. In Tytler's Universal History, in Clarke's Commentary, and in Gibbon's Decline and Fall, it is also attributed to him, as it also is in Bell's Encyclopedia. Now as Theodosius began his reign in 379, and died before the ending of the same century, it follows, if the writers alluded to above be good authority, that men are far behind the times when they defer the fall of paganism until the beginning of the sixth century.

In writing of the events in the fourth century relating to Theodosius, Mosheim (vol. 1, p. 103) says—"As long as this prince lived, he exerted himself, in the most vigorous and effectual manner, for the extirpation of the pagan superstitions throughout all the provinces, and enacted severe laws and penalties against such as adhered to them. . . . Toward the conclusion of this century, the Gentile religions declined apace, and had also no prospect left of recovering their primitive authority and splendor."

In giving an account of the church under this same emperor's reign, Jones (p. 151) says Theodosius was "anxious to extinguish the expiring embers of paganism;" and on the next page says "the fall of paganism . . . may be considered as . . . nearly consummated in the reign of Theodosius," and "is probably one of the most extraordinary revolutions that ever took place on the theatre of this world." Tytler, in his Universal History (vol. 1, p. 524) says—"The reign of Theodosius was the era of the downfall of the pagan religion in the Roman empire;" and in vol. 2, p. 7, he says "it was reserved for Theodosius to put a final period to the pagan superstition in the Roman empire;" and further on—"As the polytheism, which had so long maintained its authority over the Roman empire, came to a final period at the time of which we now treat, it is worth our while to bestow some consideration upon an event of that magnitude and importance."

Dr. Adam Clarke, in explaining the fall of the dragon or pagan Rome, says "he is entirely cast out from all offices of trust in the empire; his religion is first only tolerated, and then totally abolished by the imperial power. This great event was not the work of a reign; it took up many years; for it had to contend with the deep-rooted prejudices of the heathen, who to the very last endeavored to uphold their declining superstition. Paganism received several mortal strokes in the time of Constantine and his sons, Constans and Constantius. It was . . . finally suppressed by the edicts of Gratian, Theodosius I. and his successors. It was not till A. D. 388, that Rome itself, the residence of the emperor, was generally reformed from the absurdities of paganism; but the total suppression of paganism soon followed the conversion of the metropolitan city; and about A. D. 395, the dragon may be considered, in an eminent sense, to have been cast into the earth; that is, into a state of utter subjection to the ruling dynasty of Christian emperors."—Com. on Rev. 12: 9.

Gibbon (vol. 3, ch. 28) devotes almost an entire chapter to showing the particular steps which led to this downfall of paganism, and the following are some of his expressions concerning it—"The ruin of paganism, in the age of Theodosius, is perhaps the only example of the total extermination of any ancient and popular superstition; and may therefore deserve to be considered as a singular event in the history of the human mind. . . . The temples of the Roman world were subverted about sixty years after the conversion of Constantine. . . . In a full meeting of the senate, the Emperor proposed, according to the forms of the republic, the important question, whether the worship of Jupiter, or that of Christ, should be the religion of the Romans. . . . On a regular division of the senate, Jupiter was condemned and degraded by the sense of a very large majority. . . . The decrees of the senate, which proscribed the worship of idols, were ratified by the general consent of the Romans; the splendor of the capital was defaced, and the solitary temples were abandoned to ruin and contempt. Rome submitted to the yoke of the gospel . . . and so rapid, yet so gentle, was the fall of Paganism, that only twenty-eight years after the death of Theodosius, the faint and minute vestiges were no longer visible to the eye of the legislator."

The foregoing extracts are so plain and precise in their statements, that comment is not needed. I submit it to the candid reader if they do not unmistakably locate the fall of paganism in the reign of Theodosius, more than a hundred years prior to 508. It seems to the writer that if Jones, Mosheim, Tytler, Gibbon be received as reliable historians (and none can esteem them as anything else), our brethren are decidedly mistaken in locating the downfall of paganism in the sixth century instead of the latter part of the fourth.

Now if the "daily" be paganism, and its being "taken away" be its downfall, and the twelve hundred and ninety days are to be reckoned from that event, it follows they must be commenced more than a century earlier than 508, to do which will of course spoil the theory that ends them in 1798. The writer is not opposed to investigations concerning the time of Christ's return, but is opposed to reasonings based upon erroneous premises. To convince men of the Lord's coming in 1873, we must be very certain history will bear us out in our claims; neither for the sake of maintaining a theory, must we set aside statements of standard writers, and take instead, those of less repute and authority, for to confess in that manner that standard historians differ from us, is to declare that we differ from them, thus proving ourselves to be the unreliable ones.

"WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?"

This was a question of great moment more than eighteen hundred years since, having been proposed by high authority; and the fact that so long a period has elapsed has not in the least depreciated the value of a correct answer. That Christ is a wonderful Being, unlike any other that ever trod this planet, must be conceded by all who acknowledge the testimony of the Scriptures to be valid.

That he is "the only begotten Son of God," is positively declared. If he is a Son, then he is not co-existent with the Father. To say a son has existed as long as his father involves an absurdity upon the very face of it. That he was brought forth by the Father, and was the first and in one sense, the only object the eternal Father created, is substantiated by Inspiration. In Rev. 3: 14; Col. 1: 15, we find he was the beginning of God's creation, the first-born of every creature. How long a period he existed in "the bosom of the Father," enjoying his effulgent glory ere the creation of anything else, is not revealed. But when the time arrived for further display of creative power, lo! the Father has an Agent, adequate not only to form our mundane system, with its atmospheric heavens, but the planetary system, or siderial heavens, even all the grand furniture of heaven, but tests the power of his Divine skill. Inspiration imputes to him all creative power. It says: "By him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him; and without him was not anything made that was made."

Thus much we know, because it is revealed; but how he existed ere he took our nature upon himself, was a mystery, to an inspired apostle. But because inspiration saw fit to draw the curtain here, shall we doubt what is revealed to our vision at mid-day? Because it is the will of the Spirit to withhold from us how he existed, before he visited our planet, shall we claim he had no such existence, thereby imputing lying mockery to God's Beloved, when he thus prayed? "O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."

Christ gave us to understand there was a sense in which no one knew him, but the Father, probably referring to his existence ere he visited our world—"No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."

Christ declared that no man had seen the Father but himself—that he knew him as no other could know him. What being on this planet ever was acknowledged by an audible voice from heaven as the Son of God, but this same Jesus of Nazareth? Who ever spake authoritatively to the raging elements, and was obeyed, but he? Who ever dare make it a matter of salvation, or condemnation to the recipient, whether they were received or rejected, but Jesus Christ? When those partially awakened came to Christ to know what they should do, to work the works of God, he thus plainly answers—"This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent."

And when those who made the highest professions of godliness, and according to Christ's own admission did wear a very pious exterior, discarded him, this very rejection, or disbelief in him, would prove their condemnation. "I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins; for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."

Christ must either be received for just what he pretended to be; the Savior of the world, or rejected as a vile impostor, or looked upon as the wildest maniac. History informs us of some twenty-four persons who have figured somewhat conspicuously as pretended Christs, since Jesus of Nazareth; the last one—a Jewish Rabbi of Germany, appeared in 1682. Several of less note, have occasionally appeared for a brief period, who themselves with their adherents have passed away like characters formed in the sand upon the seashore.

The most fruitful period for these impostors was the twelfth century—ten arising during this century. But all these false pretenders are obliterated—no trace of their doctrines or disciples remains. Not so with Jesus of Nazareth. His disciples are firm in their attachment, and propagate his doctrines with as much ardor and zeal to-day as did the fishermen of Gallilee when under the personal direction of their august Leader. Their faith in his present existence as High Priest at the right hand of God is unshaken. Thousands upon thousands have given their lives rather than renounce an iota of his doctrine. Of course there is reason for this devotion and perfect faith; and this one reason is obvious; He is the sent of God. He was divinely advertised in prophecy. Gabriel who stands in the presence of God, came here to announce his supernatural birth, and the honest shepherds on Bethlehem's plains, listened to the angel's testimony concerning his birth, and also heard a multitude of the heavenly host rejoicing because of this greatest and best gift of heaven to save a lost race. Over thirty predictions of the prophets, given hundreds of years apart, were fulfilled in Jesus Christ at his advent. His birth-place was signally pointed out, more than seven hundred years ere the sublime event. How came that evangelical Eagle among the prophets, to thus advertise, nearly eight hundred years beforehand, that the Anointed One would be numbered with transgressors, that he would be reticent when tried for life, and finally be buried with the rich? What prophetic illumination beamed upon Zechariah when five hundred years prior to the event, he could portray the triumphant entry of Jesus Christ into Jerusalem upon a young ass's colt, and then give the exact amount for which he would be betrayed. How much rather would those wicked Jews have given forty pieces of silver, than thus unwittingly to have fulfilled the Scriptures against themselves.

Over thirty times the prophets divinely advertised the true Messiah—his person, works, and doctrines, and when one appeared who fulfilled every minutiæ of these prophetic advertisements, what else can one "think" but that "He is the sent of God?" The divine advertisement declared that when this personage appeared in our world "all the angels of God would worship him." The Shepherds had ocular demonstration of the fulfillment, while they listened to the peans of "a multitude of the heavenly host" and also witnessed the divine illumination. The fulfillment of the many divine advertisements given so many centuries beforehand, as well as his perfect life and doctrines, prompts the faith that he is the one "Moses in the law, and the prophets did say should come."

His resurrection from the dead, as foretold by himself, affords another divine proof of his Messiahship. Again his ascension up into heaven, as witnessed by his disciples, was sufficient to confirm their faith in his Word, that he came down from heaven, and would return thither again. Some on our planet have been permitted to witness his position at the right hand of the Father, since he arrived there, making it quite certain the race of Adam are now favored with a High Priest in the person of Jesus of Nazareth.—B. Mathewson, in Rutland Independent.

THE BLASPHEMY OF SPIRITISTS.

N. FIELD.

Within a few years past, the Bible has been assailed with unusual malignity. A noted spiritual lecturer, by the name of Denton, has exhausted his ingenuity in the selection of terms and phrases to express his abhorrence of the Book. His blasphemies are perfectly horrible, exceeding those of Bolingbroke, Tindal, Voltaire, and Paine, all combined. He but expresses the sentiments of the whole fraternity of Spiritists. They are all infidels of the most virulent type. And since the days of Celsus, to the present time, Christianity never encountered a more deadly foe than Spiritism. It is brought forward as a new religion—a religion of demonstration, more in harmony with reason, and the character of the supposed Author of all things.

Prof. Denton denounces the Bible as unworthy of credit, and says that it must henceforth take its place with Milton's "Paradise Lost," Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and Shakspeare's Plays. After enumerating some of God's dealings with mankind, as recorded in the Bible, he concludes that the God of the Bible is worse than a Camanche war-chief. But we will let himself speak for himself, that the reader may see the animus of the thing called Spiritualism, which it is confidently claimed will soon become the religion of the world. He says:—

"He has sent all mankind into the world with a strong disposition to do evil; he allows the devil and his agents to tempt men, and thus make them worse than they are naturally, and thus has so arranged matters, that, if they persist in doing what he calls evil, he will plunge them into a den of woe, from which there is no escape, but from which the smoke of their torment is to ascend for ever and ever. And we are told that it is our duty to love this monster that the Jew made and the Christian has remodeled. Tell the captive pining in his dungeon to love the tyrant that placed him there; tell the slave to love the master who has robbed him of his rights since he began to breathe, and whose back is yet bloody from the blows of his lash; tell the mother to love the fiend who has slain her darling, and now gloats over her agony. As impossible is it for us to love this devil-creator, this plaguer of the human race, this framer and jailer of hell, and tormentor of the damned. Reason will not, cannot call him Father; Love shrinks with terror from his presence; and Justice says, 'Let him die, for he is unworthy to live.' The gods of silver and gold, of iron and brass, will perish; the gods of wood and stone shall be no more, and their worshipers shall be ashamed of their folly; and so shall this grim, blood-besprinkled, eternally hating and torturing Jehovah die, and a million ransomed souls join in swelling to heaven his funeral-hymn."

Can any thing in the annals of infidelity equal this shocking blasphemy? And this is what Spiritualism is teaching! The Bible, and the God of the Bible, and Christianity, and all that we have been taught to believe and cherish as the only hope of man, are to perish, and be banished from the world, and the doctrines of demons take their place!

PRAYING FOR SINNERS.

F. BURR.

Shall we pray for sinners?

Oh, no. You may pray for the righteous, but you must not pray for sinners.

Why not?

O, because it is not commanded. Besides, Jesus said—"I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me."

This is the logic of some persons who are so very conscientiously fearful that they shall do something that is unnecessary. It appears plausible on the surface, to be sure, however repulsive and stultifying it may be to our christian sympathies. To do anything we are not commanded to do, appears certainly unnecessary. And to do what Jesus himself repudiated is worse yet.

But let us look at it. Jesus loved sinners, and would not pray for them. Jesus came to save sinners, but cannot pray for them. Jesus died for sinners, but never prayed for them. Is that so? Hark! hear that cry—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Ah! then he did pray for them once. And how do we know it was only once?

There is no other record.

And there is no record that he prayed for his disciples but once, except in Peter's case. He did not pray for the whole world, that all might be saved, for he knew they would not be; but where do we read that he does not seek blessings for all? Where are there any that he has not tried to save?

But it will do no good to pray for sinners, for God has done and is doing all he can for them until they turn to him and pray for themselves.

And so God has done and is doing all he can for the righteous; and what is the use in praying for them? Why pray for any body? Why help any one? All must stand or fall for themselves.

Follow out this doctrine, and it would lead to a perfect drouth of all christian sympathies, and result in dried and withered affections, that can only be compared to a dried potsherd on earth. Away with such miserable, driveling, dried-up christianity, and let us have more of the spirit of Jesus.

What good to pray for sinners? It will do you good. It will unstop a fountain of living water that you have never tasted. Try it, but not as an experiment. If you do not want to pray for sinners, then you need converting. And if you do want to, and have restrained yourself for fear it was wrong, then uncap the fountain and let the waters flow. Do not dry up your sympathies for your fellow men, lest you also be barren.

Tell me that Jesus never prayed for sinners! You might as well tell me he never died for them. He prayed for me when I was wandering an alien from God. I know it. He sought me. He called me. He yearned over me. Tell me he never prayed for me? Go with that story to some calculating, theoretical, heartless professor, but do not bring it to me.

Dear christian, be not deceived. Let the love of Jesus dwell in you, and be not afraid of the fruit it bears. Search the Scriptures, and you will find the truth in this matter is on the side of love and sympathy.

Pray for sinners!

"THE LORD'S SUPPER—WHO MAY PARTAKE?" asks "One who wants to know," in a recent number of the Union.

About three years ago I was present at the administration of the Lord's Supper in Bedford Chapel, London. The minister was the Rev. Thomas Jones, now of Swansea, the Moderator of the last meeting of the Congregational Union of England and Wales—a preacher of wonderful power, and greatly beloved. His invitation to the Supper was after this sort—the first part broken and hesitating, almost stammering, the last sentence breaking out with a rush like a flood sweeping away its dam: "We—we are now—about—to celebrate the—the Lord's Supper. Christian people, not members of—of this church—Christian people not members of ANY church, are welcome to our Communion."

You may be sure I knew I was welcome.—H. in Christian Union.

SACRAMENTO.

We closed our meetings in Sacramento last evening (Feb. 25th), for the present. The results have been better than most expected. The city is notoriously wicked. Of course there are many noble exceptions; but as a whole, it is quite Sodom-like. Infidelity, Spiritualism and sensualism, present a bold front, and a defiant spirit against the Bible, Christ and Christianity. Satan has had the chief control of things. The general low standard of religion had only served to give the devil an increased advantage. In addition to this, most of the ministers used their influence against us, and fed the prejudices of the people with various false rumors in relation to what we believed and taught. Their chief ground of objection was in regard to the nature of man, and the destiny of the wicked. We had very pleasant interviews with Bro. Cummings, a Congregational preacher, and Chaplain of the Assembly, in the Legislature; Bro. Nash, the Presbyterian minister, and Bro. Newton, of the M. E. church. They thought quite favorably of opening their meeting-houses, but some of the officials were not willing, and we were driven to the necessity of leasing the Academy of Music, which was occupied by a theatrical troupe, said to be of very low character. It had become so degraded, that but few would give it their patronage. The stage was appropriated to the lowest performances. The theatre closed Saturday evening, and we commenced our meeting the following Sabbath evening. The theatre was about half full. But few respectable people dared to be seen in such a place. We found much need of help from the Lord, to enter upon the stage, sing alone, and pray, where the people had just been entertained by gross vulgarities. The Lord gave special aid, as he did every night for two weeks. The second night the theatre was filled. Among the audience were a large number who had lost all interest in the Bible and religious matters. The interest increased steadily, till the people had to go away for want of room. We never addressed more attentive audiences. Many members of the Legislature, several ministers, and other professional men, became deeply interested in the meetings. Men noted for their skepticism came every night and paid the best attention. We had much rain and mud, but even these did not prevent the people from coming. We presented the prophecies of Daniel and John, showing that the coming of Christ is at the door. A large number, by the upraised hand, expressed their belief in our conclusion in relation to the speedy coming of the Savior. Several questions were asked every evening, which served to increase the interest.

After a few evenings, it was proposed that we should discuss the subject of future punishment with Dr. A. P. Truesdell, a very fine christian man, free from sectarian prejudices. We debated the following question: "Do the Scriptures teach the final utter destruction of the wicked?" We never met a more honorable man in debate. He manifested the true christian spirit throughout the discussion. When the time came to make his last speech, he arranged with the chairman, Dr. Cummings, to take his place, as he did not care to say any more. We gave our consent to this arrangement. The discussion, subsequent lectures, and conversation, have removed nearly all the Dr.'s props that he supposed supported the doctrine of eternal torment and the immortality of the soul. He stood by us nobly throughout the meetings, and showed to all that he was a true christian. He has often preached the gospel, when he could be spared from his professional duties; and thinks now that it may yet become his duty to devote the remnant of his life to the ministry. We found in him and his amiable christian wife, some true friends, such as are rarely met in this cold, heartless world. Men so fully unsectarian, as Dr. Truesdell, are rarely found.

During our meetings, some were converted, and a number are under conviction. Some twenty requested prayers the last night. One Spiritualist has been brought out of the snare of Satan, and now takes an active part in meetings, rejoicing in the Lord.

Several members of other churches are now rejoicing with us in the "blessed hope," wondering why they did not see these simple truths before. Some twenty have arranged to hold meetings, having Dr. Truesdell to assist them in conducting their exercises. We were very glad to leave them associated with one of such rich christian experience. If a place can be obtained for further meetings, we purpose to spend some two or three weeks more in Sacramento. A large number are very anxious to hear more about the doctrine of the Bible. They say it is now a new, and an open book. Before these meetings its pages and glorious truths seemed sealed up, and beyond their comprehension, but now they can read and understand it.

The prospect in Sacramento is now as encouraging as it was in San Francisco last winter after the same amount of labor. We are hoping the door may open for our return. We are now (Monday, Feb. 26) on the cars en route to San Francisco, where we are to commence a discussion of the Sabbath question this evening, with Elder M. B. Cornell.

THE INTERNATIONALE.

The Internationale party is becoming a powerful organization, and is spreading rapidly. For the last three Sabbaths, the subject has been discussed in Dashaway Hall, San Francisco, before large and intelligent audiences. Strong men and fair women are throwing their energies into this movement, with a zeal that is worthy of a better cause. Spiritualists, and infidels of all kinds, in connection with those who are dissatisfied with the present state of society, government, and religion, are becoming absorbed in this great Internationale party, which is being organized throughout the world. This party has adopted the sentiments presented by the spirits several years since. It looks like Satan's last effort against Christ, the Bible, and Christianity; while at the same time he makes his followers believe that the success of this party will reform society, politics, and religion, and introduce the expected millennium. Their leading motto reads: "LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY." They set aside religion, and require that it shall have no place in the education of the youth; consequently, the Bible should not be allowed in the schools.

The following is their platform of principles:

"1. The total abolition of all class rule and class privileges.

2. Complete political and social equality for both sexes.

3. Nationalization of the land and of all the instruments of production.

4. A reduction of the hours of labor, so as to allow more time for improvement and recreation.

5. Education to be undertaken by the State —to be obligatory, gratuitous, and secular.

6. Religion to be ignored, as being a speculative subject, concerning the individual. No religious differences or creed to be recognized.

7. The substitution of a direct system of taxation based upon property, instead of the present system of levying taxation upon industry; the taxation to be progressive.

8. The abolition of the standing army, as being a provocative to war.

9. The adoption of the principle of associative production, with a view to the complete supersession of the present system of capitalist production."

GOOD LAWS.

The following laws of life are worthy of a place in every heart. They involve necessary elements in christian character. If these are not observed, there will be a sad deficiency. Let the reader adopt them, and put them into daily practice. Let us not be satisfied with anything short of being complete in Christ, entirely clothed with his righteousness, and filled with his Spirit.

THE LAWS OF LIFE.—1. Temperance in all things, whether physical, mental, moral, affectional, or religious.

2. Justice to all creatures that be—justice being the exercise of precisely the same rules of life, conduct, thought, or speech that we would desire to receive from others.

3. Gentleness in speech and act—never needlessly wounding the feelings of others by harsh words or deeds; never hurting or destroying aught that breathes, save for the purpose of sustenance or self-defense.

4. Truth in every word or thought spoken or acted; but reservation of harsh or unpleasing truths, where they would needlessly wound the feelings of others.

5. Charity—charity in thought, striving to excuse the failings of others; charity in speech, veiling the failings of others; charity in deeds, wherever, whenever, and to whomsoever the opportunity offers.

7. Almsgiving—visiting the sick and comforting the afflicted in every shape that our means will admit of and the necessities of our fellow creatures demand.

7. Self-sacrifice, wherever the interests of others are to be benefited by our endurance.

8. Temperate yet firm defence of our views of right, and protest against wrong, whether for ourselves or others.

9. Industry in following any calling we may be engaged in, or in devoting some portion of our time, when otherwise not obliged to do so, to the service and benefit of others.

10. Love—above and beyond all, seeking to cultivate in our own families, kindred, friends, and among all mankind generally, the spirit of that true and tender love which can think, speak, and act no wrong to any creature living; remembering always that where love is, all the other principles of right are fulfilled beneath it, influenced and embodied in its motives.

VIBTORIA LEAGUE.

The "Victoria League" is a new political organization, better known as the "EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY." This party, recently organized, is "composed of the progressive elements in the existing Republican and Democratic parties, together with the women of the Republic," who are endeavoring to secure universal suffrage. Some of the prominent leaders in the EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY are Spiritualists. Indeed, we have reason to believe that the whole movement is in keeping with the plans of demons, who are making their last grand rally for the closing conflict between truth and error, light and darkness, Christ and Belial. Satan is now trying to bring together the various reform parties into one grand union. He has been drilling them in separate squads, so as not to excite suspicion; but now the time seems to have come for an organization upon a grand scale. Each party can see clearly that there is but little hope of their success by themselves, because there are so many parties so nearly balanced in numbers and power; hence the necessity of a union upon some common and general principles. Of course the stronger party should have the right to become the centre, and take the lead. This right belongs and is conceded to Spiritualists. Hence their principles are woven into the platform of the "EQUAL RIGHTS PARTY." Thus Satan secures his object, takes the lead, and draws into his net thousands, and even millions, who, otherwise, would not consent to become associated with the principles of Spiritualism.

In no age of the world has the working of the devil been more apparent than at the present time, and never with more probable success. The mass of professors of religion are so mixed up with the world, and so like it in their customs and manners, that they have lost their controling power over the people; and they are in a fit condition to be led astray by the artful wiles of the deceiver. The professors and people are dissatisfied with their present condition, and consequently are very ready to enter into any new system that proposes a reform. Satan has now dressed up himself in religious clothes, and turned preacher, crying out most lustily for reforms in religion, politics, commerce, and social life. No one can dispute but that reforms are needed; and it is also evident that we may look in vain to the old institutions to introduce them; hence some departure from them is necessary if we have any improvement. We say Satan is taking all possible advantage of this state of things to establish a government under his special supervision, that shall be regulated and controled by his demoniacal principles, and men who sustain them. We believe the last great conflict with the powers of darkness is not far in the future and will be terrible. The boldness of Christ's enemies calls for men fully clothed with the christian armor, who are not afraid to beard the lion in his den; men who are willing to sacrifice reputation, home, friends, houses, lands, and even life, for Christ. The decisive struggle is at hand. Let us be bold for Jesus, yet gentle as the lamb, and harmless as the dove.

There is no safety but in entire consecration to the Lord. We need to be filled with his Spirit, in order to stand against the swelling tide of wickedness now setting in upon society. The progress of evil is truly alarming; yet but few seem to be aware of the perils of these last days. Dear Brn. and Srs., "put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life."

CALIFORNIA LAND.

The finest land we have ever seen is in California, between Sacramento and San Francisco, and from the latter place to San Jose. On these routes we pass through thousands of acres of as handsome land as the eye ever beheld, and as rich and productive as a garden spot. The sight presents a charming view to a farmer. It is said to surpass any other country in the world. At this time (Feb. 26th) the vast fields of wheat are about three inches high, having a very bright green appearance, like everything else that grows in this country. The leaves of the maple trees are about half grown; peach and apricot trees are in bloom, also wild flowers in the fields. During the past month we have had the most even temperature we ever experienced. We have scarcely needed any fire. We think the temperature has not varied five degrees in the last four weeks. The nights have been just about as warm as the days. We have not needed a fire in rooms with open windows.

In dry seasons, these thousands of acres of beautiful land produce scarcely any thing, unless watered by artificial means. This fact makes much of the California farming as uncertain as a lottery ticket. This year the prospect is the very best since the first settlement.

INDIAN PROPHECIES.

It is worthy of special note, that in all countries, and among all nations, there is a growing impression that some remarkable event is at hand. Men who make no profession of religion, who do not even believe the Bible, are among those who are expecting some wonderful change in the world. They cannot tell what is coming, but they are unable to get rid of the feeling that a new order of things is at the door; while the careful Bible student sees clearly that Jesus is about to make his second advent to this world, and commence his glorious reign.

Satan is leading men into a great variety of opinions and counterfeit theories, relative to the coming of Christ. He is teaching through his mediums that Christ is soon coming, not personally, but in the spread of certain principles, or in the establishment of the various reformatory movements now in progress. Among the varieties of impressions and visions on the subject, we find one of the Nevada Piute Indians, by the name of Waz-ye-waub, has been much exercised with a prophetic spirit from some source. In an interview with the editor of the Carson Register, one of the Piute Indians, by the name of Johnson, said:

"I'll tell you what is coming to pass; this world is coming to an end; it is to be destroyed by a flood—same as that eighteen hundred and seventy-one years ago [mistaking the epoch of the birth of Christ for that of the completion of Noah's boat,] for Waz-ye-waub, the boy prophet of the Walker River Reservation says so; and whoever believes the word of Waz-ze-waub will be restored to life eternal on the earth renewed, reborn; but whoever disbelieves his word will be left in the perpetual embrace of death." (This is his exact language.)

"Why, Johnson," said we, looking up in astonishment; "you don't believe such nonsense as that, do you?"

"Damfino," he replied, in his own poetic tongue.

"But," we continued, "don't you think this Waz-ye-waub is crazy, or a humbug?"

"Maybe so; guess he is," said the Indian; "but I wouldn't say so, because he would know it. He knows everything I say or think."

We tried to dissuade him from this belief, but without success.

Here we give the statement of Johnson, nearly as it came from his lips: I stopped about ten days on the upper side of Walker Lake, and there met, conversed with and listened to Waz-ye-waub. He is all the same as a Mormon, though he was never in Utah, and none of the Mormons have ever been to Walker Lake. He is a mere boy; a small young man; was born and brought up in the vicinity of the lake, has never traveled, and was remarkable for nothing until last fall, when he began to prophesy. He does not speak English, but is an eloquent speaker in his own language; has a soft, sweet voice, and sometimes spends whole nights in singing. He denounces whiskey in the strongest terms, admonishes the Indians not to touch it, and says that after the flood there will be no whiskey in the new-born world. He is a devout boy, hates war, dislikes warriors or fighting Indians, and does not want them to come to see him. He says the world is too old and too bad, and hence must pass away, and that in the new, to which all believers will be restored, the whites and Indians will have, as before Noah's flood, but one father, one mother, and one God.

Johnson says there are nearly three thousand Indians at Walker Lake, and that they are still gathering in from the west and south, drawn thither by the wonderful stories told of the prophet. He says there is no danger to the whites, that Waz-ye-waub's whole policy is peace, and that under his orders the Indians at the lake are now selling ponies to raise money to pay damages for killing cattle in Churchill.

☞ In Bro. White's article last week, in second column, seventh line from the top, for—"the end was not yet," read was yet. In the same column, fifth line from the bottom of the fourth paragraph, read—"no excitement or commotion about any war."

☞ IN the Crisis of March 6th, in the article "Words of Sympathy," fourth paragraph, fifth line, read munition of rocks, instead of "mountain," etc.

CIRCULATE THE NOTICE.

When a meeting is to be held in your place, never fail to extensively notify the people. Meetings are appointed for the express purpose of reaching the ears of the people, and through their ears to reach their hearts; but if the people are not present, how shall we reach their ears with the gospel of salvation? And unless we thus reach their ears, how can we reach their hearts? And how can we reach their ears or hearts if they are not at the meetings? And how can they attend the meeting if they do not know of its existence? They cannot scent a meeting as a hound scents a fox; they must be notified of the fact that there is to be a meeting at such a time and place—not in an indifferent manner, as though it were a matter hardly worth mentioning, imparting the impression that it is hardly worth attending—but give an earnest and warm-hearted invitation, as though it were a matter you were not ashamed of.

Perhaps you cannot preach, but you can get people to attend the preaching that will benefit them, and thus help do good. Notify not only friends, but even enemies, bigots, and scoffers—some of them may come, and others may circulate the notice still further by ridicule, and thus lead others to attend. W. S.

AT HOME AGAIN.

After about three months' absence, in the South, by the blessing of the Lord I am permitted to return in safety to my home, where friends can again reach me by letter, (Brodhead, Wis.) as formerly. I am compelled to remain comparatively inactive for some time to recruit, and try the virtue of medical treatment to regain health diminished by disease.

During my absence in the South, the little church in Brodhead did not become inactive, but held up the light nobly; and finally Brn. Godfrey and Howard, two of our earnest and faithful Wisconsin ministers, came to their help, and held a series of meetings which resulted in the conversion of several heads of families, and some younger persons, besides infusing new interest into some who had allowed the fire of love to burn low on the altar of devotion. Thank the Lord for these mercy drops; and may his blessing ever attend the labors of these brethren. W. S.

GOING TO HEAVEN AND HELL IN THE OLD WAY.—At a recent meeting in the South, where the old theory of going to heaven and hell before the judgment, and going there, too, as ghosts, and not as men, had been thoroughly exploded, one man wondered why we could not "let people go to heaven and hell in the old way". Many others possess the same feeling. They think the traditions and fables of men ought not to be disturbed, even if they do clash with the word of God, and invalidate the plan of heaven. They have become so accustomed to darkness that the light of truth hurts their eyes, besides making the huge deformities of their erroneous system visible, both to themselves, and to others; so they wish the light kept away, both for their comfort and the credit of their system.

Let the light of truth shine, and let the darkness of tradition be dispelled. Let error be confronted by the truth of God. Never keep back the truth of God for fear of spoiling some idolized fable of human origin. W. S.

AMUSEMENT, INSTRUCTION, AND ADORNMENT.—Webster's New Unabridged Dictionary is certainly a proud monument to the literary and analytical ability and industry of the country, and in this respect its compilers and publishers deserve double commendation. When we speak of it as a Dictionary alone, we hardly do justice to that immense affluence of topics and fulness of definition that makes it "the poor man's library" of amusement, instruction, and adornment. Solid as philosophy, exact as mathematics, and exhaustive, in brief, as a series of abridged treaties on every subject, it is at the same time as pleasant reading as the latest works of fiction, with the advantage that it is all made up of facts. We remember nothing in the world of letters that has made such a sensation in its way as this valuable work.—New York Mercantile Journal.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 23d, 1871, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 12.

On the 19th of Feb., I returned to Nashville, and with Bro. Hyde commenced a series of evening meetings in a hall. Some are interested to hear the evidences of the kingdom near, and rejoice in the light they are receiving on the Bible, some unready ones rising for prayers while others prefer to dismiss the whole thing as a northern invention, and treat it as a ministerial Editor did in the following note on one of my meetings in the South:—

"The Rev. Mr. Sheldon, a 'Second Adventist' from the State of Wisconsin, has been preaching in the Court House, at night, for more than a week past. Some of his views are peculiar, new, and somewhat startling to us in this latitude. He thinks the day of judgment is close at hand, and undertakes to demonstrate the fact by pictures and arguments. The Reverend gentleman's conclusion may be correct, and it would be well for us all to 'watch and pray' and be ready for whatever may happen, but at the same time we are inclined to think that he knows about as little in regard to the time when the 'great and notable day of the Lord' will come, as the rest of us. We have listened to some of Mr. Sheldon's discourses with considerable interest, and have determined not to condemn him unheard; but now we object to certain views which he set forth on last Sabbath evening, in regard to the state of the soul after death, as we regard them unscriptural, unsound, unwholesome and unsafe. We warn our people not to be deceived and driven away by this 'wind of doctrine' from the north.

"Vice is a monster of such frightful mein,
As to be hated, needs but to be seen,
But seen too oft, we grow familiar with its face,
We first pity, then endure, then embrace."

Wonder if it will not yet be decided by some of these would-be-wise ministerial Editors of the South that the Bible from which these "pictures" are taken, is a northern Book, and the people be warned against being "driven away" by it? Wonder if the Bible testimony concerning the soul must be suppressed to allow tradition to pass unchallenged? But many in the South will claim the right to compare their former views with the Bible, and believe its testimony, even if they have to disbelieve early teachings. The meetings in Nashville closed on Saturday night, Feb. 24th. After my sermon five requested prayers. Bro. Hyde will water the seed sown here.

Sunday Feb. 25th, went with Bro. H., to the meeting-house where I had preached the two preceding Sundays, and gave my last sermon. Bro. Hyde will preach at this point a quarter of the time. A goodly number are interested to hear the truth. Other doors will open soon in other directions. Bro. H. is an earnest man, and will do them good.

During my stay South I scattered many works among a class who were likely to read, and obtained over sixty subscribers to different periodicals, but mostly on the free list. These will keep the truth before their minds, and benefit others. I have pressing calls to revisit all the points that I have visited, and over half a dozen new doors stand wide open for me to enter; but defective health demands that I stop and recruit before doing more. I meant to have remained about six weeks longer, and revisited several points, but could not do so in my present state of health.

There is an improvement going on in the South in two respects—(1) the feeling of aversion to all northerners, arising from the war, and the subsequent hordes of northern, office seekers which flocked into the country, is being diminished, but not totally overcome; (2) the condition of extreme poverty into which the country was plunged by the war, is changing for the better, and another year of good crops will greatly improve their financial condition. Since the war they have generally been dispirited, but now the spirit of enterprise is reviving.

I intend to continue sending reading matter the coming season as I did last year, as the door may open to do so, especially to the three States that I have visited on this tour, Ala., Georgia, and Tenn., and also to some extent to five or six other Southern States, to friends of interested ones who have given me their names. If as large a proportion of the seed takes effect as did last year, I shall feel repaid for the effort. Reading matter is so scarce in many parts of the South that works are far more apt to be read than in the North, and being read, they produce an impression.

Feb. 27th, I turned my back on the South for the present, and was flying homeward. The first of March found me at home, after an absence of over twelve weeks. During this time many have heard the gospel of the kingdom for the first time, many have rejoiced in new light, many have requested prayers, some have been converted, others reclaimed, while some few have opposed, mostly in an undercurrent way. I leave some bold advocates of truth, who know both what they believe, and why they believe it, and are able to meet opposition. W. S.

FIRST STEP IN PRAYER.—He that makes but one step up a stair, though he is not much nearer to the top of the house, yet has stepped from the ground, and is delivered from the foulness and dampness of that. So in the first step of prayer: "God be merciful to me a sinner."

BRIMFIELD CONFERENCE.

L. BOUTELL.

The Conference session at Brimfield was held according to notice. I attended from the commencement till Saturday evening; and although there were not many from other places, yet it was an interesting meeting. A few old veterans in this Advent battle are still alive, and love the "blessed hope" as well as ever. And while death has made victims of some of the dearly beloved disciples, and others have backslidden from the faith, nevertheless recruits have been added to the few, and now there is a company of faithful believers in the speedy coming of Christ, and harmony prevails among them. Some worthy citizens of the place, who have long been convinced of the truthfulness of our faith, have gained strength to confess and identify themselves with the reproach-bearing disciples looking for a better country.

There are many others, not only in Brimfield, but elsewhere, if they would only confess what they believe, relative to the sleep of the dead, destruction of the unbelieving, coming of Jesus Christ, and the resurrection of the dead, would stand in the liberty and love of Jesus,—"new creatures in Christ Jesus." Filled with the Spirit of truth, joy unspeakable would be theirs, and they would be agents under God of saving others through the instrumentality of the word of life, which is the power of God unto salvation to all that believe. How many there will be who have been convinced of the truth, believing it to be the Bible, but fearing to confess it before men, will go down to eternal death, destroying many more who follow their example. You that are persuaded we have the right exposition of Bible truth, for Christ's sake confess it, even if you are turned out of the synagogue. Save yourselves by believing and confessing, or you will be lost! The wages of sin you will reap—eternal death!

Bro. Burnham, the Elder of this living body, is alive in the work, and is doing all he can for the prosperity of the church, and all others who can be reached by the truth. I enjoyed the seasons of the Conference with them. It brought to mind the former days of our warfare. Those that came were well provided for. Bro. J. Couch was with them, preaching the fulfillment of prophecy to full houses; besides Brn. Butler and Leavitt, who preached in the course of the meeting.

Some heard for the first time the evidences of the Lord's soon coming, and were convinced of its truthfulness. The church was revived, and enjoyed a feast of fat things. The Lord by his Spirit gave us the best evidence that we were about the right work for these times. Most of the meetings were characterized by a solemn feeling of the nearness of Christ's coming, and by a desire to "be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless." Some decided to be on the Lord's side at these meetings.

Let the cry come from every needful place, "Come over and help us." Quarterly sessions could be held to great advantage in many of these new and small places. Come to the Annual Conference at Chelsea, and get interested in our future work. We hope by the mercy of God to make more effort to save men by pulling them out of the fire.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. F. Carpenter.

DEAR BRN.:—I have removed from North Springfield, Vt., to Fitchburg, Mass., to which place all letters and papers for me should be directed.

To the Beloved in Vermont:—It is with great reluctance that I have left your State, which I dearly love, and the work of God in the State which has filled my heart to the full for several years past. But my labors with you, with exposure to changeful seasons, sometimes severe, have gradually undermined my health, till I have felt conscious that I must soon have a change, or be disabled. The guiding hand of God, ever true to me in the past, has directed me to Fitchburg, Mass., to do something for the infant church here, if possible. I know not what our success will be, but so plainly have Divine directions been given, that, although it has cost me many a heart struggle to make the change, yet we have not dared to resist. You shall not be forgotten. Too many hallowed memories of rich joys and blessings from God bind our thoughts to you all. If God grants us health and strength, we hope to revisit you often, and exhort you to "hold fast the beginning of your confidence and the rejoicing of the hope unto the end." Pray for me, that an effectual door may be open before me for glorifying the Lord.

From Sr. C. Tuller.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Your gifts are timely, and I seek to make them go far as possible. I would love to answer each dear, comforting letter, but for years I have been afflicted with a nervous affection of my eyes, caused by inflammation. The so constant use of my glasses necessary in my vocation, irritates them and I am obliged to economize their strength. My large school and other duties take up all my hours till nightfall, and to write then greatly injures them. But be assured, dear friends, that every word of cheer and help, to prosecute my Mission work and school, is appreciated. My work is toilsome and trying, but I love it. This poor race demands our sympathy. When I look upon their poverty and ignorance, and think of that system that could so brutalize and oppress beings susceptible of intellectual and moral growth, as we find them to be, I feel that we should, as far as in our power, extend the helping hand, when needed. The young and strong would not be benefited by giving them money, but knowledge we must give them, till Jesus comes, or fail, as it seems to me, of hearing "Well done."

A people for his name will be gathered from this poor despised nation, and some I do expect from this West Point school. It has been a child of Providence from the first. Wonderful health has been given the teacher. The comfortable house is paid for. Little son, the orphan girl who gives promise of usefulness, and myself, have been comfortably fed through the winter. Suffered some with cold, just enough to keep me in sympathy with the shivering ones around. In three weeks my present term closes. Then I purpose to go back into the country and gather again the scattered ones among the hills. Sometimes the way seems cloudy and I keep heart only as I can see the Guiding Hand.

Dear friends, is there not a little more to spare to build this poor old man a cabin? You will see that I lack yet a little. After helping the other old man, and getting some clothes for the boy, there are twelve dollars which the donors specified were for the house. It will cost at least thirty dollars with what he has got, to put up a little box house with one room, and with this he will feel rich, and the poor toiling wife will have a home of her own. If I could retrench any more, and keep health and decency, I would gladly do it. Are there not a few more in the "household" that can, and yet help forward other objects of benevolence? A few gathered dimes or quarters would not be missed, and would give so much comfort. Few slaves have suffered more hardships than this old one. After having bought his own and his wife's freedom, he was then tormented with accusations of enticing away slaves. When the war broke out, he was nearly killed by guerillas, and so his life has been full of hardships.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—A friend, New Britain, Ct., $5. C. Green, Bro. Busher and Sr. Stokes, Philadelphia, $1.50 for my table. T. Western, Plainfield, Mass., $2. Mrs. S. F. Hubbard, Amherst, Mass., $1. J. M. Stetler, Phil., $10. L. H. Shaw, Jamestown, N. Y., $2. Mrs. A. Coburn and mother, Salem, Mass., $1.35. Many a "thank you" from the old ones and from myself also, in return.

West Point, Ky., March 5th, 1872.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. A. N. SEYMOUR writes:—"By the solicitation of the Church of Christ, and her pastor, C. C. Ramsey, of New Hartford, Iowa, Mrs. Seymour and myself have been out and made them a visit. We spent some sixteen days with them, and enjoyed a most cordial sojourn among that prosperous, united, and happy people; preaching to them nearly every evening for over two weeks. The church in this place have a commodious house in which to worship, and number about one hundred and fifty members, and have a large and most delightful Sabbath school, probably the largest in the State. They have congregational singing, which is truly admirable and soul-cheering. As a church they are well posted and settled in the faith and hope of the gospel, looking with settled convictions for the speedy, personal return of Jesus. The friends are scattered over a wide field—a most delightful prairie, and it is specially satisfactory to the servants of Christ to see the multitude of teams well loaded with attentive hearers pouring in at the hour of meeting night after night, coming from one to ten miles in all directions. On one occasion we counted forty-seven teams, and more came after we went into the church. This speaks well for the religious people of Iowa. God bless them.

At our last meeting on Sunday evening, fifty-five arose and spoke for Jesus after we closed our discourse. There is an abiding interest among this dear people; serious convictions rest upon many hearts, and several arose for prayers. Bro. Ramsey (who sows the good seed of the kingdom, and irrigates the same with his tears, and is most highly esteemed among them), protracts the meeting through another week. We enjoyed the love, counsel, fellowship and prayers of this our fellow laborer very much, as well as that of the church. At the close of our last meeting Bro. R. called a special meeting of the church on Monday at ten A. M., the object of which we did not know at the time; but the result was made manifest by giving us a most cordial invitation to come and settle among them and take charge of the church. Well, we belong to God, and are his willing servants, and ever vouchsafe to do his will. Should he so direct, all will be well, but nothing would lead us to go save a strong sense of duty. The Lord's will be done in the matter. The New Hartford church stands on the apostolic platform, the church being called the 'Church of Christ,' and the friends of Jesus 'Christians,' 'Disciples,' 'Brethren,' 'Holy Brethren' 'Saints' etc. They with the apostolic church set a most noble example for all to follow.

After a cordial greeting we took leave of friends, made nigh by the blood of Christ, and returned to Manchester; from thence to Strawberry Point, Iowa, the residence of our dear Bro. and Sr. Janes. With them we enjoyed a most delightful visit for nearly one week. As the quarterly conference of the 'Adventists' came off during our stay, we attended that by request of Bro. and Sr. Janes and the church at Elkport where the meeting was held. The church here has been raised up principally, I think, through the labors of Sr. Janes, she having closed a series of meetings only a few days antecedent to the conference, where some eleven took a stand for Jesus. Some forty came together from different parts to enjoy this meeting, and we had a blessed good meeting. The meeting commenced, was carried on, and ended, well, ending with the celebration of the Lord's Supper. Four or five arose for prayers, and one put on Christ in baptism. Bro. Janes and wife, Bro. Dutton, my wife and self, were the only preachers present to administer the word of life. There were seven discourses preached during the meeting. We enjoyed ourselves much at New Hartford and at the Elkport meetings. We know no difference between these brethren. They have the same faith, hope, zeal, labor, aspirations, and devotion.

After an absence of over four weeks, we returned home by way of Guttenburg, McGregor, Prairie Du Chien, Milwaukee, and Chicago, and found our children all well, and three pressing invitations to go into other fields of labor to sound the last notes of warning to a perishing world."

SR. L. M. STODDARD writes:—"There is not a more potent way of showing we believe what we preach, than by the distribution of tracts, like the leaves of autumn. Last week I held a few meetings at Fonthill, Canada, and I heard a brother relate the effect of our tract. A feeble woman in the neighborhood, being deprived of meeting with the people of God, had conversed with a brother upon the 'blessed hope,' and he left her a tract. When he saw her again, he left her 'Good Tidings,' and the last time the brother saw her she was rejoicing with gladness, and could not find words to express her gratitude to the giver of the tract, and the overwhelming joy at the truths contained therein.

I would here express my thanks to some unknown friends who have sent me little packages of tracts through the post-office for distribution. Rest assured I have let none of them lie idle. I want more. This whole region (Lockport, N. Y.), needs tracts, for the preachers are scarce. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. We live in a fast age, and we must work fast. May God give us more zeal, that will be according to the knowledge of the times that we have. Will not some one send me a few copies of 'Good Tidings' to place to their account in the day of the Lord Jesus? My heart is cheered by the weekly visits of the Crisis, and I should not know how to do without it; for I hear from home when I read it. There is no place like a New England home, but when the Lord calls we can go anywhere."

BRO. E. MOSS writes:—"It may be interesting for some to learn there are a few in the southwestern part of Missouri who believe the coming of the Lord is very near, and are trying to be ready for the event. Eld. W. W. Cate has settled in Bates Co., five miles northwest of Appleton City, on the railroad, and two miles north of Hudson. He has formed a little band in his neighborhood, called the 'Oak Grove Advent Christian Church,' with pleasant prospects for the future. Preaching at the Oak Grove schoolhouse every third Sunday of the month. Bro. Cate is an able minister of the word, and will respond to calls as far as circumstances will permit. God is blessing his labors. His address is Hudson, Bates Co., Mo."

M. MICHAUD AND THE POPE.—The Old Catholic war has broken out with new vigor in Paris, under the lead of M. Michaud, Vicar of the Madeline, and honorary canon of Chalons. The occasion of the conflict is the rigor of the demands of Hippolyte of Tours, the new Archbishop of Paris. Under his predecessor, Michaud was allowed private liberty of conscience as to the decree of the Pope's infallibility, which he rejected, though he was outwardly to submit to it. On the accession of the new Archbishop, M. Michaud inquired of him first whether he would allow priests under him to give absolution to those who reject the Vatican Council and its decree of infallibility? Secondly, whether he would allow priests to celebrate mass who do not in their hearts accept the council as ecumenical, and its decree as Catholic and valid? To both these questions the Archbishop gave a decided negative. The Abbe Michaud severely rebuked him for his apostasy from his own former doctrines, and threw off his authority, and resigned his preferments, intending still to preach and officiate as a priest of the Old Catholic church. His rebukes of the Archbishop are very severe, as given by the correspondent of the London Daily News:

"You, Monseigneur, at one time, when you were Bishop of Viviers, declared that the Ultramontane party was anti-Catholic; but now you treat as heretics and schismatics the Catholics who persevere in rejecting Ultramontanism. You formerly defined Catholic truth to be that universal truth which, in the words of Vincent de Lerins, had 'always been believed everywhere and by everybody'—quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est; but now this Catholic truth has degenerated in your mind to Roman truth. Formerly the Catholic Church was the agglomeration of all the particular churches, but now in your eyes and those of your adepts the Church is nothing else but Rome and the Pope. The universality of the church of Jesus Christ is degraded to the individualism of one man. You, in fact, ignore Jesus Christ, and care only for his vicar, whom you make his master; for with you the Gospel is subordinate to the interpretation which the Pope may choose to put upon it—the Gospel is no longer that of Jesus Christ, but the bull which it may be the good pleasure of any present or future Borgia to issue."

This is bold speech, and indicates a full counting of the cost. Nor does it involve him alone, for he states in his letter to the Archbishop that he is acting for a party in the church who "will not allow the Pope to supplant Christ by the Syllabus."

Recently a committee met at his house, at which German, English, Italian, Spanish, and Russian committees were present; and they avow the purpose, as soon as funds can be collected, of opening churches independent of the Ultramontane Episcopacy.

The basis of this movement is essentially the same as that of Dollinger, but there seems to be more tone in it, and it takes a wider range. The leader, the man of energy and enthusiasm, may be at last found in M. Michaud. The importance of this movement cannot be over-estimated.—Christian Union.

A MODEL DONATION.—It was my privilege to be present with the church in Chicago on Wednesday evening, Feb. 21st. A discourse had been announced for the evening, but Bro. Burr was entirely ignorant of the subject, and of what the society intended to do. The speaker took as text Paul's words—"Be ye thankful." After a practical application of them in various ways, he spoke of the privileges the church had enjoyed, and of the abundant labors of their faithful Pastor; and then stated that the object of the gathering was to present him a substantial testimony of their gratitude, in a form that would aid him to feed and clothe his family and himself, and meet some of the expenses of his liberal hospitality to traveling brethren.

The elders of the church, Brn. Price and Wright, then passed through the congregation, receiving in all the sum of $120. The speaker of the evening in a few feeling words presented this sum to Bro. Burr, who replied as well as his feelings would allow him to do. We never saw him so hardly bestead for words. But this made the occasion all the more enjoyable, as it evidenced the depth to which his feelings were moved. The audience then passed around, each giving Bro. Burr a hearty grasp of the hand, and the evening concluded by a half hour spent in social converse.

Bro. Burr had not the most distant idea of the purpose of the services of the evening until it was gradually disclosed by the preacher. It was a complete surprise, and an unmistakable token of the affection of the church for their Pastor. God bless them all!

—W. L. H., in A. C. Times.

QUERY.—Will Bro. Barbour or Bro. Cunningham please state why they commence the 430 years at the death of Terah, instead of at the time when God made the promise unto Abraham and confirmed it with an oath, as recorded in Gen. 15, which was some years later? I want to understand the truth.

Obituaries.

LAMPREY. Died in Hampton, N. H., Feb. 12th, 1872, of congestion of the lungs, Morrill M. Lamprey, aged forty-seven years.

Bro. Lamprey sought and found Christ, and had the witness with him during his last sickness. He died in the triumphs of faith, with the hope of coming forth at the resurrection of the just. A text was selected by him for the occasion, expressive of his faith and hope, found in 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8. Service by the writer, assisted by Eld. Lyford.

E. MORRILL.

TIBBITTS. Died at Great Falls, N. H., Feb. 23d, 1872, of lung fever, Ephraim Tibbitts, aged fifty-one years.

He was taken to Ossipee to be buried, where a large company of relatives and friends assembled, in the M. E. church at Moultonville, to pay their last tribute of respect to one so highly esteemed. Bro. T. lived in our faith, and died in peace, hoping for a "land that is fairer than day." He leaves a wife, two children, an aged father, and several brothers and sisters, who, with many friends, deeply mourn his loss.

GEO. W. BROWN.

OBER. Died at Muskegan, Mich., Feb. 11th, 1872, Melissa Eliza, daughter of George and Eliza Lyon, and wife of Geo. Ober, aged twenty-five years, three months, and eighteen days.

Sr. O. was formerly of West Stafford, Ct. She loved the house of prayer, and when able was a frequent visitor there. She was esteemed most highly by those who knew her best. She sleeps in Jesus, leaving a husband, parents, brother and child, with numerous friends to mourn her early death. They sorrow not as those that mourn without hope.

E. A. LAKE.

MORGAN. Died in Northfield Farms, Feb. 1st, 1872, Sr. Lucy Morgan, aged seventy-two years and eleven months.

Sr. M. was a christian, a mother in Israel, and respected by all who knew her. Her house was a home for the weary pilgrims. She sleeps in Jesus, and leaves two sons and a daughter to mourn her loss. Words of comfort by A. Ross, from Psalm 17: 15.

J. B. MORGAN.

CORTTISS. Sr. Sarah E., wife of J. O. Corttiss, Oxford, Mass., fell asleep in Jesus, Feb. 18th, 1872, aged forty-four years.

Sr. Corttiss was a devoted christian for many years. Two and a half years ago she heard of Christ's soon coming, and at once embraced it as her hope, proving at the same time her faith in the resurrection by being buried in the likeness of Christ's death.

The last time I saw her she requested me to use John 12: 25 and 26 at her funeral, also selected the hymns she wished sung. Her charge to me was—"Tell my friends I die expecting my reward when Gabriel's trump shall awake the dead." She leaves a loved companion, an only daughter, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss.

May the grace which was her support in those days of suffering be theirs in this hour of trial.

H. DAVIS.

FOOTE. Died Feb. 29th, 1872, my husband, Jairus N. Foote, aged forty-eight years.

He was a member of the church in Wrightville, Ct., having been baptized there four years ago.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

GREAT BRITAIN.

ANOTHER CABLE.

LONDON, March 7. At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the French Cable Company yesterday it was resolved to lay another cable to America, under the management of the present cable combination.

The Times mentions the exceptionally friendly tone of the American press toward England.

FRANCE.

PARIS, March 6. General Fleury, a prominent and active Imperialist, and at one time Minister to St. Petersburg, has been expelled from France by edict of the government.

REVOLUTIONARY INVASION OF ITALY.

PARIS, March 9. The Berne papers say that Guiseppe Mazzini, at Tirano-in-the-Tyrol, is making preparations for a revolutionary invasion of Italy.

Le Temps to-day says that the authorities of Seville, Spain, anticipate a revolutionary outbreak in the city soon, and measures are being taken to suppress any demonstration made.

L'Univers asserts that a revolutionary plot was recently discovered in Madrid, and several of the ringleaders executed.

GERMANY.

BERLIN, March 6. The donations granted by the Emperor on the anniversary of the entry into Paris have given rise to much comment on account of the largeness of the sums disposed of. It is said that Prince Charles, Generals Moltke, Roon and Manteuffel received each 300,000 thalers; General Goben and Minister Delbruck 200,000 thalers; twelve others 150,000 thalers each; Generals Fabrik and Blumenthal and others were proportionately remembered.

SIGNIFICANT SPEECH BY BISMARCK.

The Upper House of the Diet has under consideration the School Inspection bill. During the debate to-day Prince Bismarck made a significant speech. He expressed his fear of the disloyal influence of the Catholic clergy, and insisted on the clause providing for the introduction of the German language in Polish schools. He assured the conservative members of the Diet that the Government did not intend to break with their party, but it would not submit to pressure.

Shocks of an earthquake were felt this afternoon simultaneously in Dresden, Pirna, Schandau, Chemuity, Bodenbach, Weimar and Rudolstadt. The movement was not violent, but more or less perceptible at intervals for over an hour.

BERLIN, March 8. The Government has discovered that the Pope has secretly appointed the Archbishop of Pasen Primate of Poland. This primacy has long been extinct. When Poland was a kingdom one of the functions of the primate was to act as regent in case of the death or absence of the sovereign.

ITALY.

DEATH OF MAZZINI.

ROME, March 11. The long and severe illness of Guisseppa Mazzini, the Italian radical and political agitator, yesterday ended in his death, at Pisa, Tuscany. His illness had lasted through several years, and was at times the cause of great bodily suffering. He was sixty-three years old. His death causes a profound impression in all circles, and, among the many who have, at different stages of his career, been his political friends or personal followers, the utmost sorrow is manifested. It has frequently been stated, during the past few months, that Mazzini was deliberating a fresh political agitation, but these reports are now denied by those who profess to be familiar with the projects of the deceased.

DOMESTIC.

DELAY OF PACIFIC RAILWAY TRAINS.

Omaha, March 10. No train from the West had arrived at Cheyenne yesterday or to-day. The melting snow in the mountains has caused numerous washouts along the road.

Little Rock, Ark., March 8. A terrific hailstorm passed over Helena to-day and raged for an hour. Hailstones fell of extraordinary size, some measuring three inches in diameter.

THE NATIONAL RELIGIONS TO BE DISCUSSED.

Washington, March 8th. Rev. Dr. Newman, the Chaplain of the Senate, has been invited to appear before the Chief Ambassador and discuss our religions with two of the Japanese, one of whom is a priest and the other a teacher. It happens that Dr. Newman has of late been studying the teachings of Confucius, and the discussion cannot fail to be of interest.

NIPHON AND THE NIPHONESE.—For the first time the metropolis of the United States is honored with the presence of an Embassy, composed of four Embassadors and a large suite. Either one or all of these Embassadors can at any time demand an interview with the President, as they are representatives of the chief ruler of Japan, while Sir Edward Thornton, or any other Minister Plenipotentiary here, can only confer with the Secretary of State. The presence of the Embassy at the Arlington Hotel is shown by the display of a white flag, having in its centre a red ball, which is their national ensign. It is emblematical (one of the attaches informs me) of the rising sun, the name of their nation being expressed in their language by three characters: Dai Nip and Hon, which signify Great Sun Rising. The two last are their name for their nation, Niphon, and they call themselves Niphonese. These names were carried to Europe by the early Dutch navigators in their tongue as Yapon and Yaponese, and then Anglicised when they had crossed the Channel to London into Japan and Japanese. The people thus renamed submit, and use the European nomenclature in their intercourse with outside barbarians, but thy nevertheless speak among themselves of Niphon and Niphonese.—Wash. Cor.

THE COLISEUM BUILDING.—Mr. Jabez Sears, upon whom devolves the work of preparing the general plan of the structure, has been at work upon his drawings for the arches, the peculiar construction of which, as applied to the Coliseum of 1869, insured the most perfect security to the roof and building. The plans for the Coliseum have been changed from the published representation, and it is now definitely fixed that the size of the building shall be 550 feet in length by 350 feet in width. The hight in the clear between the parquette and the centre of the roof will be 140 feet. The roof will be supported by 22 arches of 400 feet span, resting upon piles, from which will also arise the exterior walls of the structure. No posts or pillars will be required to support the roof, and no obstruction will be introduced in the auditorium other than the columns which will be 75 feet wide on the two sides of the building and the end fronting the orchestra and chorus. The end gallery in the auditorium, instead of springing from the floor and rising by an incline as it did in the original Coliseum, will be similar to the side galleries and approached by staircases, thereby increasing the accommodations on the floor of the house. Ten feet of the space beneath the galleries will be thrown into the parquette and a picket fence erected to prevent the crowd of "standee" auditors from pressing upon those who occupy seats, a sensible improvement upon the arrangements of 1869. The space to be devoted to business offices and reception rooms will not be so large as that devoted to similar purposes in the original Coliseum. Still apartments for the reception of the President, the press, the chorus, musicians and for business purposes will be arranged as before.

Externally the building will bear but slight resemblance to to the structure which won world-wide reputation; neither will it be so elaborate in its ornamentation as has been pictured, since it is to be built more for utility than show, and is designed to stand only one year from the commencement of the Jubilee. The walls, which will be 40 feet high, will be of iron or wood, as may be determined, and above this will rise a monitor-shaped roof, pierced by a range of sky-lights for the galleries, and surmounted with slattered monitor for ventilation. There will be two entrances on either side instead of three as before for the admission of the public, and at either end will be erected towers 50 feet square, and 225 feet high. The front tower will project 25 feet from the main line of the building, and the end wall will be framed double to insure great strength and security. The towers will be placed in the centre of each end of the Coliseum, and from each corner will rise smaller towers, making six in all. The further ornamentation of the building will depend upon plans yet to be evolved from the busy brain of the architects. The parquette will contain 50,000 square feet, after reserving 175 feet in the length of the building for the accommodation of the orchestra and chorus, and will thus afford the most spacious floors for dancing ever constructed in this country. The fire engines, men and horses attached to the same, will not be quartered in the building as before, but will be provided for outside. The conveniences for the use of the public will be three times greater than on the former occasion. The entire structure will rest on piles firmly driven, the number of which will be about one thousand. Much of the timber required in the construction of the Coliseum will be cut to order in Maine and shipped from Portland to Boston, while our own market will afford large quantity of seasoned stuff. The estimated cost of the new building is $200,000.—Journal.

THE INTERNATIONALE.—It is reported that the French Government has received some very interesting information from several prefects of departments respecting the propaganda now being carried on by the Internationale in the country districts. Sections are being formed in those districts, correspondents are appointed, and the affiliated members receive cards which enable them to obtain, when traveling in France or abroad, the protection and assistance of the affiliated members of the places where they may find themselves. It is exceedingly probable that very shortly the representatives of the European powers will come to an understanding to propose to their respective governments effectual general measures against the action of the Internationale.—Boston Journal.

In Brief.

——Fast day is appointed April 4th.——The Berlin papers announce that Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, after returning from his present voyage to Egypt and Nubia, will visit the United States.——A double line of telegraph is at present being constructed across the Andes.——Nazareth is now the centre of a prosperous Protestant Mission, established by the Church of England. It is sending out laborers to neighboring villages, where evangelical communities are rapidly springing up.——A gentleman died a few days since in London, at the age of ninety-four, who, had the revolution of 1688 never occurred, would have been the lawful sovereign of England. He was known as Count John Sobieski Stuart, and was the eldest grandson of the young Pretender.——Troops are concentrating in and around Paris as a precaution against trouble on the 18th, the anniversary of the Communist insurrection.——New York city had thirteen hundred deaths by violence last year.——The Pope has declared in favor of the restoration of the Bourbons to the throne of France.——Mr. Spurgeon still retains his hold upon the masses. His church now reports four thousand and eighty-four members.——It took thirty-five years to complete the building of St. Paul's Cathedral; the inside decorations are not completed yet.——The Prince of Servia is about to marry a Russian princess, which some European papers predict as likely to effect the driving of the Turks from Europe.——According to the papers, over thirty-five thousand persons eat their Christmas dinners inside of work-houses in London.——Six hundred bags of mail matter arrived at San Francisco from the east on Tuesday, Feb. 20.—— From certain indications it is said that a new eruption of the famous volcano, Mount Etna, is anticipated ——The Empress Dowager of Brazil freed one hundred and forty slaves upon her plantation, recently sold.——A Catholic priest in this city recently refused a $50 contribution from a parishioner because he was a liquor dealer——Inside the walls of Paris all defacement of the late war is rapidly disappearing; but outside there is plenty of wreck and ruin visible in all directions. St. Cloud is little better than a complete ruin.——The Union Pacific road is reported to have lost $3,000,000 by the blockade, aside from loss on perishable freight. Their yearly receipts are about $5.000,000.——One hundred years ago there were but four newspapers in America.——There are known to be about sixty thousand miles of railroads within the limits of these United States.——Russia sends to this country for large amounts of machinery, and hundreds of locomotives are built for her railways in Philadelphia.——More than a hundred men are employed by the War Department in watching and reporting the weather signs from twenty-four stations.——There are twenty-eight orphan asylums in the State of New York, sheltering nine thousand children.——A New York paper estimates that there are three hundred thousand smokers in that city, averaging two cigars each per day.——Queen Victoria has presented her groom, John Brown, with a gold medal and granted him annuity of £25 in recognition of his promptness in arresting O'Connor last week when he assaulted Her Majesty.——The winter has been an unprecedentedly hard one in Asia, snow and ice having been seen in places where they were never seen before.——The present "legitimate" heir to the French throne is the Count de Montemolin, son of the late Don Carlos, pretender to the Spanish throne.——London is to-day the largest city in the world, far surpassing all those of antiquity. According to Gibbon, the population of ancient Rome in the height of its magnificence, was 1,200,000; the population of Pekin is supposed to be about 2,000,000; that of London is over 3,000,000, one twelfth as many souls as the population of the whole United States.——It is a little late to speak of a thing so long past, but we do not think there was half enough said about the six hundred dollars which were contributed by the Charlestown State prisoners to the general relief fund at Chicago. It showed that the half-effaced image of God was still in the hearts of the condemned men.——A movement is on foot for the organization of a new conservative party, the main object of which is the liberation of French territory from German occupation and the formation of a ministry pledged thereto. All constitutional questions are to be shelved until that end is accomplished.——The French Government has just seized large quantities of gunpowder which were being smuggled into France, simultaneously by the frontiers of Switzerland, Spain, Belgium and Italy.——The Prefect of Rhone says that peace is seriously menaced by the internationals and asks for troops to aid him in the maintenance of order.——Marquis Lorne and Princess Louise have gone on a visit to Paris. Both the marquis and the princess are decidedly in favor of the restoration of the Bonapartist dynasty in France.——The Internationalists of New York are making preparations for a grand mass meeting to be held next Thursday afternoon in Tompkins square, the object of which is to agitate the claims of the working masses to demand of the government work for the unemployed, and to institute branches of industry all over the country.

Notices.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Mass. Second Advent Conference for the choice of officers, will commence in Chelsea, Mass., at the Second Advent Chapel on Heard Street, Tuesday evening, April 2nd, continuing day and evening, and over the following Sunday. The church of Christ worshiping at the Advent Chapel send greeting, and invite their brethren far and near to come up to this meeting and enjoy the freedom of the gospel in praying, singing, preaching, and exhorting one another, and so much the more as you see the day approaching. Let all the Advent churches in the State be represented at this meeting.

C. E. BARNES, Secretary.

We purpose this Conference to take the place of conferences occasionally held in Boston, which have been so profitable and successful in bringing together the lovers of the Savior's return from all parts of the country. We do not intend the business shall interfere more than possible with the time and spirit of worship. We earnestly invite all to come to this feast. We shall do our best to take care of and make you comfortable.

We expect to get a reduction of fares on the railroads coming to the city, which will be published in due time.

J. COUCH, Pastor.

THE THIRD Quarterly Session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held at Goffstown, commencing Thursday evening, March 28th, to hold over Sunday, March 31st. As this is a new place, and as some business of importance is to come before the conference, it is hoped our preaching brethren will make an effort to be present. An invitation is extended to all.

T. W. PIPER.
J. G. SMITH.
C. H. FLETCHER.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN Conference of Eastern Maine and New Brunswick, will convene with the church in Milltown, Me., March 28th, 1872, and continue over the next Lord's day. Come praying, and unite for the salvation of sinners. Brn. A. Ross, J. M. Tozier, and others, are expected to be present to preach the word.

M. W. CORLISS.

THE next quarterly meeting of the A. C. Conference of Northern Pennsylvania and Southern New York, will be held with the church in Hornellsville, N. Y., commencing Friday evening, March 22nd, to continue over the Sunday following.

J. W. TAYLOR, President.
A. H. BRIGGS, Secretary.

THE THIRD Quarterly Meeting for the E. Dist., Wis., will be held with the Church at Cassel's Prairie, Sauk County, Wisconsin, to commence Friday evening, March 22d, and hold over Lord's day. Let there be a general rally at the commencement of the meeting. Come from the closet, and bring a blessing with you.

GEO. THOMPSON.

THE NEW YORK Adv. Chris. Conference will convene with the Church in Lockport, on Thursday evening, for its next quarterly session, March 14th, and continue through the week and over Sunday. All are invited. It is hoped there will be a large attendance, and a full representation by delegates, as there will need be some judicious planning for the next annual meeting in June. Shall there be a campmeeting as last year—where? Pray for this meeting, and come praying. Do not forget the collection.

D. COGSWELL, Pres.
WM. E. BROWN, Sec.

THERE will be a conference meeting in Garland Village (Town house), commencing March 14th, at seven o'clock P. M., to hold over the Sabbath. H. B. Seavey, Jer. Carr, and N. G. Reed are expected to preach the word. Call on Brn. Millet and Field. In behalf of the brethren,

O. G. TRUNDY.

ANY ONE having a copy of the "Bruised Reed," which they are willing to spare, will confer a favor by sending it to F. H. Chamberlain, Oxford, Mass.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.
